Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, when the bill to which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] adverted was under consideration by report from the Committee on Public Lands, to raise the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office from $4,000 to $5,000, I expressed myself in opposition to it. Upon further inquiry, I became satisfied that the position I took was incorrect, and that considering the amount of labor performed, and by comparison with other officers of similar rank and grade, he was entitled to the benefit of the bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

When the occupant of the chair temporarily, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], in the absence of the Vice-President, ruled upon the point of order suggested by the Senator from Iowa, I was inclined to coincide with him and to support its correctness, supposing, as I did then, that the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office had been established in an appropriation bill, and not by general statute. If that were the case, an amendment to increase the item of appropriation or add a new item increasing the aggregate of the bill would plainly have been in order if reported from a standing or select committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations one day previous to its being offered in the Senate.

I was not aware, until my attention was called to the fact by the Senator from Iowa, that the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office was fixed by statute. That being the case, the salary could only be changed by a general law, and that would be by general legislation. The third clause of Rule XVI provides that—

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Therefore it seems, the salary having been fixed by general statute, that an attempt to change that by an amendment to an appropriation bill would be within the terms of the rule "general legislation," and in my opinion, therefore, open to objection, as suggested by the Senator from Iowa.

I sincerely regret to come to this conclusion, because I should, under the information that I have received, were I not forbidden by the rules, very cordially support the amendment proposed to raise the salary from $4,000 to $5,000.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to inquire if the amount appropriated is the amount of salary fixed by the general law.

Mr. INGALLS. It is.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire simply to correct the statement based on the recollection of the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. In the few moments that have been given me for examination, I find that every one of the officers who are of like grade to the Commissioner of the General Land Office has had his salary raised upon appropriation bills. By the Revised Statutes the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions is fixed at $4,000 a year. While General Black, I think, was the incumbent of that office his salary was raised to either $4,500 or $5,000 a year, and so it stands upon this appropriation bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations. So the committee stands in the position, if this amendment be in violation of the rules of the Senate, of violating the rule as to that officer and changing the existing statute by an appropriation bill that it reports and advocates on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say, if the Senator will allow me—

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly I yield.

Mr. ALLISON. The salary of the Commissioner of Pensions is in the exact attitude of the proposed amendment now. That was put on an appropriation bill two or three years ago over the head of the Committee on Appropriations in this Chamber.

Mr. MANDERSON. Still it stands as changing the existing law for the coming fiscal year by the report of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MANDERSON. The fact that the Senate at that time violated the rules of the Senate is no precedent for the Committee on Appropriations that it should violate the rule by again reporting an increase.

Mr. ALLISON. It is, under the law.

Mr. MANDERSON. Now, I turn to the Commissioner of Patents, and I find that his salary is fixed by general statute at $4,500 a year, and by this bill the salary of the Commissioner of Patents is raised to $5,000 for the coming fiscal year.

So we have abundant precedent for this violation of the rule, if it be a violation. But it seems to me, with all deference, that this is not a violation of the rules of the Senate. It is a fixing of the compensation of this officer for the coming year, and I submit that it is within the right of Congress to change, increase, or diminish his compensation during the coming fiscal year. It is a matter of increase of appropriation, and not general legislation, within the meaning of the rules.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order having been ruled upon by the previous occupant of the chair, the present occupant submits the question raised by the Senator from Iowa to the Senate for decision. Is the amendment in order?

Mr. PADDOCK. Would it not be more appropriate to put to the Senate the question whether the ruling of the preceding occupant of the Chair shall stand?

Mr. MANDERSON. No; it is not an appeal.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Is the amendment in order?

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I certainly think that this amendment is not in order under our rules. The rule has been read by the Senator from Kansas, and the amendment is certainly objectionable under that rule.

I fear that Senators do not appreciate the delicate position in which the Committee on Appropriations is so often placed in regard to this question of the increase of salaries. Year by year we are besought, besieged by the executive officers and their friends, by Representatives and by brother Senators, to increase this salary and that salary; and, unfortunately for the tax-payers, we have never been solicited to reduce any salary, whatever the amount might be; it is always an increase that is desired.

At the present session there is scarcely a bureau here in the Departments, where we have not been importuned in some way—I mean solicited or asked—to increase the salary, if not of the head of the bureau, of some official of that bureau. We have done the very best we could in maintaining the salaries at the amounts heretofore fixed by law or by the preceding appropriation acts.

I have some knowledge of the duties of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and I have some knowledge also of the manner in which the present incumbent of that office has performed his duties. It gives me very great pleasure to say that in my judgment the present incumbent, Judge Groff, is doing the very best he can. I have for the present, at least, but one criticism to submit, and that is a criticism which I shall submit under a different branch of the bill, in regard to the inefficient and worthless employes in his office, who are dead timber there, who are doing no equivalent for their salaries and ought to be discharged peremptorily and summarily. But that is not the only office where incompetent clerks are, and I presume that Judge Groff is in the same position with a great many others, and is unable to have his own way in regard to that matter.

My good friend from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] says the civil service prevents it. I desire now to say distinctly that not one solitary human being is kept in office in any shape, manner, or form by the civil-service law. The civil-service law has nothing to do with retention in office, and those who want to retain incompetent persons in office can not shield themselves behind the civil-service law. The civil-service law guards the entrance to office, the front door, and not the back door. The back door is always open, and it ought to be kept open a great deal more than it is, and there ought to be a great many more exits added. The work of the Departments could be brought up a great deal better.

I appreciate, I say, that Judge Groff is doing the very best he can; that he is an efficient officer, and relatively with other officers his salary is not adequate to the labor and the responsibility of his office.

Mr. PADDOCK. Will the Senator allow me one moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think if the Senator will investigate he will find that the present Commissioner, during the brief period in which he has been in charge of the General Land Office, has done more thorough and good weeding out than any man ever did in the same length of time who was at the head of the bureau. He has done all he could under the civil-service circumstances in which he has been placed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not discussing that. I want simply to say in regard to the General Land Office that it never has been run systematically and efficiently since 1833, I can not help in whose Administration or under whose control that office has been. There was a record-book prepared in that office in which the title to every tract of land disposed of by the General Government was to be traced and entered, so that you could go to that one book and there see the subdivision of the land, when disposed of, at what price, in what manner, to whom, whether it was confirmed or not, the date of the issue of the patent, to whom the patent was delivered, and where it was recorded, and in that one book you could have the complete history of every piece of the public domain. The entries in that book have not been filled up since 1853. The blanks are there, but they have never been filled. So the office has not been managed in a business way. After I had investigated into the methods of business in 1887 my judgment, deliberately made, without any prejudice or passion in the matter, was that the only word that would describe the condition of the business of the General Land Office was chaos.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Has the Senator made any investigation since the present Commissioner came in with reference to the manner in which the office is conducted?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then it is hardly fair, I suggest to the Senator, to say that the office has not been conducted in a proper business way since 1833.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am perfectly satisfied as to the entries, that there has been no effort to bring all the mass of past entries up to this time, so that they will have one record, where the entire history of the public lands can be traced.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to assure the Senator that the office is being better administered now than it has been for a good many years.

Mr. COCKRELL. That may be. I am not disputing that. I am not raising that question. But the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the number of incompetents he has under him and the force he has, can not even dispose of the business on hand, much less undertake to bring up arrears of business for thirty or forty years. I am not speaking of this in the way of criticism of the present Commissioner, for I have no doubt he is doing very well.

Mr. BLAIR. Why should the Senator make this wholesale charge against the employes of the bureau?

Mr. COCKRELL. Simply because it is true; that is all.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not believe it is true. I think the Senator is wrong.

Mr. COCKRELL. I can not help what the Senator from New Hampshire thinks.

Mr. BLAIR. I know something about those employes as well as the Senator from Missouri. There may be incompetent persons among them, but I venture to say that there is not an equal body of men in the employ of the Government who, as a whole, render better service than those engaged in the Land Office. While it may be proper to make charges by saying that there is incompetency here and there, so there is in the church, so there is in society generally, and there were failures in heaven even.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know how the Senator has any right to assert the last proposition, that there have been failures in heaven.

Mr. BLAIR. I do it on high authority.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know when the Senator came from there or when he was there.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not pretend to know it.

Mr. PADDOCK. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. COCKRELL. Wait one moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri declines to yield.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from New Hampshire is simply speaking without any authority.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not admit that; but when the Senator makes an absolutely incorrect charge against an entire force under this Government, and of the kind he does, for incompetency, and says that they ought to be discharged—

Mr. COCKRELL. When did I make any charge against the entire force?

Mr. BLAIR. A few moments ago.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all.

Mr. BLAIR. Without a single exception.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; I said there were inefficient, incompetent people there.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know what the Senator may have said at the very last, since being interrupted, but I refer to his first assertion. I noted it, and I asked him the question if he meant the whole of it, and he made no response; perhaps he did not hear me. But as to the Land Office as an office, I venture to say that it is as well and as honestly and as competently administered as any bureau of the Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I read now a letter addressed by the Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 28, 1900.

Sir: Referring to a verbal inquiry made on the 27th inst. by one of your committee as to the efficiency of the clerical force of the General Land Office, I have the honor to state that the clerical force of this office embraces about forty clerks and copyists whose efficiency may be said to be below the average of others in their respective grades. Four of these receive annual salaries of $600; seven, $500; four, $1,000; five, $1,200; eleven, $1,400; eight, $1,600; and one, $1,800.

A few of these have been long in the service, and their partial lack of efficiency is due to infirmity and old age. None are entirely worthless. It may be proper to add that the office contains a still larger number of clerks who are above the average of their respective grades in efficiency and who merit increased compensation.

Very respectfully,

GEO. REDWAY, Acting Commissioner.

THE CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. BLAIR. How many clerks are there in that office?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not remember exactly the number now.

Mr. BLAIR. There are more than twice the number that are there mentioned, I am very confident—about three times the number.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, as a matter of course, I have forgotten the exact number, but there are more than twice the number, or three times, probably four times the number mentioned here.

Mr. BLAIR. I had occasion to know something of that office myself some years ago. I do not remember the number of employes, but it is very much larger than the forty which the Senator's document says are below the average of the others. Now, taking those who are above the general average, perhaps forty could well be selected who are below the general average. It would be so anywhere else, at all events.

Mr. COCKRELL. I only spoke of this incidentally. I am not holding the present Commissioner responsible for the retention of this inefficient force. It exists there. It has been there for years. It existed under a preceding Republican Administration, it continued largely under a Democratic Administration, and it exists to-day.

Mr. REAGAN. It ought to be stated that if it was continued under a Democratic Administration it was continued against the wishes and desires of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. He did not wish it, and would have turned them out if he could have done so.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know whether he would have turned them out or not. I never heard of any effort that was made to turn them out.

Mr. REAGAN. I know what he told me himself.

Mr. COCKRELL. That may be. I never inquired on that point. I know of one instance—

Mr. PADDOCK. Will the Senator allow me to make a statement as to the labor performed there by the inefficient force of which he speaks?

Mr. COCKRELL. After I get through, the Senator from Nebraska will have plenty of time.

Mr. PADDOCK. It will take but a moment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

Mr. PADDOCK. When the present Commissioner took the office in September last there were 292,886 final entries pending and awaiting action. There are now pending 232,198 entries, showing a net gain of 60,688 entries disposed of, in addition to keeping up with the current business of the office. If a better record than that can be shown in any other bureau of the Government I should like to have the Senator point it out.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not worth while to talk about a better record in any one bureau of the Government. I can point the Senator to one bureau where the business was cleaned up inside of sixty days, when there were over forty thousand cases pending there, and the business has been since disposed of on the day it is received, and that is in the pension and record division of the War Department.

I am not criticizing the present Commissioner of the General Land Office, because, as I have said, I believe he is doing the very best he can, and I believe relatively with others the salary ought to be higher than it is—relatively with others—but I simply state, as a matter of fact, the condition of the business there, and the condition it had been in ever since 1833, and the inefficiency of the force, which has existed there for some time.

Mr. President, I simply desire to say that we can not increase all these salaries. The Commissioners in that office for a good many years have been receiving this salary. I believe myself there ought to be a readjustment of the salaries of a good many of the executive officers so as to place them nearer on an equality. If we increase the salary of the officer in this case, there is my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], who stands ready to have the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs placed on an equality, and then everybody else whose friend is not receiving $5,000 a year must come in, and they must be placed upon an equality.

It is not worth while to throw up to us the salary of the Director of the Geological Survey at $6,000. There it is. It is in the law. If it is to be amended or changed, let it be so amended or changed without throwing that duty upon the Committee on Appropriations.

I think that this amendment is amenable to the point of order which has been made. Under ordinary circumstances, if we were in a condition to equalize these salaries and this was not an appropriation bill, I should support an increase of the salary of this office, believing that the officer himself is entitled to it and believing that the office, with its duties and responsibilities, relatively to the other offices which have been named, ought to have a higher salary than $4,000.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to make one inquiry. Has any Senator ever known an instance where a hardship in the case of the salary of any particular officer was remedied by the passage of a bill applying to that office alone? I have known several to be introduced, but I never knew the pay of a single officer to be increased otherwise than upon an appropriation bill. I venture to say that there never will be, in the experience of any Senator, a specific bill passed to increase the salary of this or any other one officer. You do not get general legislation of that kind through at all. If this man's salary goes up we shall have to do it this way, as all other similar grievances have been remedied hitherto.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Is the amendment in order?

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 20, noes 17; no quorum voting.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the state of the vote?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No quorum has voted. The roll will be called.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us have the yeas and nays, to avoid calling the roll.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANDERSON. I simply desire to call the attention of the Senate to Rule XVI. It seems to me that, on deliberation, Senators will be compelled to conclude that the proposed amendment is not subject to this point of order. In the first place there is a uniform precedent of the Senate in this direction, as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], according to which the salary of no one of these numerous executive officers—and nearly all of them have been raised that are of this grade—has ever been raised by an amendment to the general statutes, but in every instance, as in the case, I think, of the Director of the Geological Survey, but certainly in the cases of the Commissioner of Pensions, the Commissioner of Patents, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the raise of salary has been upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. DAWES. Have those that the Senator has just enumerated been raised at all or were the offices created with that salary?

Mr. MANDERSON. They have been raised from the amount fixed in the general statute by legislation, if it be such, upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. DAWES. The Director of the Geological Survey?

Mr. MANDERSON. I so understand.

Mr. DAWES. I think the salary of that office was fixed when it was created. I may be mistaken.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think it was created at all.

Mr. DAWES. When the office was created the salary was fixed, whether it was created by a separate statute or by putting an amendment into an appropriation bill, as was the habit in former years, for the whole Army was reorganized and the salaries of the Army were readjusted in an appropriation bill. It is true that it has been the habit to raise salaries in appropriation bills, but it occurred to me that, in some of the instances the Senator referred to, the salary was attached to the office when it was created. I may be mistaken.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not know how that may be as to the Director of the Geological Survey. As to that official I may be mistaken.

Mr. HISCOCK. I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question, if the Senator from Nebraska will allow me; and that is, Does the Committee on Appropriations hold that the increase of a salary for a current year has the effect to amend, modify, change, or repeal the law fixing the salary?

Mr. DAWES. It will stand as the law for that year.

Mr. HISCOCK. Has it not been the custom of the Committee on Appropriations to base the salaries for the next fiscal year on those of the current fiscal year without attempting to change them, and then in all subsequent years after that to maintain them at the amount fixed in that appropriation?

Mr. DAWES. It has been the custom to run along from year to year, and when a salary once gets raised it stays raised.

Mr. HISCOCK. I inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if that custom is not a violation of the rule that is invoked here.

Mr. ALLISON. What is that?

Mr. HISCOCK. My question is this: In an appropriation for a fiscal year if a salary is increased, that is, if it is an appropriation of so much money to pay the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $4,000 or $5,000, as I understand it the effect of that appropriation is only to repeal the statute pro tanto, for that year for which you appropriate.

Mr. DAWES. So I understand.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, then, by what authority in a subsequent appropriation bill do you continue to appropriate that increased amount?

Mr. ALLISON. By the same authority that we continue to appropriate for the decreased amount. There are probably two hundred salaries in this bill that are below the statutory requirement.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let me ask the Senator this question: It is always, I understand, within the rule to appropriate a less amount than is required to pay an indebtedness, but there is an entirely different rule that applies when you proceed to appropriate a larger amount than is necessary to pay an indebtedness.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from New York will point out where we have violated any rule of the Senate in making an amendment, I shall be glad myself to concede the point.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am not talking about a concession of the point. I am asking, on the point that was suggested by the Senator from Nebraska, that this appropriation bill contains violations of the rule which is invoked here to keep out this amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON. I submit they are not violations of the rule, although that construction is attempted to be forced. I find, upon an investigation kindly made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], that the salary of the Director of the Geological Survey was originally fixed in an appropriation bill and has remained at the amount fixed originally; but, as to the other officials I have referred to, in every instance their salaries have been raised from those fixed in the general statute by an appropriation bill, and the most notable case is that where the salary of the President of the United States, fixed, as I believe by general statute, was doubled upon an appropriation bill, and that sum has been appropriated annually ever since for the pay of the President.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to ask him if the fixing of official salaries is not the subject of general legislation?

Mr. MANDERSON. No, I do not think it is, within the meaning of the Senate rules.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the test. If it be the subject of general legislation, then, of course, it is prohibited by the third clause of Rule XVI upon this bill. If it is not general legislation, then that clause does not affect it. I think myself this is a subject of general legislation.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not think it is within the provisions of Rule XVI. I will come to that in one moment.

I am simply now trying to show the numerous precedents that Congress has established in the direction of this proposed change in the salary of this officer. They are numerous and beyond question, and I suggest, as I submitted before, that the Committee on Appropriations has itself repeatedly and again upon this very bill done the same thing. By the confession of the chairman there are some two hundred instances in this bill where salaries have been either raised or lowered.

Mr. ALLISON. I say two hundred instances where they have been reduced, not in this bill, but in former bills, below the statutory compensation.

Mr. MANDERSON. Well, in other appropriation bills besides this, which, it seems to me, is the very principle I am advocating, and that is, that the Committee on Appropriations have thought it within their power and within the power of the Senate of the United States to change salaries by annual appropriation bills, and either to raise or to lower them above or below the figure established by general law.

Now, Mr. President, one word as to Rule XVI. It seems to me that this case comes rather under section 2 of this rule, which reads:

2. All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill.

That, I think, is this case. We propose to increase the appropriation for the pay of this officer for the next fiscal year from $4,000 to $5,000. Has that proposition gone through the process prescribed by Rule XVI? Has it been referred to a regular committee of the Senate? I understand that this amendment was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and that committee reported in favor of the change and within the time limited by this rule, and then had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, I submit to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that in no instance has he known a Presiding Officer of this body to rule otherwise than as suggested. I do not think the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] when he occupied the position of Presiding Officer, or the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], or the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] ever ruled that a change of salary, either lowering it or raising it, has been in the nature of general legislation and came within this language of section 3 of Rule XVI:

3. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received.

As suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], while there have been no adverse rulings by any Presiding Officer of this body, in no instance where the question has been presented for the decision of the Senate by the Presiding Officer has it been held that we were limited in this regard, and that we could not change the appropriation for the fiscal year the expenditures of which were the subject-matter of the bill.

One word, Mr. President, in response to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. I do not understand from him that he holds the present head of the General Land Office as responsible for any of the alleged inefficiencies in the clerical force of that office?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly not.

Mr. MANDERSON. As to whether there is inefficiency there or not, I do not know. I simply know that the head of that office is as hard-worked a man as there is in the employ of this Government. I know that he brings to the performance of his duties an ability of such character that it has challenged the respect, and the admiration even, of those who differ with him in politics. I submit that no man goes there to transact his business with the Government who does not come away with increased respect for the efficiency and the ability of this man. He works early and late. You compare his work with that of those officers who are better paid, the Railroad Commissioner, for instance. I hardly know what the duties of that office are, but it seems to me an office that is rather ornamental than useful, and yet he is paid higher than this most important officer—

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I would say there is about as much difference between the duties of the Commissioner of Railroads and those of the Commissioner of the General Land Office as there is between the duties of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and those of the head of one of his divisions, just about.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think that would be about a parallel.

Mr. President, on this question of high salaries, I do not believe that the people of the United States desire that their public servants shall be poorly paid. Poor pay means poor work; it means inefficient service; and certainly the people of this country do not desire that. At this session of Congress we have passed through both Houses what is known as the customs administrative bill. We created by that bill nine appraisers, I think they are called, with salaries of $7,000 each per annum, and I venture the assertion that when that board gets under full headway, and in the performance of the duties that will devolve upon it, no man of the board will have one-half of the labor incident to his well paid office that the Commissioner of the General Land Office has to-day.

I think it is no more than fair, as Congress has seen fit to raise the salaries of these other heads of bureaus, that this efficient and hard-worked officer should receive the compensation that his ability and his labor certainly entitle him to.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator spoke about the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and about his salary being raised by an appropriation bill. I find that by this bill only $4,000 is appropriated for the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I think that is the amount which the law specifies. Now, why should not the Commissioner of Indian Affairs receive $5,000 as well as the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. MANDERSON. I will answer that in a word. It is because I do not think the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs has one-half the labor, one-half the responsibility, and does not require as high a degree of professional talent as that of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

BOUNDARIES OF UNCOMPAGNEE RESERVATION—VETO MESSAGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 4 o'clock has arrived, the hour set apart for memorial exercises. The Chair will first lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I return without my approval the bill (S. 1742) to change the boundaries of the Uncompagnee reservation.

This bill proposes to separate from the Ute Indian reservation in Utah and restore to the public domain two ranges of townships along the east side of the reservation and bordering the Colorado State line. It is said that these lands are wholly worthless to the Indians for cultivation or for grazing purposes, and it must follow, I think, that they are equally worthless for such purposes to white men.

The object, then, of this legislation is to be sought, not in any public demand for these lands for the use of settlers—for if they are susceptible of that use the Indians have a clear equity to take allotments upon them—but in that part of the bill which confirms the mineral entries, or entries for mineral uses, which have been unlawfully made "or attempted to be made on said lands." It is evidently a private and not a public end that is to be promoted. It does not follow, of course, that this private end may not be wholly meritorious and the relief sought on behalf of these persons altogether just and proper. The facts, as I am advised, are that upon these lands there are veins or beds of asphaltum or gilsonite, supposed to be of very great value.

Entries have been made in that vicinity, but upon public lands, which lands have been resold for very large amounts. It is not important, perhaps, that the United States should, in parting with these lands, realize their value, but it is essential, I think, that favoritism should have no part in connection with the sales. The bill confirms all attempted entries of these mineral lands at the price of $30 per acre (a price that is suggestive of something unusual) without requiring evidence of the expenditure of any money upon the claim or even proof that the claimant was the discoverer of the deposits.

The bill requires "good faith," but it will be next to impossible for the officers of the Interior Department to show actual knowledge on the part of the claimant of the lines of the reservation. The case will practically be, as to this matter, in the hands of the claimant. But why should good faith, at the moment of attempting the entry, without any requirement of expenditure, and followed, it may be within twenty-four hours, by actual notice that he was upon a reservation, give an advantage in the sale of these lands that may represent a very large sum of money?

In the second place, I do not think it wise without notice even to the Indians to segregate these lands from their reservation. It is true, I think, that they hold these lands by an Executive order, with a contract right to take allotments upon them, and that the lands in question are not likely to be sought as an allotment by any Indian. But the Indians have been placed on this reservation and its boundaries explained to them, and to take these lands in this manner is calculated to excite their distrust and fears and possibly to create serious trouble.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MARRIAGE, June 19, 1890.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that the message be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message will be so referred and printed, in the absence of objection.

RECIPROCITY TREATIES WITH THE LATIN-AMERICAN STATES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for your information a letter from the Secretary of State, inclosing a report of the International American Conference, which recommends that reciprocal commercial treaties be entered into between the United States and the several other Republics of this hemisphere.

It has been so often and so persistently stated that our tariff laws offered an insurmountable barrier to a large exchange of products with the Latin-American nations that I deem it proper to call especial attention to the fact that more than 87 per cent. of the products of those nations sent to our ports are now admitted free. If sugar is placed upon the free-list, practically every important article exported from those states will be given untaxed access to our markets, except wool. The real difficulty in the way of negotiating profitable reciprocity treaties is that we have given freely so much that would have had value in the mutual concessions which such treaties imply. I can not doubt, however, that the present advantages which the products of these near and friendly states enjoy in our markets—though they are not by law exclusive—will, with other considerations, favorably dispose them to adopt such measures, by treaty or otherwise, as will tend to equalize and greatly enlarge our mutual exchanges.

It will certainly be time enough for us to consider whether we must cheapen the cost of production by cheapening labor in order to gain access to the South American markets when we have fairly tried the effect of established and reliable steam communication and of convenient methods of money exchanges. There can be no doubt, I think, that, with these facilities well established and with a rebate of duties upon imported raw materials used in the manufacture of goods for export, our merchants will be able to compete in the ports of the Latin-American nations with those of any other country.

If, after the Congress shall have acted upon pending tariff legislation, it shall appear that, under the general treaty-making power or under any special powers given by law, our trade with the States represented in the conference can be enlarged upon a basis of mutual advantage, it will be promptly done.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 19, 1890.

Mr. HALE. Is there a report accompanying that message?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a letter from the Secretary of State.

Mr. HALE. I ask that that be not read here, but printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter of the Secretary of State will be printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRYE. What reference is made of the papers?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the pleasure of the Senate as to the reference of the message and the accompanying papers?

Mr. HALE. They should lie upon the table, should they not, as the tariff bill has been reported?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message of the President and the letter of the Secretary of State will be printed in the RECORD and also as a document, and lie on the table, if there be no objection.

The letter of the Secretary of State is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 4, 1890.

To the President:

I beg leave to submit herewith the report upon "Customs Union" adopted by the International American Conference.

The act of Congress, approved May 24, 1890, authorizing the President to invite delegates to this conference named, as one of the topics to be considered, "Measures toward the formation of an American Customs Union, under which the trade of the American nations shall, so far as possible and profitable, be promoted."

The committee of the conference to which this topic was referred interpreted the term "Customs Union" to mean an association or agreement among the several American nations for a free interchange of domestic products, a common and uniform system of tariff laws, and an equitable division of the customs dues collected under them.

Such a proposition was at once pronounced impracticable. Its adoption would require a complete revision of the tariff laws of all the eighteen nations, and most, if not all, of our sister republics are largely, if not entirely, dependent upon the collection of customs dues for the revenue to sustain their Governments. But the conference declared that partial reciprocity between the American Republics was not only practicable, but "must necessarily increase the trade and the development of the material resources of the countries adopting that system, and it would in all probability bring about as favorable results as those obtained by free trade among the different States of this Union."

The conference recommended, therefore, that the several Governments represented negotiate reciprocity treaties "upon such a basis as would be acceptable in each case, taking into consideration the special situations, conditions, and interests of each country, and with a view to promote their common welfare."

The delegates from Chili and the Argentine Republic did not concur in these recommendations, for the reason that the attitude of our Congress at that time was not such as to encourage them to expect favorable responses from the United States in return for concessions which their Government might offer. They had come here with an expectation that our Government and people desired to make whatever concessions were necessary and possible to increase the trade between the United States and the two countries named. The President of the Argentine Republic, in communicating to his Congress the appointment of delegates to the International Conference, said:

"The Argentine Republic feels the liveliest interest in the subject, and hopes that its commercial relations with the United States may find some practical solution of the question of the interchange of products between the two countries, considering that this is the most efficacious way of strengthening the ties which bind this country with that grand Republic whose institutions serve us as a model."

It was therefore unfortunate that the Argentine delegates, shortly after their arrival in Washington, in search of reciprocal trade, should have read in the daily press that propositions were pending in our Congress to impose a heavy duty upon Argentine hides, which for many years had been upon the free-list, and to increase the duty on Argentine wool. Since the adoption of the recommendations of the conference, which I herewith inclose, hides have been restored to the free-list, but the duty upon carpet wool remains, and, as the Argentine delegates declared, represents the only concession we have to offer them in exchange for the removal of duties upon our peculiar products.

Only those who have given the subject careful study realize the magnitude of the commerce of these sister nations. In 1888 the combined imports of Chili and the Argentine Republic reached the enormous sum of $233,127,696. The statistics of Chilean commerce for 1890 have not yet been received, but the imports of the Argentine Republic for that year were $143,000,000. These imports consisted in the greater part of articles that could have been furnished by the manufacturers of the United States, yet in 1888, of the total of $233,000,000 imports, we contributed but $13,000,000; while England contributed $90,000,000; Germany, $43,000,000; and France, $34,000,000.

With our extraordinary increase in population and even more extraordinary increase in material wealth, our progress in trade with South America has been strangely hindered and limited.

In 1888 our total exports to all the world were $975,737,000, of which $53,197,000 went to Spanish America, 14 per cent.

In 1888 our exports to all the world were $742,368,000, an increase of 100 per cent., while but $69,273,000 went to Spanish America, little more than 9 per cent.; and the greatest gain (nine millions) has been noticed during the last two years.

It was the unanimous judgment of the delegates that our exports to these countries and to the other Republics could be increased to a great degree by the negotiation of such treaties as are recommended by the conference. The practical, every-day experience of our merchants engaged in the trade demonstrates beyond a question that in all classes of merchandise which we have long and successfully produced for export they are able to compete with their European rivals in quality and in price; and the reiterated statement that our Latin-American neighbors do not buy of us because we do not buy of them or because we tax their products has been annually contradicted by the statistics of our commerce for a quarter of a century. The lack of means for reaching their markets has been the chief obstacle in the way of increased exports. The carrying trade has been controlled by European merchants who have forbidden an exchange of commodities. The merchandise we sell in South America is carried there in American ships or foreign ships chartered by American commission houses. The merchandise we buy in South America is brought to us in European vessels that never take return cargoes, but sail for Liverpool, Havre, Bremen, or Hamburg with wheat, corn, and cotton. There they load again with manufactured goods for the South American markets, and continue their triangular voyages, paying for the food they are compelled to buy of us with the proceeds of the sale of their manufactures in markets that we could and would supply if we controlled the carrying trade.

France taxes imports as we do, and in 1880 her merchants suffered, as ours do now, from the lack of transportation facilities with the Argentine Republic. Under liberal encouragement from the Government direct and regular steamship lines were established between Havre and Buenos Ayres, and, as a direct and natural result, her exports increased from $8,292,872 in 1880 to $22,996,000 in 1888.

The experience of Germany furnishes an even more striking example. In 1880 the exports from Germany to the Argentine Republic were only $3,365,182. In 1888 they were $13,310,000. "This result," writes Mr. Baker, our most useful and intelligent consul at Buenos Ayres, "is due, first, to the establishment of quick and regular steam communication between the two countries; second, to the establishment of branch houses by German merchants and manufacturers; and, third, to the opening of a German-Argentine bank to facilitate exchange."

There is no direct steamship communication whatever between the United States and the Argentine Republic and there are no direct banking facilities. The International American Conference has earnestly recommended the establishment of both; but reciprocal exchanges of tariff concessions will be equally effective in stimulating commerce and in increasing the export of the products of which we have the largest surplus, not only to the progressive republic named, but to all the other American nations.

The conference believed that, while great profit would come to all the countries if reciprocity treaties should be adopted, the United States would be by far the greatest gainer. Nearly all the articles we export to our neighbors are subjected to heavy customs taxes; so heavy, in many cases, as to prohibit their consumption by the masses of the people. On the other hand, more than 87 per cent. of our imports from Latin America are admitted free, leaving but 12 per cent. upon which duties may still be removed. But, mindful of the fact that the United States has, from time to time, removed the duties from coffee, cocoa, India rubber, hides, cinchona bark, dye and cabinet woods, and other Latin-American products, our Government may confidently ask the concessions suggested.

The increased exports would be drawn alike from our farms, our factories, and our forests. None of the Latin-American countries produce building lumber; the most of them are dependent upon foreign markets for their breadstuffs and provisions; and in few is there any opportunity or inclination for mechanical industry.

The effect of such reciprocity would be felt in every portion of the land. Not long ago the Brazilian Mail Steam-Ship Company took the trouble to trace to its origin every article that composed the cargo carried by one of its steamers to Rio de Janeiro, and the investigation disclosed the fact that thirty-six States and Territories contributed to the total, as follows:

New York.....	$74,546.00	North Carolina.....	$2,647.00
Vermont.....	95.00	Maryland.....	2,359.00
Delaware.....	20,908.00	Mississippi.....	2,066.00
Illinois.....	19,331.47	Louisiana.....	3,111.00
New Jersey.....	17,054.40	Wyoming.....	1,800.00
Pennsylvania.....	48,065.00	Oregon.....	1,183.00
Connecticut.....	11,874.00	Tennessee.....	1,150.00
Kansas.....	11,332.00	Iowa.....	807.00
Indiana.....	9,098.00	South Carolina.....	887.00
Massachusetts.....	7,190.00	Kentucky.....	781.00
Ohio.....	6,230.00	Wisconsin.....	576.00
New Hampshire.....	6,035.00	California.....	239.00
Missouri.....	5,773.00	Dakota.....	220.00
Georgia.....	5,096.00	Texas.....	162.00
Rhode Island.....	4,020.00	Nebraska.....	125.00
Michigan.....	3,732.00	Alabama.....	56.00
Virginia.....	3,704.54	Florida.....	40.00
Maine.....	2,765.00
Minnesota.....	2,668.00
		Total.....	301,417.41

The 12 per cent. of our imports from Latin America upon which duties are still assessed consists only of raw sugar and the coarse grades of wool used in the manufacture of carpets.

The sugar-growing nations comprise four-fifths, or forty millions, of Latin America; but with geographical conditions against them their free labor can not successfully compete with the cooly labor of the European colonies. A slight discrimination in their favor would greatly stimulate their agricultural interests, enlarge their purchasing power, and tend to promote friendly sentiments and intercourse.

The wool-growing nations are Chili, Uruguay, and the Argentine Republic, and from them our manufacturers of carpets receive a great portion of their supply. It was most strongly urged by the delegates who had carefully studied this subject that the free admission of coarse wools from these countries could not prove injurious to the wool-growers of the United States, because the greater profit derived by them from the higher grades discourages, if it does not actually prohibit, their production. On the contrary they maintained that the free importation of the coarse wool would result in a large reduction in the cost of the cheaper grades of carpets and enable the manufacturers of the United States to secure an enormous export trade in these fabrics. It was also suggested that the use of the coarse wools for the purpose of adulteration in the manufacture of clothing might be prevented by requiring that imports withdrawn for the manufacture of carpets should be so designated to exempt them from customs dues, and the existing duty retained upon those used for other purposes.

The wool-growers of the Argentine Republic protest against what they consider a serious discrimination against their products in the tariff laws of the United States, which impose a duty upon the gross weight instead of the value of the article.

The Argentine wools are much heavier in grease and dirt than those from Australia and New Zealand, which is said to be due to unavoidable climatic conditions, and sell at a lower price. But the imports from the three countries are subject to the same duty. This fact was very strongly urged, to the end that at least equal advantages should be given to the products of a friendly country with which we are endeavoring to build up a trade.

The Argentines desire the free admission of their sugar to the ports of this country, with the understanding that our peculiar products shall, in turn, be admitted free into their ports. At present, by reason of the high duties levied by them, the chief articles of our production are beyond the purchasing power of the great mass of the people in those countries, and are luxuries which only the wealthy can enjoy.

Excepting raw cotton, our four largest exports during the last fiscal year were breadstuffs, provisions, refined petroleum, and lumber.

The following statement shows the total exports of each of said articles in 1899, and the proportion exported to Latin America:

Articles.	Total exports.	Exported to Latin America.
Breadstuffs.....	$123,570,423	$5,123,523
Provisions.....	104,122,328	2,507,375
Refined petroleum.....	44,830,424	2,943,149
Wood and lumber.....	26,907,161	5,039,886

These figures should be closely studied. It would be difficult to understand, but for the explanations given in the conference, why, out of the three hundred millions of staples exported from this country only fifteen millions should be consumed in all Latin America, with its population of 50,000,000 of people, when the United States is the only source of supply for those articles which are regarded by us as the necessities of life.

The foreign delegates all agreed that this proportion could be increased many fold by extending to their people the ability to purchase, and the ability to purchase rests, in their opinion, upon reciprocal concessions.

Attached hereto is a statement showing the duties charged by the South American countries of the largest commerce upon the articles which they import chiefly from the United States, and also a statement showing the meager amounts of our peculiar exportable products shipped to the several Latin American states. By a comparison of these statements the effect of the removal of the duties upon these articles by the countries of Latin America will at once be apparent.

Fifteen of the seventeen Republics with which we have been in conference have indicated, by the votes of their representatives in the International American Conference and by other methods which it is not necessary to define, their desire to enter upon reciprocal commercial relations with the United States; the remaining two express equal willingness could they be assured that their advances would be favorably considered.

To escape the delay and uncertainty of treaties it has been suggested that a practicable and prompt mode of testing the question was to submit an amendment to the pending tariff bill, authorizing the President to declare the ports of the United States free to all the products of any nation of the American hemisphere upon which no export duties are imposed whenever and so long as such nation shall admit to its ports, free of all national, provincial (state), municipal, and other taxes, our flour, corn meal, and other breadstuffs, preserved meats, fish, vegetables, and fruits, cotton-seed oil, rice, and other provisions, including all articles of food, lumber, furniture, and all other articles of wood, agricultural implements and machinery, mining and mechanical machinery, structural steel and iron, steel rails, locomotives, railway cars and supplies, street-cars, and refined petroleum. I mention these particular articles because they have been most frequently referred to as those with which a valuable exchange could be readily effected. The list could no doubt be profitably enlarged by a careful investigation of the needs and advantage of both the home and foreign markets.

The opinion was general among the foreign delegates that the legislation herein referred to would lead to the opening of new and profitable markets for the products of which we have so large a surplus, and thus invigorate every branch of agriculture and mechanical industry. Of course the exchanges involved in these propositions would be rendered impossible if Congress, in its wisdom, should repeal the duty on sugar by direct legislation instead of allowing the same object to be attained by the reciprocal arrangement suggested.

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

APPENDIX C.—INTERNATIONAL AMERICAN CONFERENCE.

REPORT ON CUSTOMS UNION AS ADOPTED APRIL, 1890.

The committee on Customs Union has made a careful study of the questions submitted to its consideration by the International American Conference, in reference to forming a Customs Union among the several nations of this continent.

It is generally understood by Customs Union the establishing among several nations of a single customs territory, to wit, that the nations forming the union shall collect import duties on foreign goods under substantially the same tariff laws; divide the proceeds thereof in a given proportion, and mutually receive, free of duty, their respective natural or manufactured products.

The acceptance of this plan would demand, as a previous requirement, a change in the fundamental laws of the countries accepting the Union. Even after they were ready to make such changes, a great many other difficulties, almost insurmountable, would have to be overcome, as, for instance, fixing the representation of each nation at the international assembly empowered to frame a common tariff and amend it in the future. The territorial extent, the populations, and the national wealth differ so much among the American Republics that if these conditions should be taken as the basis of representation at said assembly the small states would not have sufficient protection for their interests; and if all the nations were admitted as sovereigns, to wit, on an equal footing, the large ones would be sufficiently protected. It might be necessary, to obviate this difficulty, to create two bodies, one representing the population and the other the states, as this problem was solved in the Constitution of the United States of America. But this step would, in the opinion of the committee, require not only a partial sacrifice of the national sovereignty of the American nations, but more radical changes in their respective constitutions than in their judgment they are willing to accept.

If by Customs Union is meant the free trade between the American nations of all their natural or manufactured products, what is properly speaking unrestricted reciprocity, the committee believes it is in principle acceptable, because all measures looking to the freedom of commerce must necessarily increase the trade and the development of the material resources of the countries accepting that system, and it would in all probability bring about as favorable results as those obtained by free trade among the different States of this Union.

But while the committee believes that such a union is at present impracticable as a continental system, among other reasons, because the import duties levied on foreign trade constitute the main source of revenue of all the American nations, and such of them as are not manufacturing countries would thus lose more or less such revenue, on which they depend in a great measure to defray their national expenses; while the manufacturing countries, as the United States of America, would have to abandon, at least partially, the protective policy which they have adopted to more or less extent, and they do not seem yet prepared to change that system. Besides, a reciprocity treaty mutually advantageous between two contiguous countries might prove onerous if extended to all as a continental compact, especially as the products of many of the American Republics are similar. Therefore, while these obstacles are in the way, it seems premature to propose free trade among the nations of this hemisphere.

But if it is not easy, in the opinion of the committee, to arrive at once at unrestricted reciprocity, that end might be obtained gradually and partially. The first and most efficient step in that direction is the negotiation of partial reciprocity treaties among the American nations, whereby each may agree to reciprocate or diminish their respective import duties on some of the natural or manufactured products of one or more of the other nations, in exchange for similar and equivalent advantages, as, if the mutual concessions were not equivalent, the treaties would soon become odious, could last but for a limited time, and would discredit the system. If after this has been tried for some reasonable time a good result should follow, as it is to be expected, the number of articles on the free-list might be enlarged in each case, from time to time, until they attain, through the development of the natural elements of wealth, other sources of revenue or an increase of the existing ones, which would allow the contracting nations to reach unrestricted reciprocity or a free trade among some or all the American nations.

Therefore the committee proposes:

To recommend to such of the Governments represented in the conference as may be interested in the celebration of partial reciprocity commercial treaties, to negotiate such treaties with one or more of the American countries, as it may be in their interest to make them, under such a basis as may be acceptable in each case, taking into consideration the special situation, conditions, and interests of each country, and with a view to promote their common welfare.

Mr. HALE. I offer an amendment upon this subject-matter to the tariff bill, which I ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

And the President of the United States is hereby authorized, without further legislation, to declare the ports of the United States free and open to all the products of any nation of the American hemisphere upon which no export duties are imposed whenever and so long as such nation shall admit to its ports, free of all national, provincial (state), municipal, and other taxes, flour, corn-meal, and other breadstuffs, preserved meats, fish, vegetables, and fruits, cotton-seed oil, rice, and other provisions, including all articles of food, lumber, furniture and all other articles of wood, agricultural implements and machinery, mining and mechanical machinery, structural steel and iron, steel rails, locomotives, railway cars and supplies, street-cars, refined petroleum, or such products of the United States as may be agreed upon.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE NUTTING.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, April 5, 1890.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. Newton W. Nutting, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, As a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, that the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. President, Newton W. Nutting was most emphatically a self-made man. He was born and resided until his death in the county and Congressional district of New York which he represented in Congress at the time of his death. The district is overwhelmingly Republican and comprises a part of the fairest portion of the State of New York; I believe that no part of the State is richer in agricultural resources; it ranks high in manufactures; the merchants and bankers in the leading towns and cities are men of marked ability and high character. Mr. Nutting was a lawyer by profession, and until his election to Congress devoted himself assiduously to the practice of that profession, and I may add that the bar of the district was a very able one. In his Congressional district an election to the House of Representatives was regarded as a distinguished mark of favor and appreciation by the constituency. Their varied industries, their dependency to some extent upon Federal aid, prompted close scrutiny into the character and capacity of the candidate of the Republican party. I say the candidate of the Republican party because the district was so overwhelmingly Republican that whatever contest there was was within the ranks of that party, and it is just, therefore, to say of Mr. Nutting that he competed for the honor with the best and purest of the State of New York, but his political triumphs were never won by unworthy means or doubtful methods. There, sir, the tricks of machine politics and packed caucuses were unknown, and success depended entirely upon the judgment of the people, and, without undue or unseemly effort on his part, Mr. Nutting easily commanded the honors conferred upon him.

I knew him well; we were warm personal friends. He died after a protracted struggle with a painful and from the outset a recognized deadly disease. He was a devoted husband and father, and I well remember when in this Chamber, with suppressed emotion and without regret for himself, he told me of his approaching death; that he was hopelessly afflicted, and within a few months at farthest must die. It is sad, sir, to hear a strong man speak of his sure, near, and certain death, seemingly without emotion, until the thought of wife and children like a great wave rushes over him, when, with the same immobility of countenance, the tears stream from either eye.

Mr. President, Mr. Nutting was stricken down in the full strength of manhood, in the possession of all his physical and intellectual powers. He was possessed of far more than ordinary ability, was industrious, and had a rare power of application. His friends might well have expected for him higher honors than he had achieved. As I have said, we were personal friends, and "friends" hardly expresses our relation. With a most absolute confidence in his integrity and judgment I would almost unquestionably have responded to his call for support of any legislative measure here that he approved.

When a valued friend dies, for a period, at least, one feels that his place can not be supplied. It is true, however, that vacant places in our social and political life are quickly filled. I believe, sir, that it is better so, as otherwise we would always wear the badges of mourning, and it is far better for society and each individual that griefs should be put behind us while we devote ourselves to the labors of life; but, sir, it will be a long time before Newton W. Nutting will be forgotten by me and the other friends who loved and admired him.

Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate shares with the House of Representatives in its expressions of sorrow at the death of Hon. Newton W. Nutting, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That as a mark of sympathy toward the family of the deceased the Secretary will transmit to them a copy of these proceedings.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, the State of New York within the twelve months has been called upon three times to lament the death of distinguished citizens who held seats in the House of Representatives. A numerous delegation such as the State is entitled to exposes us, no doubt, to a greater frequency by this invasion of death than other States in their representations; but it has been an unusual occurrence that within this brief period three excellent and worthy Representatives, standing so high in the opinion of their colleagues, whether in that House or in this, and with the public at large, should have passed away.

My colleague [Mr. HISCOCK] has narrated the circumstances of Mr. Nutting's life, both private and public; and I might well leave that portion of the considerations that attend an occasion of this kind to what he has said; but the life of Mr. Nutting as narrated is a very striking and interesting one. It is interesting in the circumstances which I shall advert to, and remarkable, while it is not uncommon in the experience of our wide citizenship of this land.

Mr. Nutting was born near the place of his residence and his home at the time of his death, and never, I believe, moved outside of that Congressional district. He was born the son of a poor clergyman, who was unable to give the advantages of collegiate education to this son, who, from the earliest time, attracted the attention of all who saw him as giving promise for distinction in life.

But, Mr. President, while it is very common to speak of sons born in the circumstances that I have adverted to as not enjoying the advantages for a career that are open to the sons of those who live in affluence and ease, the observation of American life justifies no such opinion.

What better can there be for a career under institutions like ours than that a son should be born to a clergyman, himself educated and the husband of a wife attracted by considerations personal and elevated in character and in conduct—what better chance in life and under our institutions is there for a boy thus born and thus to be nurtured? Enjoying an academic education and with the father and mother attending his early efforts to overcome the disadvantage of not enjoying a college education (which I by no means depreciate), this boy went on and on in the eyes of his neighbors, in the eyes of his county, in the eyes of his district, and everybody knew that what he gained in public opinion and in his personal powers was what belonged to his nature and his right of birth, and his whole progress showed that he was strong enough to make his pathway for himself; and thus, without any step backward and without unseemly ostentation, he grew in the eyes of those about him till, as a natural interest of their own that his promotion should be accorded, he took step by step in the profession, in a judicial employment, in confidence, in all the great relations of society, till he became a Representative from a great State, with great interests, in the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, it has been wisely stated, no doubt, that no one should be called fortunate until he be dead, and we might find much to notice in the darker shades of this departed life which might make us say that our deceased friend could not be pronounced fortunate when he was dead. "It is appointed unto all men once to die," but it is not appointed to all men to stand for many months in view of the open grave that is being prepared for them. It is not appointed to every man to die when he has reached the high plane of personal, of moral, and of political influence and authority, and then have all these accepted and enjoyed faculties and duties suddenly taken from him. And that was what befell our friend in his fiftieth year, when he had reached, by climbing, a plane from which no further climbing was necessary, for all the rest would follow from his accumulated power and credit.

And yet, Mr. President, when you look at the more serious relations of life, how it is but a span, whether it be of fifty years or of eighty years, and when you see that this life had been without a flaw and without a moral defeat, when you see that there gathered around him over an increasing number of adherents, admirers, and friends, and when you see, as is disclosed in what is stated by his colleagues in the House of Representatives, that his early faith had attended him from his boyhood to this open grave, we can say that this, too, is a fortunate life and a fortunate end. Mr. President, no man but must be affected by the conduct of our friend during these declining months, which have so touchingly been adverted to.

He was submissive. He was resigned. But, more than that, he was serene, and he left a memory and a faith to his household that will be to them a blessing and to them a sentence that their father's and their husband's life and the son's life was fortunate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE DAVID WILBER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 24, 1897.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity be afforded members to pay proper tribute to the memory of Hon. David Wilber, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That in the death of David Wilber the country has lost the services of a safe legislator and faithful public servant.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to his memory the House shall at the conclusion of these ceremonies adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, David Wilber lived to the age of seventy years, and died very near the spot in which he was born, in the Otsego district of the State of New York. Yet probably, though his home was the same, no greater change could be found in a man's lifetime than in the surroundings in which he was born and in the surroundings in which he died.

Seventy years ago, Mr. President, calls up to mind a condition of life, both in nature and society, at the spot at which David Wilber was born that was almost frontier life in a certain sense, and in some very important particulars much more of a frontier life than our present system of sending populations to occupy new lands. The railroads, the telegraphs have changed wholly the circumstances of new settlements which attended far beyond the time of Mr. Wilber's birth the situation in which he was born.

Mr. Wilber was born entirely poor, but from parents of great character and conduct in life. He followed the path of life of one who labors in the pursuit of wealth or prosperity at least. I believe that he met no misfortunes in the whole career in which he started in life with nothing but the earnings of his hands.

His thrift, his prudence, his savings, his faculties, his high moral character, and his large and increasing authority among his fellow-men brought him to be possessed of a great fortune and to be at all times an animating member of all interests surrounding him in his town, in his county, in his section of the State, in his party, and, so far as his private and public life were connected with it, the welfare of the country.

Without education, I believe, even academic, there has been no stage in his progress in which he did not show those natural faculties and those natural traits which made him adequate for increasing obligations, increasing responsibilities, and increasing duties. His relations to his neighbors, whether in the interest of commerce and manufactures, or of society, or then opening into a political career, wrought from all sides, from all portions of society, a consenting confidence in him, however differences might give preference for this or that competitor. I believe that political opponents at no time hesitated to feel that David Wilber brought into all these employments, whether public or private, a character and a conduct that every one should recognize as an advantage and an honor to the communities in which he lived.

Mr. President, he grew up to the age of seventy to see himself surrounded and the whole State filled up with largest interests of population, of commerce, of manufacture, and of political interests of that State and that State's share of political interests in this great country.

It is not easy to speak without great respect of a life that has thus been made up from the beginning and is closed with no shadow of turning in the traits and conduct which have made him useful to his fellow-citizens and always remembered by those who survive him.

I can hardly say that I had the privilege of any beyond a mere personal acquaintance with David Wilber, but I had long known him and respected him for his situation and conduct in life.

He did not live to take his seat in this Congress, but died at home. He was elected in 1872 a member of the Forty-third Congress and in 1878 of the Forty-sixth Congress and then of the Fiftieth Congress. He was expecting and was looked for by all who surrounded him to do a useful duty during this Congress, but Providence directed otherwise. His steps were turned to a greater and higher sphere, and he passed out of life in the honorable respect and affection of all who knew him.

Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate receives with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of the Hon. David Wilber, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of New York, and tenders to the family and relatives of the deceased the assurance of its sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to transmit to the family of Mr. Wilber a copy of the foregoing resolution.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. President, I avail myself of this opportunity to respectfully pay a tribute to my late colleague in the House of Representatives from the Twenty-fourth Congressional district of New York, Hon. David Wilber.

Mr. Wilber was born near Quaker street, in the city and county of Schenectady, New York, on October 5, 1820. In boyhood he removed with his parents to Milford, Otsego County, New York, where he received a common-school education.

At the time of his death he was president of the Wilber National Bank of Oneonta, N. Y. He was a Representative of the State of New York in the Forty-third, Forty-sixth, Fiftieth, and was re-elected to, but on account of the illness of which he died never took his seat in, the Fifty-first Congress.

This brief statement is the history of his progress and achievements from boyhood to manhood, and will find a parallel in the career of many of those men who have contributed to the development of New York and maintained her political and commercial supremacy. Without the advantages of inherited wealth, without the aid of a liberal education, much less than that—with a common-school education of fifty years ago—Mr. Wilber accumulated a large fortune, and by his business methods, marked by ability and integrity, so impressed himself upon a constituency represented by 36,000 voters that at four general elections he was chosen to represent them in the most honorable position within their power of selection.

I am conversant, sir, somewhat with the Congressional district that Mr. Wilber so long and so ably represented, and I believe it embraces within its boundaries the earlier settlements in New York west of Albany. Rich in agricultural resources, it early invited immigrants from more eastern parts of New York and the New England States, and Mr. Wilber was compelled to measure mental and moral forces in the achievement of his positions with the best intellects and the highest culture of his native State, and there was hardly a contest between him and others for supremacy. A thoroughly honest man, a decidedly able man, he gained, and continued to possess until his death, the esteem, absolute confidence, and admiration of all who knew him; he accumulated wealth, but not at the sacrifice of the respect of his fellow-citizens, and when he was selected to high official positions his political opponents conceded his eminent fitness, and that they were worthily bestowed by his political party. He was, sir, one of those men who, without trickery or manipulation, commanded a large support from his political opponents. He was not a brilliant man, as that expression is applied to orators, and he was not a genius, as we often apply the term to those who have been eminently successful. His growth was slow but constant and unmarked by disaster to others or by those questionable methods that are so often in the public mind obscured by great results.

It is just to say that he was not regarded as a great man, compared with many who have added to the renown of his native State; yet, sir, I can recall very few who accomplished so much as a leader, in molding sentiment or voicing its purposes, as David Wilber. And in his generation I do not recall one who has contributed more to the material interests of a Congressional district, more largely influenced its people, and at the same time maintained, as he had a right to, the confidence and respect of those whom he represented, than he.

Men of his character and achievements, taking into account the disadvantageous circumstances with which he was surrounded in early youth, are fast joining the majority upon the other side, and I believe, sir, it is more than doubtful if others will be found to fill their places.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

Mr. EVARTS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 20, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 19, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

APPROVAL OF THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Journal as read will be approved.

Mr. MILLS. I object to the approval of the Journal.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Let the entire Journal be read. I think the reference of bills has not been read, as well as other matters which properly belong to the Journal.

The SPEAKER. It has not been. Only the usual portions have been read.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move that the Journal be approved, and upon that I demand the previous question.

Mr. MILLS. I move to correct the Journal as follows—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio is not in order until the Journal has been read through. The Clerk has not read the entire Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Journal has not been read in full.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I supposed the Clerk had concluded the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the remainder of the Journal. Any member has a right to demand the reading of the Journal in full.

Mr. MILLS. I move to correct the Journal in the following particulars, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal. The Clerk had only completed the reading of those portions of the Journal which are usually read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I did not mean, of course, to be understood as criticising the Clerk for the manner in which the Journal had been read.

The SPEAKER. Not at all; but whenever any member wants the Journal read he can have it done. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the Journal, as follows:

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 662) for the better protection of hotel-keepers, inn-keepers, lodging-house keepers, and boarding-house keepers of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 1244) for the relief of the sureties of Dennis Murphy—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1418) for the relief of Dwight Hall—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1759) for the relief of Maj. Joseph W. Wham, paymaster United States Army—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1971) for the relief of William Clawson—to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (S. 1992) relating to the execution of customs-revenue bonds—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

A bill (S. 2184) granting a pension to Sarah L. Knight—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2310) for the relief of M. A. Fulton, Silas Staples, and the other sureties upon the official bond of James D. Reymert, executed to the United States on the 7th of February, 1860, as receiver of public moneys—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2750) to remove the charge of desertion against Almon R. Tobey—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2782) to provide for the reduction of the Round Valley Indian reservation, in the State of California, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 2783) for the relief of the Mission Indians in the State of California—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 3078) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of James H. Dennis—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3134) to perfect the military record of Henry C. Barney, of Pella, Tex.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3494) to establish a light station at or near Page's Rock, in York River, Virginia—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 3562) authorizing additional compensation to the assistant commissioners to the industrial exhibition held at Melbourne, Australia—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

A bill (S. 3716) to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army and to regulate promotions therein—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3728) granting an increase of pension to Thomas B. Shaw—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A joint resolution (S. R. 90) providing for the printing of decisions of the Department of the Interior regarding public lands and pensions, for sale—to the Committee on Printing.

A joint resolution (S. R. 93) authorizing the printing of the annual report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics on internal commerce for 1889—to the Committee on Printing.

HOUSE BILL WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a House bill of the following title with Senate amendments was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5381) directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the approval of the Journal, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. MILLS. I have the floor to move a correction of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio submits a motion which is in order.

Mr. MILLS. I have the floor and the gentleman from Ohio can not take possession of it without my consent to make his motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that the entire Journal has not yet been read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal relating to the reference of bills, petitions, etc., under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio—

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move that the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday be approved, and upon that I demand the previous question.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from Ohio certainly does not want to prevent a correction of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio demands the previous question.

Mr. MILLS. The scent of the gentleman is keen; he smells the battle afar off.

On the demand for the previous question I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. I make the point of order that a portion of the RECORD just read by the Clerk forms no part of the Journal of the House and can not be a part of the Journal of the House. I make the point that the Clerk has read, as of the Journal of the House, a fact which can not properly go into the proceedings of this House, because it did not take place in the House, to wit, the fact that certain Senate bills were referred to committees, particularly the amendments of the Senate to the House bill 5381—

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the House to determine.

The question is on the demand of the gentleman from Texas for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the Speaker deny the right of a Representative on this floor to submit a question of order?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the Speaker deny my right to raise the question of order? You may ignore it, and put down the representatives of the people on this floor; but the people will put you down, sir, at the polls in November [applause and cheers on the Democratic side], and your party with you.

I demand the yeas and nays on this motion.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 105, nays 117, not voting 105; as follows:

So the House refused to order the previous question.

The Clerk announced the following pairs until further notice:

Mr. COLEMAN with Mr. PRICE.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois, with Mr. BOATNER.

Mr. QUACKENBUSH with Mr. MCCARTHY.

Mr. BERGEN with Mr. DIBBLE.

Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. WILLCOX.

Mr. MCCOMAS with Mr. BARWIG.

Mr. DINGLEY with Mr. LAWLER.

Mr. T. M. BROWNE with Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi.

Mr. MCCORD with Mr. MORGAN.

Mr. BOWDEN with Mr. LESTER, of Virginia.

Mr. CLARKE, of Wisconsin, with Mr. WALKER, of Missouri.

Mr. WILSON, of Washington, with Mr. SKINNER.

Mr. SCULL with Mr. OUTHWAITE.

Mr. SCRANTON with Mr. PIERCE.

Mr. LANSING with Mr. ROWLAND.

Mr. PETERS with Mr. HOOKER.

Mr. ANDREWS with Mr. MARTIN, of Texas, on the silver bill.

On this vote:

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, with Mr. ROGERS.

Mr. NUTE with Mr. ABBOTT.

Mr. DARLINGTON with Mr. BIGGS.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania, with Mr. BLANCHARD.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, with Mr. STAHLNECKER.

Mr. CRAIG with Mr. WILEY.

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. SENEY.

Mr. McDUFFIE with Mr. OATES.

Mr. LEHLBACH with Mr. VENABLE.

Mr. HOUK with Mr. WASHINGTON.

Mr. DORSEY with Mr. O'FERRALL, for this day.

Mr. BARTINE with Mr. CLUNIE, on all political questions and on the bankruptcy bill, until Friday next.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. FLOWER, on all political questions for two weeks.

Mr. KENNEDY with Mr. YODER, on all political questions until Friday.

Mr. BROWNE, of Virginia, with Mr. GIBSON, on all political questions until Friday.

Mr. WADE with Mr. HATCH, on all political questions from this date until further notice, not to be transferred without the consent of both parties.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, with Mr. BUNK, on all political questions from 29th of May until further notice.

Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. CLANCY, on all political questions, except silver bill, until further notice.

Mr. MILLIKEN with Mr. CLUNIE, on this vote. Mr. MILLIKEN would vote "ay" and Mr. CLUNIE "no."

Mr. MARTINE. I was announced as being paired with Mr. CLUNIE. I wish to say that Mr. CLUNIE returned yesterday, and the pair is off. For that reason I voted.

Mr. BOATNER. I desire to withdraw my vote. I voted inadvertently, not knowing I was paired with Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois.

Mr. HEARD. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the recapitulation of the names.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 108, and the nays are 117; and the House refuses to order the previous question. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, to correct the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers the following resolution for the correction of the Journal, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the order of reference made by the Speaker referring House bill 5381, which was returned to the House yesterday with a Senate amendment, to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, was incorrect under the rules of the House and without authority under said rules: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Journal of yesterday, Wednesday, June 13, be corrected by striking therefrom this entry, to wit:

"Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a House bill of the following title with Senate amendments was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

"A bill (H. R. 5381) directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures."

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, to that I raise a point of order.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. CANNON. To that resolution I make the point of order—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the right to make a point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I supposed so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CANNON. My point of order is that the resolution is not in order, for the following reasons: First, it proposes to strike out an entry in the Journal that records a matter of fact. Second, it is not in order for the reason, under the rule, that if adopted it would have the effect, if it has any effect at all, to change a reference of a bill with a Senate amendment otherwise than as provided by the rules. Rule XXIV, clause 2, is as follows:

2. Business on the Speaker's table shall be disposed of as follows:

Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committees without debate. Reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner, and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by members; but House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of, as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported by a committee of the House, and not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole, may also be disposed of in the same manner on motion directed to be made by such committee.

It will be seen, then, that under this rule a House bill with a Senate amendment, which Senate amendment makes an appropriation on the one hand, or contains legislation upon the other, which makes a charge upon the Treasury, shall be referred to the appropriate committee, as public bills and resolutions are referred. Now, under Rule XXIII—

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will the gentleman from Illinois have the kindness to read again the rule on that point? I did not quite catch what he said.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will turn to Rule XXIV, clause 2, he will find that it provides that House bills with Senate amendments, called messages from the Senate, may be referred to the appropriate committee, in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by members.

Now, public bills presented by members are referred by virtue of clause 3 of Rule XXII, which provides:

All other bills—

Clause 2 speaks of private bills—

3. All other bills, memorials, and resolutions, may, in like manner, be delivered, indorsed with the names of members introducing them, to the Speaker, to be by him referred, and the titles and references thereof and of all bills, resolutions, and documents referred under the rules, shall be entered on the Journal and printed in the Record of the next day, and correction in case of error of reference may be made by the House in accordance with Rule XI on any day immediately after the reading of the Journal, by unanimous consent, or on motion of a committee claiming jurisdiction, or on the report of the committee to which the bill has been erroneously referred.

Now, in that connection, clause 3 of Rule XXIII provides that all motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people, or touching appropriations of money, shall receive their first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Rule XX provides:

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

So here is a Senate amendment that makes an appropriation and that makes a charge upon the Treasury. It comes over by way of a message from the Senate, and under clause 2 of Rule XXIV it is referred by the Speaker to the appropriate committee, as defined by Rule XI, which makes all provisions of this kind referable to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, a question of order. It is impossible to hear the gentleman unless there is better order.

The SPEAKER. The House will please be in order and gentlemen will cease conversation.

Mr. CANNON. I will get the matter in the RECORD, whether I have the attention of gentlemen or not.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Do the amendments of the Senate provide any appropriation?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; an indefinite, unlimited appropriation, and, in addition, imposes the charge of free coinage upon the Treasury. So that it will be seen, first, that the Senate amendments are open to the point of order, and the moment that they are open to the point of order that they should receive their first consideration in Committee of the Whole, that moment, under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, it is the duty of the Speaker to refer the bill to the appropriate committee. That the Speaker has done. The Journal truly records the act done in pursuance of the rule. That is done every day that this House meets touching all classes of messages from the Senate, and also all executive documents other than messages from the President. And being referred to that committee, the rule points out one of three ways, and one of three ways only, that it can be taken from that committee. What are the three ways? Clause 2 of Rule XXII provides:

By unanimous consent or on a motion of the committee claiming jurisdiction.

Is unanimous consent asked? No. Does any committee come and make a motion claiming jurisdiction of this bill with the Senate amendments? No.

Or, third—

On the report of the committee to which the bill has been erroneously referred.

Does the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures come and make a report and ask to be discharged? No. You may read the rules through and you will find no other motions provided except the three that are mentioned in this rule. Gentlemen do not claim that the rule does not mean that. It does mean that, and nothing more nor less.

If you will turn to the debates on the 13th day of last February, as found in the RECORD of the 14th of the month, you will find that the whole question was discussed between the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] and myself, and was fully understood by the House. After the fullest and freest discussion the House adopted Rule XXIV and the other rules as they are. I had the honor at that time to have charge or management of the report from the Committee on Rules. When clause 3 of Rule XXIV was under consideration by the House by way of amendment moved by myself, the following colloquy between the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER], and myself was had bearing upon the object and meaning of said rule.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to offer the following amendment.

Mr. CRISP. How many more have you got?

Mr. CANNON. Two more.

The Clerk read as follows:

"In clause 2 of Rule XXIV strike out the following words:

"Messages from the President, reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate, shall be referred to appropriate committees without debate."

"And insert the following words:

"Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committees without debate; reports and communications from the heads of Departments and all other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by members."

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to propose an amendment. It is provided that the message from the President shall not be announced to the House, but referred immediately to a committee.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no. It provides just the contrary, if the gentleman will read the first clause of the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. What does it provide?

Mr. CANNON. If the Clerk will read the first clause, and the words we propose to insert, it will inform the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROBERTS. That was a long amendment and I did not catch it accurately, and I hope that it will be read again.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the gentleman has overlooked one clause of the Constitution, and I do not suppose that he desires to violate it. The Constitution provides that if the President of the United States should send a message here vetoing a bill it would be our duty to enter his objection upon our Journal and proceed to reconsider the bill; and the gentleman says we shall refer it to a committee.

Mr. CANNON. Not at all. If the gentleman will allow me, he did not watch closely the words proposed to be inserted. Messages from the President are to be referred to the proper committee, as heretofore. We propose, however, that reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and also bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate, shall be referred to the appropriate committees the same as public bills introduced here are referred by the Speaker. We leave the reference of the President's message as it has always been.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does not this resolution as proposed to be amended require the President's message to be referred?

Mr. CANNON. To the appropriate committee. That has been always so.

Mr. SPRINGER. But we may not desire to refer a message.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it is always subject to the order of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. We might want to pass a bill at once over the President's veto, and by sending it to a committee we would be deprived of the privilege which the Constitution gives us, to immediately consider such a bill.

Mr. CANNON. Let us not misunderstand each other. As to President's messages, the proposed amendment leaves the matter just as it has always been and as it was under the former rules of this House, and if the rule was made differently as to the President's messages, the Constitution would control. But, as I have said, the rule as to the President's messages is left as it has always been.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRISP. As I understand the gentleman's proposed amendment, a Senate bill coming over here would never, either by title or otherwise, be read to the House until after it had been referred to and acted upon by a committee of the House. In other words, this House would never be informed by the Speaker in clearing off his table every morning of what bills had come over from the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the gentleman I will say that as to one class of bills the effect is—

Mr. CHIEF. But I mean Senate bills generally.

Mr. CANNON. As to one class of bills referred to here, they will be referred by the Speaker just as bills that we introduce are referred to the appropriate committees; they will be referred in that way, entered upon the Journal, and printed in the RECORD, so that everybody will know exactly what bill had come over from the Senate.

Mr. CHIEF. Mr. Speaker, I know there is some provision in these rules which provides that members of Congress, who are sent here to represent their people, are to find out by reading the RECORD what the House has done. Of course I am to be numbered among those who believe that it is the right and the privilege and the duty of a member of this House to be able to ascertain from what takes place before his eyes in the House what has been done in the House, and not to be left to the RECORD to ascertain what the Speaker has privately done, when the member has no right or privilege to make even a suggestion about the matter until after it has been done. What I want to ask the gentleman is, whether he now proposes to go further than his rules already go and to extend to Senate bills the same system which he has already provided shall obtain as to House bills and reports from committees. Is that the effect of the provision?

Mr. CANNON. In reply I will say we propose to refer Senate bills just exactly as we now refer House bills. We propose to treat bills of the Senate just as we treat the bills of members of the House.

Mr. CHIEF. Just as we now refer House bills? You mean just as your rules propose to refer them.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. When bills come from the Senate they will go down to the Speaker's table, and under this rule the Speaker will take those bills and refer them, as the rule directs, to the appropriate committees, and they will be entered upon the Journal and printed in the RECORD.

Now, if the gentleman will take the latter portion of this clause he will see that it does not refer to House bills with Senate amendments, nor to Senate bills where a committee directs their consideration, a committee of the House having reported favorably substantially the same bill. So that, instead of the individual member having less privilege under the proposed rule than he has had heretofore, both the committees of this House and the individual members will have far greater privilege and power than they ever have had under the rules of the House in former Congresses.

Mr. CHIEF. Only a word more, because I do not want to take up time in debating this. Perhaps we shall have something to say later on the idea that runs all through these rules of minifying, so to speak, the individual member, especially if he be of the minority, and magnifying the committee service and the Speaker, taking away from the individual the right to be heard upon important questions. But for the present I will waive that, and will call the attention of the other side of the House to one effect of this proposition. I call your attention to this, gentlemen, because this proposition you have not ratified in caucus; you are not bound and sworn to support it, because it is not in the printed rules; it is new matter and therefore I take it that you are open to conviction upon this point. Every old member of this House knows the importance and the value to a Representative here of the privilege, which he has heretofore had, when the presiding officer laid before the House a Senate bill, of rising in his place and saying, "I ask unanimous consent to put that bill upon its passage."

But under this provision that privilege is to be taken away, because all Senate bills are to be referred by the Speaker. The older members of this House can note and remember many bills that have been passed in that way. I might almost say, and I think I would be within the facts if I said it, that there have been more private bills passed in that way since I have been a member of the House than on all the Fridays that you have met in Committee of the Whole to consider private bills. Now, this proposed rule would deprive you gentlemen of that privilege. It may not seem important to you that it deprives us of that privilege, because a great many of our rights we see going with the adoption of these rules, but, appealing to your own interests, I say to you that this proposition deprives you of a privilege which members who have had experience here know to be a very important and valuable one to a Representative upon this floor.

Again, in answer to questions from the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] I answered as follows:

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, this amendment, which I offer to the proposed code of rules by the direction of the committee, is a very simple amendment; there can be no misunderstanding it, if gentlemen will give attention for a moment.

All Senate bills and all communications from the Executive Departments are provided for, so far as their reference is concerned, by these rules as we propose to adopt them. The jurisdiction of the various committees is defined. Under these rules when these Senate bills or Executive communications come in and are laid on the Speaker's table it is made the duty of the Speaker, instead of laying them one by one before the House for reference, to refer them to the appropriate committees; and then there is power for correction of any misreference, just as there is in the case of House bills otherwise provided for in the code.

Mr. McMILLIN. But even there—

Mr. CANNON. Let me finish answering the gentleman.

Mr. McMILLIN. I beg pardon.

Mr. CANNON. Now, the object of this proposed amendment is twofold: first, to allow the business from the Senate and from the Executive Departments to go daily and hourly to the committees that we have created and whose jurisdiction we have marked out, instead of permitting such business to accumulate, as it now sometimes does, day after day, piling up a foot high on the Speaker's table, until it can be laid before the House bill by bill or communication by communication for the formal action of the House. The proposed amendment secures promptness and certainty of action. If you do not adopt it you have communications or bills piling up a foot high to be "performed upon," if you please, for a day, a week, a month, or a year under the leadership of my genial friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], with motions to misrefer to one committee and another, with roll-calls, etc., upon these various motions.

This is in the interest of orderly, prompt dispatch of business.

Now, so far as one class of Senate bills are concerned, House bills with Senate amendments which do not make any charge upon the Treasury, and Senate bills similar to House bills which have been reported favorably, which do not make any charge upon the Treasury, in a subsequent clause of the rule which we do not touch, can be taken up the moment they come into the House and the Speaker's table is reached, and disposed of by the House, passed, rejected, or referred, as the House may choose.

Mr. Speaker, it is seen that the rule is perfectly plain and the construction was fully understood by the House, and especially by the gentlemen [Mr. CHIEF, Mr. SPRINGER, and Mr. McMILLIN], at the time it was adopted, and fully criticised by them.

Now, then, having said that much as a foundation upon which to make my point of order, what does the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] seek to do? It seeks to strike out, to expunge, and change that entry on the Journal which records the reference of the bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures under the rule. It seeks to strike out a recital of fact. That is what the Journal recites. Facts are facts, whatever you may resolve to do, and the record of that fact stands there, and the motion to strike out is not in order. It is not in order by striking out to seek to take up this bill, which has been referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, in some other method than that prescribed by the rules.

I know there is interest in this legislation; I know that it is an important matter; I know that gentlemen desire to consider it, and it ought to be considered, but no man on the floor of this House, whatever his views may be touching the merits of this legislation, can consistently, in my opinion, with his own conscience, or dare upon his responsibility as a member of the House and in the face of the country, strike out a recital of fact in the Journal which is a fact whether you falsify the Journal or not and be successful in this left-handed, unparliamentary method in taking that from a committee which under the rules of this House the committee has.

Therefore, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, the position assumed by my friend from Illinois is one of the boldest, one of the most reckless, and one of the most absurd propositions that has ever been assumed before a deliberative body. It only shows, Mr. Speaker, how a bright, well stored and well disciplined mind may become beclouded by starting out in error and pursuing that course. It calls to mind those beautiful lines of Pope—

Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
As, to be hated, needs but to be seen;
Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman and his party set out at the beginning of this Congress by asserting before the country, by a code of rules which they adopted, that one man, or a triumvirate of men, could control the Congressional action of the Representatives of 66,000,000 of people, and the gentleman seems to be overwhelmed with astonishment when a motion is made in a representative assembly to correct the Journal which that body is required, by the Constitution that creates it, to keep, which Journal is required to be kept by the House, and not by the Speaker, nor by anybody who serves upon his legislative staff. The Constitution provides that the House shall keep the Journal, not that the Speaker shall keep it, not that the Committee on Rules shall keep it, but that the House, the Representatives of the people here assembled to transact their business, shall keep a Journal for the inspection of their masters who have sent them here, so that the people may be able to hold their Representatives responsible for their legislative conduct. And when a misstatement is placed by the Speaker, under whatever motive, in that Journal, and that statement is challenged by a member of the House on the floor as being incorrect, we are met with the assertion, and it is argued with force and vehemence, that it is not in the power of this House to discharge the obligation which is imposed upon it by the Constitution which creates it, and which we are sworn to support.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that we have a right to correct this Journal. It is the Journal of the House; and I was astonished that the Speaker did not tell the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], as he told my other friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], that this was a question which the House must determine and which it was proceeding to determine for itself. My friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] made a point of order on this very Journal, and the Speaker stopped him from discussing it, stating that it was a question the decision of which belonged to the House, and the House was now proceeding to render that decision. What say the rules which you yourselves have made? Why, the rule says that when a private bill is introduced for the first time in this House the Speaker shall refer it. The rule says further, that when a public bill is introduced for the first time in this House the Speaker shall refer it to the appropriate committee. It says further, that when a bill comes from the Senate and is to be first considered in this House, the Speaker shall refer it. That is very clear, and why? Because in all legislative bodies, and in this especially, the very base of investigation is a committee of the House. Now, this bill has passed through all these forms and stages. This is a House bill. It came to the House from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to which committee the Speaker referred it when it was first introduced. It was considered by this House; it went to the other House of Congress which was charged with its consideration after it passed from this House. In that other body it was referred, under its rules, to the appropriate committee, and was reported back to the Senate. It has passed the Senate with an amendment, and it has now got beyond all committees except the Committee of the Whole of this House under certain conditions.

When that bill, or any bill, comes back from the Senate, if it contains a provision which, had it been in the original bill when first introduced in the House, would have sent the bill under our rules to the Committee of the Whole, then the bill goes to the Committee of the Whole on a point of order, and any one of the three hundred and thirty members of this House could have made the point of order on this bill, and the Speaker would have been compelled under the rules to send the bill, if it contained such a provision, to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman allow a question there, just to elucidate the matter? How did it happen that your tariff bill in the last Congress, when it had passed the House and gone to the Senate and been amended there and had come back to the House, was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. MILLS. I am coming right to that now, and perhaps you had better busy yourself by telling the House how your tariff bill has been dealt with.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman state under what rule it was that his tariff bill, when it came back to this House with the Senate amendments, was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. MILLS. I will answer the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to be interrupted.

Mr. MILLS. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I do not mind the interruption at all. I will answer the gentleman. It was done by the unanimous consent of this body; just as appropriation bills when they come back to this House from the Senate with Senate amendments are generally referred to the Committee on Appropriations. But that is done by unanimous consent; it is done by the House, not by the Speaker; it is done by the consent of the House, nobody objecting. But now, suppose that when the bill had come back to this House, the rules of the House requiring that every bill which makes a charge upon the people shall receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole, my friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] had asked to have that bill referred to his committee and I had made the point of order that, under the rules of the House, the bill had got to receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, the Speaker would be bound, if he intended to execute faithfully the rules of this House, to sustain my point of order and send the bill to the Committee of the Whole. I know that bills coming back from the Senate with amendments are repeatedly referred to committees; that is done constantly with appropriation bills which are sent to the Committee on Appropriations, but it is done with the consent of the House.

But, Mr. Speaker, here is a bill that has passed the House and gone to the Senate; it has passed the ordeal of investigation in the committees of both bodies, and now it comes back to this House from the Senate with an amendment, and not that exceptional kind of amendment which would send it to the Committee of the Whole. Where is it, then? Where does it rightfully belong? Why, under the rule of this House, which I will read to you, it belongs right here in this House. The question on the bill is a question between the Senate and the House. There is a disagreement between the two bodies. The bill having passed beyond the committees of both Houses, it is here before the House, and the question is to be determined by this body whether we will concur with the Senate amendment or whether we will non-concur and ask for a conference and see whether an adjustment can be made as to the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon certain parts of the bill. I will read the rule.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What rule?

Mr. MILLS. Rule XXIV, second paragraph, near the bottom:

House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of as the House may determine; as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported by a committee of the House, and not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole, may also be disposed of in the same manner on motion directed to be made by such committee.

"As the House may determine." The bill has passed beyond the reach of any committee of the House except the Committee of the Whole. It is here on the Speaker's table. The Speaker, in violation of this rule, referred it to the committee, and I say that in no captious sense; perhaps the Speaker thought that was a proper construction of the rule, but it is perfectly clear to any man, it seems to me, who will look at it that the bill is here for the determination of the House and not for any one of its officers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Journal discloses the fact that this bill has gone, by the Speaker's order, beyond the jurisdiction of the House, and that being so it is entirely proper for the House to make such an order as will correct this erroneous action on the part of an officer of the House and make the Journal state the exact facts. The House has authority to demand that this bill shall be brought before it—

Mr. PETERS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLS. Oh, yes.

Mr. PETERS. Of course the gentleman from Texas knows that I am with him on the question of free coinage of silver, and always have been, and I am very anxious to see things in this connection as does the gentleman from Texas. But, as I understand it, this bill as amended by the Senate calls for an appropriation—

Mr. SPRINGER. The Senate cut out the larger part of the appropriation.

Mr. PETERS. And under our rules it must be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. If so, the clause of the rule to which the gentleman refers does not apply.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Why?

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman state that proposition again?

Mr. PETERS. I understand this amendment of the Senate provides for an appropriation. Consequently, since all bills or amendments providing appropriations must be considered in Committee of the Whole, the rule to which the gentleman refers does not apply.

Mr. MILLS. Even in that event it should have been sent by the Speaker to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and not to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa, and others. Oh, no.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for a question?

Mr. MILLS. Certainly.

Mr. OATES. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], as I understood him, made the point that this bill did make an appropriation. Now, is not the appropriation clause in the bill identical with the one which it contained originally when it passed the House, and not an appropriation put upon it by the Senate?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Senate have cut out the appropriation for the purchase of silver bullion.

Mr. MILLS. The House bill provided for the purchase of silver bullion.

But, Mr. Speaker, I can not understand why our friends who are such great friends of silver, and who want to increase the volume of good money amongst the people of the country, and say so everywhere else except when they come into this House and are charged with the duty of redeeming the promises made to their people—then they are endeavoring to conjure up all sorts of objections as to why they should not discharge their obligations to the people—I say I can not understand the inconsistency of their course in regard to this bill. Why, our friends over there made promises to the American people in the last Presidential election, and they promised that they would be the very best friends of silver if the people would return them here again. You said about silver what you said about the tariff and taxation; and you used a word which meant that those should go up or go down, as the case may be. It was "going up" when talking with the barons who made steel rails and pig-iron, and it was going down when you were talking to the people who had the taxes to pay, and you never got beyond the word "revision." You came to this House pledged to the people, and you redeemed your promise to reduce taxation in the interest of the people by increasing the burdens of the people, by destroying the commerce of the country, destroying their labor, and spreading distress and suffering abroad in the land. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield for a question?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I did not rise for a question, but to a question of order. It does not seem to me that discussing the tariff is pertinent to this question. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. It hurts mighty bad, does it not? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas will proceed.

Mr. MILLS. I think it will occur to the constituents of my friend from Iowa that it is a very pertinent question to discuss now and very soon at the hustings. You have promised to be the devoted friends of both gold and silver—a bimetallic circulation. You were the friends of an increased volume of circulation of gold and silver, and all that could be done to relieve the wants of the people, owing to the constricted condition of the currency; you were pledged to it, and you said you would do it better than these heathen Democrats. [Laughter.] Here is what you said. It is good reading; I will call your attention to it, gentlemen; and it may be well when you read your Bible and go down on your knees at night to commit your souls to the keeping of Divine Providence that you should also read and reflect over these promises and see how well you have kept them:

The Republican party is in favor of the use of both gold and silver money, and condemns the purpose of the Democratic party in its efforts to demonetize silver.

Who is now making efforts to demonetize silver?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. No one.

Mr. MILLS. Who is trying to get it off into a hole somewhere?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. No one.

Mr. MILLS. Who is making the point of order to-day to keep this legislation back from the people and prevent the redemption of the promises which all the parties have made to them?

A MEMBER. No one. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLS. Here stand all the members of this side of the House, except what you may count on the fingers of one hand, ready to redeem that promise demanded by the people; and we have asked you on that side to come to our assistance and enable it to be done. We are ready to perform our duties, and we are here challenging you to give us the opportunity, and that the two together should redeem the promises to the American people. You have charged that we are not faithful to the people on the question of coinage. We passed a free-coinage bill over twelve years ago. It went to the Senate, and your Republican Senate put a restriction upon it, and prevented it from being what the Democrats of the House asked that it should be.

Again a few years afterwards we did it, and you sent it back to us emasculated. Again we sent another bill to the Senate, framed as best we could in view of the stand taken by that side of the House. But the Republicans on the other side of this building, a minority of them with the Democratic members there, send back this bill with promises to redeem our obligations to the people embodied in it; and now when it comes back there is nothing for you to do but to concur in what they have done. This is all that is left for us, to concur and pass the bill. Why do you send that bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures? Why do you want it to go there? Why do you make a plea to send it there, beyond the reach of the House, where, perhaps, it will remain buried forever? And if it comes back—as it may in the providence of God at some future time—when it does come none of us will know the bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You will have some more bullion in it and other things which will give the Secretary of the Treasury power to stop the free coinage of silver. I give you, gentlemen, fair notice now that we are going to have a free and unlimited coinage of silver in this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BIGGS. That is right.

Mr. MILLS. I give you notice now that we will call on you soon at the hustings, and we will ask the American people to ask you why it is that when they sent you here as the friends of silver, as you professed to be, you refused, you debated, you halted, and you put on your armor and fought to the death to prevent the consummation of their desires and the fulfillment of your promises. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I want to read the provision to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] called attention and to which I call his attention:

But House bills—

I read from paragraph 2 of Rule XXIV—

But House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of as the House may determine.

Now, if this bill requires consideration in the Committee of the Whole, then the paragraph does not apply to it; and there seems to arise here a question of fact as to whether the amendments placed upon the bill by the Senate do require consideration in Committee of the Whole. If they make an appropriation, why, then, under the rules of the House, certainly they must go to the Committee of the Whole, and there can be no question about it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. PETERS. If the Senate bill does not make any appropriation, or if it does not provide for the expenditure of money, then it would come under the clause referred to by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me? The original bill provides for the appropriation of $4,500,000 a month for the purchase of bullion to be coined. This bill strikes that provision out and only provides an appropriation for the purpose of paying the expenses of the free coinage of silver.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. That is an appropriation all the same.

Mr. SPRINGER. So that this amendment is an amendment which reduces the amount in the bill which passed the House, and the point of order never has been sustained that a bill shall be considered in the Committee of the Whole when the Senate has reduced the House appropriation.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But, nevertheless, the bill makes an appropriation, and must go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PETERS. Under the very admission the gentleman from Illinois makes—

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask—

Mr. PETERS. This is an appropriation different from that which was in the bill as it passed this House.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to suggest—

Mr. PETERS. These gentlemen put upon that bill the provision of free coinage, and for the purpose of carrying out free coinage they provided an appropriation, and both those provisions were foreign to the bill as it passed the House, and that calls for an entirely different action on the part of this House.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make the suggestion—

Mr. PETERS. It calls for consideration in Committee of the Whole, as I understand.

A MEMBER. How does it get there?

Mr. BLAND. The point in this resolution is this, if I understand it, that the bill itself, in its condition, coming from the Senate, is not a subject that may be referred under the rule at all. It is not a question of an improper reference under the rule. Now, if a bill is referred improperly the rule provides how that may be corrected: first, by unanimous consent; second, on motion of a committee claiming jurisdiction. But here is a bill that ought not to have been referred; that is to say, it is not an improper reference, but a reference where there was no right under the rule to refer at all.

Mr. PETERS. Why, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BLAND. Just one moment. Hence it is a question affecting the dignity and the integrity of the proceedings of the House; that is, that a bill has been referred which under the rules is not for reference at all. It is not an improper reference under the rules, but the reference by the Speaker of a bill that was not under the rules of the House the subject of reference; and hence to correct that is a question of the highest privilege in this House.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I should be very glad if I could conscientiously see through the same glasses that my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] does, but these rules were deliberately adopted by this House, and we either must ignore them, or must stand by them, or repeal them.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. PETERS. And I will call the attention of the gentleman to this fact, that a bill that has passed the House, gone to the Senate, has been there amended, and is upon the Speaker's table—that bill can never be considered by the House except by unanimous consent. We have it here time and time again, morning after morning, when these bills are placed before the House, that it is only by unanimous consent.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, no.

Mr. PETERS. And when an objection is made the bill must go to the committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Under what rule?

Mr. PETERS. Wait one moment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. All right, I will not interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. PETERS. I will yield in a moment if the gentleman from Kentucky will allow me to finish my sentence. I want to call attention to this case: Here is a House bill that comes over from the Senate with amendments. Now, the gentleman from Missouri says that this bill is not properly referred to a committee. Well, that would be the case if it did not provide for an appropriation. If there was nothing in the Senate amendment that called for an appropriation, and which called for consideration in the Committee of the Whole, why then it could be laid before the House by the Speaker, and it would be then considered by the House; but when it provides for an appropriation, then under the rule it must be referred to the committee having charge of it, unless by unanimous consent, or unless by action of that committee, it is disposed of otherwise. I should be glad to see this in any other light, but it seems to me any fair construction of the rule must lead to that one conclusion.

Mr. BIGGS. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. OATES addressed the Chair.

Mr. BIGGS. I would like to ask my friend from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] a question by permission of the Chair. Have I that permission?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

Mr. BIGGS. You say you are in favor of the free coinage of silver?

Mr. PETERS. I am, sir.

Mr. BIGGS. Why do you stand upon technicalities here? Why do you not come out and vote for it like a man? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] I mean just what I say.

Mr. PETERS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want with regard for the oath I have registered to represent my constituents and to obey the Constitution and laws and the rules of this House.

Mr. BIGGS. Yes, sir; but the constitution of your State says nothing but gold and silver shall be legal tender.

Mr. PETERS. And I will go just as far as any one to reach that conclusion, but I will do so honorably.

Mr. BIGGS. You would strain at a gnat and swallow a camel.

Mr. PETERS. I will not seek to attain that end in a dishonorable way; but if reached at all it must be reached in an honorable way.

Mr. BIGGS. Let us have this fight out right here. [Great laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. BIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am an old man, and I am going home tomorrow, and I want to ask the gentleman one more question. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not, even under that consideration, permit disorder. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. BIGGS. Then I move to strike out the last word. [Renewed laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CHAP] is recognized.

Mr. BIGGS. As an American citizen—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is not in order.

Mr. BIGGS. Then I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from California be in order?

Mr. BIGGS. I will, sir.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] will proceed. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I wish only to detain the House for a moment to present what I conceive to be the real situation in which we find ourselves and to invoke such a decision of this question as will be in harmony with the previous rulings of the presiding officer of the House, so that we may have indeed and in fact a rule to go by, a rule which we can all understand, and which may be uniformly observed in the conduct of business in the House. If this were an open question, if there had been no decision by the presiding officer upon this question, then there might be room for debate and discussion as to what was the effect and purpose or intention of clause 2 of Rule XXIV, under which the Speaker has privately referred this bill.

The House passed a bill for the coinage of silver. It went to the Senate. The Senate amended the bill. It was returned to the House, and the Speaker, under Rule XXIV of the House, but not in open House, referred the bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Now, this reference was either right or it was not right. Either Rule XXIV gives the Speaker such right or it does not give it. Gentlemen who have discussed the question have discussed it upon the rule itself. I propose to call the attention of the House to the fact that there has been an express ruling by the present Speaker of the House upon his power in this respect on a bill exactly all fours with this. Now, Mr. Speaker, there may be discussion as to the propriety or the impropriety of a given or a proposed rule, but there can be no discussion as to the propriety and desirability of uniformity of ruling by the presiding officer of the House; where the facts are the same the ruling should be the same.

It is of much more importance that the rulings of our presiding officer should be uniform than it is that they should be correct. If they are incorrect, they may, when first made, injuriously affect the rights of the House respecting the measure or measures upon which they are made, but if thereafter such incorrect rulings are uniformly observed, then we can get along, although the original ruling was wrong; because we know how the rules are construed, we know what to expect, and we know what our rights are.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on the 30th day of May last the Senate had before it House bill 407, a bill relating to the erection of a post-office building in the city of Washington. The Senate amended that House bill so as to make it read as follows:

That in order to provide an eligible site for a city post-office the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, empowered and instructed to acquire, as hereinafter provided, the following-described real estate, embraced in square numbered 323 of the said city, etc.—

And then describes the boundaries and proceeds—

and a sum of money sufficient to pay for said lot or lots or any part thereof, in the manner hereinafter provided, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That bill so amended came to the House.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will my friend point out the distinction between the two bills? I do not know what the original bill contained, and whether it was not for the same purpose as the original bill.

Mr. CRISP. The original bill? I do not know that I can give you the provisions of the original bill from this RECORD.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have the original bill, which shows what is stricken out and what is inserted.

Mr. CRISP. The original bill carried an appropriation.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Of not greater than a certain amount.

Mr. CRISP. The original bill carried an appropriation. I do not know how much.

Mr. MILLIKEN. It carried an appropriation of $275,000.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman states that it carried an appropriation of $275,000 as it passed the House.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And $300,000 for the building.

Mr. CRISP. The bill passed the House and went to the Senate. The Senate amended it by appropriating—a sum of money sufficient to pay for said lot or lots or any part thereof, in the manner hereinafter provided.

It came back to the House thus amended.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Right there. I do not remember what are the limitations to which the words "hereinafter provided" refer.

Mr. CRISP. They refer to the proceedings of condemning this property and acquiring title by condemnation.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Was it not an indefinite appropriation, simply on account of the provision that they were to acquire land different from that specified in the House bill?

Mr. CRISP. I do not know. On the 3d day of June last, that bill was laid before the House by the Speaker. I read from the RECORD:

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 407) to authorize the acquisition of certain parcels of real estate embraced in square No. 323 of the city of Washington, to provide an eligible site for a city post-office; said bill having been passed by the Senate with amendments and with a request for a conference thereon with the House.

The amendments were read.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. How does this bill come before the House? Is it a conference report?

The SPEAKER. It is a House bill with Senate amendments.

Mr. ROGERS. Does it fall within clause 2 of Rule XXIV? Does not the bill carry an appropriation?

Mr. MILLIKEN. The bill has already been considered by the House in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER (after examining the bill). There is no appropriation in the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. Does it not involve an appropriation or a charge on the Treasury?

The SPEAKER. The House bill has been considered in Committee of the Whole.

The Speaker says: "The House bill has been considered in Committee of the Whole." What does he mean by that?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Right there let me suggest to my friend that the potent and controlling fact in that case was whether the bill carried an appropriation or not, and the Speaker had just said that it did not carry an appropriation.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman will turn to the rule he will see that is not the potent fact. He will see that the potent fact is whether or not it makes a charge on the people.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, no.

Mr. CRISP. Oh, yes; look at your rule.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The Speaker, in response to the question whether the bill carries an appropriation, says that it does not, and then he goes on to say that the original bill was considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CRISP. Well, what did he mean by that?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, I have not read the rest of his remarks. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. He meant either something or nothing. He either meant to imply that the consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole before it went to the Senate dispensed with the necessity of the consideration of Senate amendments in that committee when it came back, or else his words would seem to be idle; and the gentleman who presides over this House, whatever else may be said of him, fully understands the use of words. [Laughter.] I read further:

Mr. ROGERS. That is not the point I am trying to get at. I simply wanted to know whether this is one of the bills that can be appropriately laid before the House at this time under the rules.

I ask, says the gentleman from Arkansas, is this bill which you now lay before the House one of those bills that can be appropriately laid before the House at this time under the rule?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. ROGERS. That is all. I simply wanted to understand the practice.

Mr. CRISP. Now, Mr. Speaker, as I said at the outset, the important thing for this House to do, if it intends to have rules which will protect the rights of individuals, the rights of the people, and the rights of the House in the aggregate, is to conform to the rulings heretofore made by the Speaker of the House under these new rules. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] said that he wanted to know the practice, and that is what we all want to know. It is not necessary to say to so intelligent a body of men as this that it is important that we should know what the practice of the House is. Is it to be the practice that when a House public building bill comes back here with a Senate amendment it shall be in order for the Speaker to submit it at once to the House, but when a Senate amendment is put upon a House silver bill, which amendment gives the people free coinage of silver, the practice shall be to bury that bill in one of the committee rooms of this House by a private reference, without submitting the bill and amendment to the House at all?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, possibly I may reply to my friend from Georgia after awhile, but I do not understand that the gentleman's communication to the House conveys all of the facts touching the opinion of the Speaker.

Mr. CRISP. I have read every word of it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand that; but it is perfectly clear, since the gentleman says himself that whenever the Speaker of this House makes an observation he always means something by the word he uses, that he also meant something more when he said a certain bill as it comes back does not carry or make an appropriation.

Mr. CRISP. But let me interrupt—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. One moment. I say thereby suggesting that it did not come within the rule which would send it to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CRISP. But let me suggest this to the gentleman from Ohio: Suppose it did not carry an appropriation?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Ah, that is just the very point; that is the point involved here.

Mr. CRISP. No, that is not the point. The gentleman is begging the question. After the Speaker said that there was no appropriation in the bill, and after he said that the House bill had been considered in the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Arkansas says:

That is not the point I am trying to get at.

He did not ask whether it carried an appropriation, or whether it had been considered in Committee of the Whole, but he simply wanted to know whether it was one of the bills that could be properly laid before the House at that time under the rules.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And the Speaker of the House said so.

Mr. CRISP. The Speaker decided as I have read.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, he having already given the reason I submit, that it is one of the bills referred to under this clause 2.

Mr. CRISP. He did not say so.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No, but that was a fair inference from the language. That is a proper construction.

Mr. CRISP. It is easy to draw inferences favorable to what we are anxious to see sustained.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will say to my friend frankly that, if the Speaker consciously made a ruling which my friend says he did make, I would dissent from it as incorrect and would ask him to reverse it as an obviously erroneous ruling.

Mr. CRISP. Well, if the gentleman from Ohio did that, it would be the first ruling of the present Speaker to which he has made, so far as I am informed, any objection. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, I am gratified to know that the Speaker has been generally right, although annoying to some of my friends. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. Yes; during this whole session the gentleman and his party, if I may be permitted to borrow a simile, have seemed to bow before the Speaker of the House with much the same feeling with which the Hindoo bows before the hideous image of his god, "He knows that he is ugly, but he feels that he is great." [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, I do not dissent from the good looks of the Speaker, and I agree that he is great. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of my friend from Georgia to this further point: Suppose, as a matter of fact, that the Speaker held that the bill contained an appropriation, what would he then have done with it? Would he have referred it in this way? In other words, would he have referred it, outside of the House when the House was not in session, as this reference was made?

Mr. CRISP. I beg to be excused from pursuing that line of thought. I am speaking of a case which, in my judgment, is res adjudicata, that has already been decided by the Speaker of the House—the present Speaker of the House.

Now, if this House shall by its vote approve the act of the distinguished Speaker in referring this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, then it puts itself in this attitude, that it approves a decision which is in direct conflict with a previous ruling of its presiding officer, in a case all fours with this. The effect of this is, that as to some House bills, where the Senate has put on amendments appropriating money, the House can have a direct vote without a reference; in other such cases the House can not. The Speaker can determine, as he does or does not favor a measure, whether the House shall have the privilege of voting upon it, or whether he will privately refer it to some committee of the House where it will lie as completely buried as though it were in the tomb of the Capulets.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. CRISP. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I have great confidence in the judgment of my friend from Georgia as a parliamentarian, and I would like his personal judgment on this question—

Mr. CRISP. I beg to be excused from commenting—

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. But I would like to have the judgment of my friend from Georgia on this point: If a House bill comes over here with Senate amendments, carrying an appropriation, does he think, under the rules, such a bill is entitled to immediate consideration?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If any one demands its reference.

Mr. CRISP. I must again say to my friend, Mr. Speaker, that I am inviting his attention to your decision on that question—

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think so.

Mr. CRISP. To the decision on that question made by the highest authority you recognize.

Mr. MORRILL. We are acting here on our own independent judgment.

A MEMBER. Oh, no.

Mr. CRISP. And mere suggestions from us on this side would not be likely, I think, to influence you at this time.

Mr. MORRILL. I would like to know what you think about it.

Mr. CRISP. I have shown you a ruling of your Speaker, made in a case in which he was wholly disinterested; that is, uninfluenced by any party or personal feeling. You ought not to overturn the construction he then gave the rule, simply because in another and subsequent case he rules differently, and particularly is this so when the latter ruling is made on a bill involving a great party question, the free coinage of silver, on which question, perhaps, the Speaker is not anxious that gentlemen on that side and on this should have an opportunity to directly vote.

I appeal from the last decision of the Speaker to the first, and hope the House will sustain the appeal.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask you, what is your own judgment? I appeal to you to give your judgment.

Mr. CRISP. There does not lie any appeal to me now.

Mr. CLUNIE. That time will come later on—perhaps at the next session.

Mr. MORRILL. What may we infer from your reticence on the subject?

Mr. CRISP. I am not responsible for the gentleman's inference.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to address myself, Mr. Speaker, to the point of order which my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], has made, and I desire to have order in the room.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois desires that the House shall be in order. Gentlemen will please take their seats and be in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has made the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to amend the Journal is not in order; in other words, that this House has not the control of the Journal of its proceedings.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask my friend a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. Is not the Journal of the House a record of the proceedings of the House as they actually occur?

Mr. SPRINGER. It ought to be.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well, that is what it is, is it not? Now, is not the Speaker a constituent part of the House?

Mr. SPRINGER. One of three hundred and thirty; yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL. Is not even an erroneous decision of the Speaker upon any question a part of the proceedings of the House, and ought not the Journal to record the fact, if the Speaker makes an erroneous ruling on a point of order?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is just what I am coming to.

Mr. MORRILL. Now, suppose the Speaker makes an erroneous ruling, should not that remain as a part of the record of the proceedings of the House?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Now, is that a question of order or a question of fact?

Mr. SPRINGER. The claim of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] is, then, that if the Speaker erroneously puts into the record something that ought not to be there, therefore it must remain in the record and we can not get it out.

Mr. MORRILL. He does not make the record. Suppose he makes an erroneous ruling, is not the record of that a part of the record of the proceedings of this House, and is not the Journal the record of the proceedings of this House?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Journal ought to be the record of the proceedings of this House.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Speaker is a constituent part of the House, is it not true that what he does in his official capacity should appear on the record as a part of the proceedings of the House?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Kansas will allow me, is not that a question for the House to decide, under a question of order? Is it not reasoning in a circle to say that the Speaker has a right to put into the Journal something, and then that he has the right upon the point of order to decide that the House shall not pass upon the question whether it ought to have gone into the Journal?

Mr. BUCKALEW. And it is for the House to decide whether the Journal shall be approved?

Mr. MORRILL. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement? The error of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is in saying that the Speaker makes the Journal. He makes a part of the Journal as a member of the House, and just as the gentleman from Kentucky makes it or just as I make it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What I asked was whether it was not arguing in a circle for the gentleman to say that the Speaker had the right first to make the Journal and then to decide as a point of order that the House did not have to approve it, so that it would become the Journal upon the act of the Speaker instead of upon the indorsement of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say, lest there should be some misunderstanding on that point, that the Speaker has never seen the Journal of yesterday, and was not aware that that item was in it, except that he supposed that the Journal would state the fact correctly.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire, then, to address myself to the question under consideration, namely, as to whether this House can correct the Journal of its proceedings. The Speaker has just stated that he did not put this into the Journal, and I presume, then, that the Clerk put it in. Now, the point of order of my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is, that if the Clerk puts anything into the Journal that ought not to be there, the House can not get it out.

Mr. MORRILL. That depends upon whether it correctly records what took place in the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am very much obliged to the Speaker for enabling me to reduce my friend's proposition to an absurdity so readily as I have done. If the Chair will pardon me for calling attention to what has been facetiously called at times "general parliamentary law,"

I will read from section 418 of the Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, by Mr. Cushing:

418. The journal is to be kept or made up, in the first instance, by the clerk alone, who is the sworn recording officer of the assembly, subject only to the control of the assembly itself, and not to the control of the presiding officer, or of any other member; though in cases of difficulty and importance, the form of the entry has been settled by a committee appointed for the purpose. So, too, the assembly itself may direct a particular proceeding to be entered or not be entered on the journals, or to be entered thereon in a particular manner, or with explanatory remarks stating the grounds of it. In general, it is the custom, in the legislative assemblies of the United States, to make the entries in the journals in a more concise and summary form. It appears to be a general rule in keeping of the journal of a legislative assembly that nothing shall be spread upon it at length, by way of correction or otherwise, which the assembly has previously refused to admit.

419. The practice is very general, with us, though the secretary or clerk is an independent officer, and, in the first instance, makes up his record of the proceedings of the assembly, without any dictation, for the clerk to read over, at the commencement of each daily sitting, the journal of the preceding sitting. The journal is to be corrected, either at the suggestion of a member, or upon motion, when the reading is completed. It is then considered as approved by the assembly; in which no formal vote or proceeding is necessary.

It is further said that the approving of the Journal can not take place unless a quorum of the House is present.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Did the Speaker yesterday refer this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures?

Mr. SPRINGER. If he did I did not know it. It was not done in the presence of the House.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Did you understand that he did it?

Mr. SPRINGER. I find it in the Journal. That is the only evidence I have of it.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. If he did it how can you correct the Journal by saying that he did not do it?

Mr. SPRINGER. From the fact that it is not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. That is you want to say that he ought not to have done it. But this is a very simple question, that is, did he do it? You now say he did it, and you know he did it, and how can you correct the Journal by saying he did not do it?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Speaker has stated to the House already that he did not do it; that the Clerk did it.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. He has not stated that.

Mr. SPRINGER. I appeal to the record. The Chair stated that he did not know that it was there until yesterday, but that he assumed the Clerk would do his duty.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The Chair did not say that he did not make the reference as stated in the Journal. What he said was that he did not make the Journal entry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair said he did not know what was in the Journal, except that he supposed that the Clerk would correctly report the fact.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair said he did not know what was in the Journal until he heard it read.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Yet the Chair says that the reference was made yesterday. The Journal is a correct statement of what was done.

Mr. SPRINGER. The point of order is just this, that the Clerk having put into this record on his own motion what he conceived to be a part of the proceedings of the House, it is claimed that it is not the province of this House to take it out.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Does the gentleman from Illinois say now that the Clerk put in the record anything that did not occur?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not necessary for me to say that he did. I say this—

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Then, why do you want to correct it?

Mr. SPRINGER. Whether he put in what occurred or did not put in what occurred, it is within the province of this House to take it out if it desires to do so.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I deny that it can be corrected to-day.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to hear gentlemen upon the other side avow so distinctively a proposition such as is made by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio. It is this, that this House is now powerless to make up the record of its own proceedings, and that it is compelled to stand mute—

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I have made no such statement as that. I simply say this: That in a proceeding of this kind, if the record of yesterday is a true record of what took place, there is no power now to correct the record in favor of a lie. That is all.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, now, of this who is to be the judge? The gentleman from Ohio has brought himself around in this circle, which is right to this proposition: If the Journal states a fact, then this House can not correct that fact. Now, who is the judge as to whether the Journal states a fact? Is the Clerk of the House of Representatives to be the judge, or are the representatives of the people, whose record it is? Are we to judge whether it is the fact? Let the gentleman—

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. If the gentleman will show that it is not true, then I will take it all back.

Mr. SPRINGER. I say that these proceedings never took place in the House. I was present, and I never heard him, and other gentlemen were present and never heard these proceedings. They say that the first they knew of it was seeing it in the newspapers and in the RECORD this morning. Some have only heard of it for the first time as it was read at the Clerk's desk. So that whether true or not true, whether the Clerk put in what he supposed was the record or not, this House of Representatives and every other legislative body has the right to revise its journal and to make it show just what the majority of the legislative body says it should show.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, we were told in the early part of this session that we had rules which would enable the majority of this House to express its will upon any subject that might come before it. The question now presented is whether the majority of this House can under these rules express its sentiment upon a question before it. That is the question. We want rules that do not work arbitrarily, or arbitrary rulings of a Speaker, or arbitrary action of the Clerk to say what the record is, and to say that the representatives of the people shall not change it. I claim that it is part of the power of this legislative body to revise its Journal, and to make it show just what the majority of the Representatives are of the opinion it should show. That is what I contend. It has never been assumed in the history of a parliamentary body that the speaker of the house could put anything into the journal, and on a point of order say that it should not be ruled out by the assembly.

Such action is without precedent in legislative bodies. Now, I wish to make another point. I hold that under the second clause of Rule XXIV the business on the Speaker's table shall be disposed of as follows: That it shall be "disposed of"—disposed of by the House of Representatives, and not disposed of by the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, the reference of a bill to a committee is a legislative act. It is an act of the assembly, and the Speaker has no more right to refer a bill to a committee than any member of this House has unless by a positive rule given to him for that purpose, and a positive rule was given for that in three cases.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion? I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that this House can overrule the Speaker in a reference; but here is the point I made, and I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to it: If on yesterday the Speaker made the reference to a committee and the House did not overrule it, can the House to-day, and be honest, say that the reference was not made?

Mr. SPRINGER. If the reference had been in open House and the House had acquiesced in it, that would have concluded us; but we know that it was not made in open House.

Mr. COWLES. No such reference was announced from the chair. I was here all the time listening and watching just to see what would be done with the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to call attention to the fact that we have authorized the Speaker to refer bills and executive and other reports to committees without the action of the House. We find in clause 2 of Rule XIII, that reports from committees are handed to the Clerk, and by the Speaker, under this rule, referred to the appropriate committee, and also in reference to private bills and to general bills, bills and petitions are handed to the Clerk and under this specific rule are referred by the Speaker to the appropriate committee. The rules reserve the right to revise that, and if he makes a reference to which this House does not agree, then under the third section of Rule XXII the order is given as to the correction of the reference of public bills. It is, therefore, the province of the House to revise the Speaker's action in that case and to see that it is referred to a committee properly. In the power that is given him to dispose of business on the Speaker's table it is a disposition that is contemplated by the House of Representatives, and it was never intended that the Speaker should proceed to refer bills hither and thither from the Speaker's table without consulting the House of Representatives, or to let the Clerk do it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman allow a question? I understand him to admit that, either rightfully or wrongfully, the Speaker made the reference of this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. SPRINGER. He says he did not.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I beg pardon; the Speaker says no such thing as that. He says he expected or assumed that the Clerk would record what was ordered to be done. Now, my question is this: Instead of attempting to "correct" or change this record so as to make it appear to the contrary of what it is, why is not your proper proceeding to move to discharge the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures from the further consideration of the bill and overrule the reference of the Speaker?

Mr. SPRINGER. Because we are of the opinion that the bill has never gone to that committee under the rules of the House.

Mr. CUTCHEON. How does this case differ from what is done every day here?

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill has never gone to that committee, under the rules, and I want to show you why.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But how does it differ from what is done every day?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have never known it to be done before in a case of this kind.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Oh, it is done every day.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, what is the order of business under the rule? It is this:

But House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in the Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of as the House may determine; as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported by the Committee of the Whole, and may be disposed of in the same manner, on motion directed to be made by such committee.

Now, I want to know how the Chair knows, in reference to these other Senate bills which are assumed to be referred here, that there is not on some of the calendars of this House a similar bill to the Senate bill which he has referred to the committee, and that the House Committee has not authorized its chairman to call up the Senate bill when it is laid before the House, and put it upon its passage?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think the Speaker may fairly assume that if there be such a similar House bill some gentleman will rise and state the fact, and appeal to him to take the Senate bill from the Speaker's table and put it upon its passage.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the reference was made in open House we could have done so in this case, but it was not. It is the duty of the Speaker, when we reach the Speaker's table, to lay the business upon it before the House, and then he can state that, under the rule, this or that bill should go to such a committee and the House can assent, or can say "no," and refer the bill to another committee. Or the Speaker can say that this or that bill makes an appropriation and should therefore go to the Committee of the Whole if anybody makes the point of order; but if not, it is open for immediate consideration in the House. So it will be seen that these rules were intended to be executed in open House and not by the Speaker alone when the House is not in session, and when it can have no opportunity to revise his action.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Paragraph 2 of Rule XXIV provides that "messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committee in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by members." Now, why that clause, "with the same right of correction," if the rule does not contemplate that the Speaker shall make the references without making them in open House? There is the gentleman's remedy, in the "right of correction."

Mr. SPRINGER. The right of correction is the right to correct on the spot, but we can not know what the reference is under this practice.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Oh, no; it may be done within three days. It may be done to-day, or to-morrow, or the day after to-morrow. Now, that saving clause, "the right of correction," confutes your whole argument.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the House should inadvertently fail to observe an erroneous reference at the time it is made, it can correct it at any time thereafter.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I want to say to my friend that if he objects to hot weather he might as well break the thermometer in order to stop the heat as try to change a fact by changing the record of the fact.

Mr. SPRINGER. We are trying to correct the record in accordance with the fact. My point is that the business on the Speaker's table should be referred in open House and not after the House has adjourned or any other time the Speaker may choose to make the reference, especially in the case of a bill of this kind, a House bill with a Senate amendment. This being a House bill with a Senate amendment we have the right to consider the bill in the House unless it is subject to the point that it must first be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Will the gentleman pardon a suggestion?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. As I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], he means to insist that, the Speaker having no power to refer this bill under the rules to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, his action is void, and the bill has not gone to that committee, and the Journal ought not to show that it has gone there.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the point I have been trying to make ever since I have had the floor.

Now, I want to call attention to the fact that this is a House bill with a Senate amendment, and the rule provides that this kind of a bill, if it does not require consideration in Committee of the Whole, may be disposed of immediately by the House. Now, who is to determine whether the bill is to be considered in Committee of the Whole or not? When the bill is called up, being a House bill with a Senate amendment, the Speaker is obliged to permit any member to make the point of order that it is subject to the point of order that it should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House, and when that point of order is made the Speaker may sustain it, or he may overrule it. If he sustains it, the House may overrule him and refer the bill and take up the bill and dispose of it. Therefore, under the rules of the House, the House has a right, when the Speaker lays before it such a bill as this, to pass upon the question whether it is subject to the point of order or not, and to revise the Speaker's decision if he holds that it should go to the committee.

Now, mark you, the Speaker has not sent this bill to that committee. He has sent it to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, not the Committee of the Whole, as contemplated in the rule, but one of the standing committees of this House, a committee which has already considered this bill once and reported it to the House. The committee reported it to the House and the House considered the bill under a special order, dispensing with the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; it has gone to the Senate and the Senate has put an amendment upon it; that amendment is now before this House for its consideration, and if this order passes and this entry is removed from the record, the bill will be on the Speaker's table and any member may make the point of order that it should go where? Not to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, but to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. SPRINGER. In a moment.

And if the Speaker should sustain that point of order I or any other member of this House would have a right to appeal from the decision, and I should hope the honorable gentleman occupying the chair would entertain it. I should make the point myself if no one else did so.

Now, the House may overrule his judgment, and if so the bill would be here where it ought to be, in order to be called up with a view to moving concurrence in the Senate amendment and taking a direct vote on that question. I call the attention of the House to the fact that that is just what some gentlemen on the other side are determined that we shall not do. They are determined that we shall not have a direct vote on the question of concurrence. And so the rules of the House, which they claim were intended to allow the majority of this House to do business, and which the honorable gentleman from Ohio declared were made to "produce results," are now to be prostituted to the base purpose of gagging the majority of the House and preventing it from carrying out its own sovereign will. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the only question involved in this case is whether this bill has been properly referred to an appropriate committee of the House. The reference has been made by the Speaker, as the organ of the House, in the same manner that other references have been made under the rules. On yesterday I introduced a petition, which was put into the petition-box and referred to the Judiciary Committee. I venture the assertion that no member of the House heard a word or any single remark with regard to it, and yet the reference was properly made by the Speaker of the House as the RECORD shows, in the same manner as this bill.

Rule XXIV of the House provides that—

Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committees without debate. Reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner, and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by members; but House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole, may be at once disposed of as the House may determine.

"As the House may determine." I was not in favor of ordering the previous question upon this subject because I wanted some information as to the fact of whether or not the amendments of the Senate were of such a nature that they required their consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. There is no question now by any member on that side of the House but what the amendments of the Senate are of such a nature that they required their consideration in Committee of the Whole. So that the reference of the Speaker was made in accordance with the rules of the House.

In case it should be argued by any member that the reference was not made in accordance with the rules of the House there are provided in Rule XXII certain methods of correction of the reference, and I want to call the attention of the House to the methods by which such correction must be made.

The rule provides:

Correction in case of error may be made by the House in accordance with Rule XI on any day immediately after the reading of the Journal, by unanimous consent.

First, then, by unanimous consent an erroneous reference may be corrected. Now, certainly unanimous consent has not been given to make the correction of the reference made of this bill by the Speaker. There are only two other ways in which the change of reference can be made, and this rule provides for both of them.

The next is:

On motion of a committee claiming jurisdiction.

Is there any committee in this House that has claimed jurisdiction in this bill and has asked this reference to be changed? Certainly not. That is one of the methods provided in the rule; and the other is:

Or on the report of the committee to which the bill has been erroneously referred.

Now, this bill has been referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. Did that committee come here and claim that the bill had been erroneously referred to them? Certainly not. Now, I hold that that being the case, under the rules, if there is any remedy the method of acquiring it or pointing it out has not been specified by the resolution of the gentleman from Texas. I have no doubt that the reference is properly made. The Speaker in making it has acted in accordance with the methods provided in the rule, and by which every bill is referred in the House, and if any injury has been done, any improper reference made, the committee of the House can secure a proper reference on the motion of the committee that would be entitled to jurisdiction or on motion of the committee which has taken it and which requires it to be sent somewhere else, and in no other way. The point of order is in the nature of a demurrer and admits a state of facts which clearly shows that the action of the Speaker was taken and that the remedy sought for by the gentleman from Texas is not warranted by the facts.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire, at the proper time, to offer an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Texas. At present I suppose we are confined to the point of order.

In answer to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] and other gentlemen on that side of the House, I wish to state, as I did a moment ago, that this is no question of an improper reference, under the rules of the House, of a bill that might be referred. Of course the rules point out in what manner the Speaker may refer certain bills; and if he makes a mistake or an erroneous reference, under the rules of the House, there is but one way to get the bill back.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Three ways.

Mr. BLAND. That is, by unanimous consent, or by the committee claiming jurisdiction. But the proposition here is that under the rules of the House this bill was not the subject of reference by the Speaker, that he had no jurisdiction over it in order to refer it, and that he took the bill from the Speaker's table without the authority of the House.

Mr. FARQUHAR. How long does the gentleman expect the bill to remain on the table?

Mr. BLAND. Until the House sees proper to take it up and dispose of it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Where is the rule that when a bill comes from the Senate and goes to the Speaker's table it shall remain there?

Mr. BLAND. The rule referred to by the gentleman from Iowa, that House bills with Senate amendments were, in certain cases, to be taken up for consideration.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Does the rule specify—

Mr. BLAND. I must decline to yield further.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri declines to be interrupted.

Mr. BLAND. Now, Mr. Speaker, where the Speaker, under the rules, has no power to refer a bill, a resolution, or a proposition, and that resolution, bill, or proposition is referred without authority of the rule by the Speaker, as we claim in this case, then, as a matter of fact, he having no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of this question and undertaking to refer it without authority, the bill is before us yet, and the Journal ought not to say that the bill has been referred. Hence that part of the Journal ought to be stricken from the records of the House. It was an assumption on the part of the Speaker, by mistake, as a matter of course, that he had jurisdiction to do a certain thing that the rules of the House confer no jurisdiction upon him to do. Now, that is the contention of this side of the House. The other side of the House call upon the Speaker himself to rule upon that very question as to his authority, and thus take from the House the question as to his authority under the rules to refer this bill at all. It is a higher question than the question of the rules of the House. It is a question affecting the dignity and integrity of the proceedings of this House, under which in a former Congress, as is well remembered, bills were brought back from committees.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Is there any other way to decide a point of order under the rules of the House except for the Speaker to decide it?

Mr. BLAND. I am arguing the point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Then you can have your appeal from the Speaker and it goes to the House. That is the regular way.

Mr. BLAND. I hope that the gentleman will not take it for granted that if I am right the Speaker is not going to rule wrong. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I expect to convince the Speaker that I am right. I am arguing this question to the Speaker. I do not understand that the Speaker is bound to rule as gentlemen upon that side of the House desire; and I expect if there is an appeal made it will come from that side of the House. I expect the Speaker to rule with me, because I believe I am right, and I expect the Speaker to rule in accordance with the right of this case.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But is not the Speaker primarily the administrator of the rules of the House? Is there any other way to decide the matter? What is the gentleman finding fault with?

Mr. BLAND. I am addressing the Speaker on this point of order and arguing why I do not think he can sustain the point of order, because it is a question, not as to whether this bill has been properly referred under the rules of the House, but it is a question whether the rules authorize the reference, whether the reference itself is not a nullity, whether the act performed was not a nullity under the rules of the House, and whether the Journal entry referring to it ought not to be stricken out. That is the question. Certainly if the Speaker of the House assumes to refer a matter over which he has no jurisdiction it would be a nullity, and the duty of this House would be to so declare it, and to strike it out of the Journal. Undoubtedly there is no other way to get at it, and, as I stated a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment that the bill lie upon the Speaker's table, subject to the order of the House, under the rules of the House.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I would make the point of order against that—

Mr. BLAND. Of course a point of order is already pending, and I expect after the point of order is decided to offer that amendment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There are two abstract propositions in which we are very considerably interested upon both sides of the House. One is as to whether we are to reach results in accordance with the established rules, rules prescribed by ourselves for the orderly conduct of business. In this the whole House is specially interested, since in the open violation of the rules of the House the dignity and honor of our proceedings are compromised. This side of the House, if I may address myself for one moment to my political associates, is interested in seeing to it that we do not abandon the charge of the public business to our honored friends across the aisle.

This side of the House, this Republican majority, is responsible to the country for the legislation of the Fifty-first Congress. We are able to respond to the just demands of the country. Our proceedings ought to be in conformity to the rules we have prescribed for the government of this body in the transaction of the business of legislation, and, if at any time we find ourselves incapable of conducting the public business committed to our care, then let us formally abdicate in favor of our friends upon the other side and let the Democracy try it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I second the motion.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The motion will not be in order until next fall. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. It will be carried then, though.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And it will not be in time to affect this question.

Mr. McMILLIN. But it will be in time for this question to affect it. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Now, Mr. Speaker, the first thing in the proper order of this discussion is, I submit, to ascertain the object and purpose of the pending resolution, at what it is aimed. I ask, with the consent of the House, that the clause in the Journal which is sought to be stricken out be read, and immediately thereafter the resolution of the honorable gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That portion of the Journal is incorporated in the resolution.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask, then, that the resolution of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] be read as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires the resolution to be read.

The resolution was read by the Clerk.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That preamble and resolution, you will observe, in terms first recite what was actually done in the course of the proceedings of the House and then proceeds to assert that that which has been declared to have been done was not done, and the resolution proposes to amend the Journal by striking out the recital of the proceedings which the resolution concedes to have taken place. If the preamble is true, the resolution would falsify the record. If the preamble is not true, there is no necessity for the resolution. Now, the Constitution provides, as my honored friend from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has suggested, that the House shall keep a Journal of its proceedings. What are its proceedings? The things that are done by this body. And a record of its proceeding discloses just what is done in the matter of transacting legislative business. Does anybody doubt it? And a reference of a bill, though erroneous, is still a reference, and is a part of the proceedings of the House; and any action the House might take in correcting the error would also be a part of the proceedings of the House which the Journal must disclose. Does any one doubt it? Can any one doubt that if we should do forty erroneous things here to-day, as we may, our acts in that behalf are a part of the proceedings of this House?

Mr. BIGGS. But that does not make them right.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That may not make them right, that is very true. It is not a question whether what the House, or the Speaker, as the organ of the House, does is right or wise, but did that which appears on the Journal, which records our proceedings, actually transpire as recited. It might be neither right nor wise, judged by the standard of my friend or my own standard. The question is whether what is done is part of the proceedings of this House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir; in one moment. Suppose the Speaker, either through error of judgment or through perverseness, had erroneously referred every bill that reached this House from the Senate on that day. Would such action on the part of the Speaker have been a part of the proceedings of this House or not? If not, it follows that when we are proceeding erroneously we are not proceeding at all. But, in the case supposed, nobody can deny, I think, that it would be. And, if so, why single out the silver bill and say the reference, being erroneous, the act of referring it constituted no part of the proceedings; that the Speaker did not act at all because he acted erroneously and, therefore, his official action being no action, the recital of the fact should be stricken from the Journal? First recite that a bill was referred, second that the reference was erroneous, and because it was erroneous it was not referred. Now, that is what I call logic. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BIGGS. But there has never been a bill of this character referred in this way before, and you can not find authority for it from the foundation of the Government up to the present time. You know that.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If it had not occurred, that would be a different thing.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will my friend from Ohio allow me to continue the illustration he makes? Suppose that the Speaker did improperly refer a dozen bills yesterday. Would the House have to abide by that Journal and would the House have no remedy and no control over it?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wonder that my friend asks such a question. Of course this House is supreme, both over the Speaker and the Journal, and it corrects erroneous references, but it does not recite that the reference did not take place. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] The trouble with the proposition of my honored friend from Texas [Mr. MILLS] is that he first recites what did take place, and then he says it was erroneous, and then he says because it was erroneous it did not take place at all.

Mr. McMILLIN. If my friend will permit me right there, I think his error is in this, that what purports to have been read as a Journal of the House will never be the Journal of this House until it is approved by this House, so that it becomes the action of the House itself.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Undoubtedly, but when we seek to amend the Journal, the amendment looks to reciting what did take place or to correcting any error in the recital of the facts which constituted the proceeding, a record of which the Journal should disclose.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly I will, in a moment.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the majority of this House are of the opinion that the words moved to be stricken out by the gentleman from Texas were not inserted in the Journal by action of this House, have we not the right to take them out?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If it had recited that we had adjourned at 2 o'clock when in fact we did not adjourn until 6, we would correct it.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is not the point.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. One moment. If in point of fact the Journal recites what did not take place, then the Journal is erroneous, and we strike out the recital, because it records what did not transpire, but the pending resolution seeks to correct the Journal by striking out what did actually occur.

Mr. SPRINGER. The House is to be the judge of that question.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But, I repeat, your resolution recites that this reference did take place, and so it formed a part of the proceedings; and then you proceed to strike it out, not because it did not take place, but because it did take place.

Mr. SPRINGER. It says it was put in the record, but that the proceedings did not take place.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, well, you can not get away from that, my brother. [Laughter.] You have recited a fact here that a certain thing was done, and we know it was done; and now you say, because it was erroneously done, we propose to assert that it was not done. There is no philosophy in that.

One thing further. Now, it is always in order to amend the Journal to make it conform to the facts; and to make it conform to what facts? To make it recite what did take place, whether erroneous or not. If erroneous, then we proceed to correct the error, but not to obliterate, to mar, and to mutilate the record.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will my friend permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It seems to be the object of our friends on the other side not to amend the Journal, but to amend the fact.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, that is a fair inference, I will say to my friend from Maine.

Mr. SPRINGER. But we dispute the fact. [Cries of "No, you don't!"]

Mr. BOUTELLE. You declare the fact in the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to say—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But you are estopped by your pleading.

Mr. SPRINGER. We deny that this proceeding took place in the House. Suppose a majority of this House should vote that it did not take place. Now, then, would it not be in the province of the majority to say that, that having been put upon record in the Journal as having taken place, it should be stricken out?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly. But I have too much confidence in the truthfulness of this House to expect it to do anything of the kind.

Mr. SPRINGER. I know that it did not take place. And who is to judge?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The House is to judge. I agree with my honored friend about that. We are sovereign here.

Now, one other proposition. To refer to the remarks of my honored friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. I do not think my friend from Vermont was quite fair to put such a troublesome question to my brother. He did not answer the question. He is too good a parliamentarian to assert, and he did not and would not assert, that the ruling of the Speaker was wrong in the question under consideration, but wishes to leave gentlemen with the former ruling and say, "You may wrestle and wrangle among yourselves and with the Speaker about that."

I have already suggested that the statement made in connection with the ruling of the Speaker, referred to by the gentleman from Georgia, points conclusively to the fact that it is in harmony with his reference yesterday; he starts out by saying (I have not the RECORD, so as to quote the language with certainty) "this bill does not carry an appropriation," therefore it is within the second clause of Rule XXIV, which says it may be taken up and disposed of as the House may determine.

Why? Because it does not contain that which makes it a subject-matter for reference to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, nor yet to any committee under the rules of the House. My friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] would not say—but it is not for me to guess what he would say if he would answer the question of my honored friend from Vermont. His only answer, however, is, "You wrestle with that question; I point you to the ruling of the Speaker." But the Speaker states the substantive fact at the beginning of the colloquy between the gentleman from Georgia and himself, which controls his decision; and the rest is leather and prunello so far as that is concerned.

Now, the question that arises here is whether the Speaker was authorized to make this reference. It will not be disputed by this House that under the rules (whether they are wisely ordained or not) the Speaker is charged with the duty of making such reference of all public bills, memorials, and petitions as in his judgment the rules require, each being referred, under the rule, to its appropriate committee according to the subject-matter of the bill.

Now, what are his duties in the present case? A large number of bills—some House bills and some Senate bills—were presented to the House by a messenger from the Senate. The rule fixes the duty of the Speaker in that behalf. The rule prescribes how they shall be disposed of. Let me read:

Business on the Speaker's table shall be disposed of as follows:

Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committees without debate. Reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees.

How? By the House? Under the direction of the House? No; but in the same manner and with the same right as public bills presented by members. What does that mean?

A MEMBER. For correction.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly; but it means for consideration. I do not care what special purpose they are referred for; it is the consideration of the new matter introduced by the Senate. Why? Because that comes to this House absolutely new, and has never received the consideration of this body. Suppose we send a bill to the Senate providing for the prosecution of some public work, but making no appropriation, and suppose that bill comes back making an appropriation of $10,000,000, is it enough for the Speaker to say, "This bill has been once considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?" Or, to put the case in a fairer shape, suppose the bill as it passed the House carried an appropriation of $1,000, and it came back here from the Senate burdened with an appropriation of $10,000,000, would it be enough to say, or would the Speaker say, "This bill has already been considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and may therefore be immediately disposed of in the House?"

What is the object of the reference to a committee? It is in order that the bill may have that careful revision, within the jurisdiction of a designated committee, that is essential to advise the House as to all the particulars and ramifications connected with the appropriation proposed in the Senate amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman was reading from clause 2 of Rule XXIV, I believe?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I was.

Mr. SPRINGER. If you will look at the heading of that rule you will find that that clause comes under what is called the "Daily order of business" of the House. First comes "Prayer"—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, I understand that. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Then comes the "Reading and approval of the Journal;" then "Correction of reference of public bills;" then "Disposal of business on the Speaker's table;" then "Unfinished business." This, you see, is part of the "Daily order of business." Now if that disposition of this business was made in the House during its session, should not the members of the House have been apprised of it?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The House is apprised of all that is done. The Speaker is the organ of the House in the dispatch of its business, and all the business that the rules devolve upon him is done by him as the organ of the House. Beyond that, the rule provides that in case an erroneous reference be made the House may correct it.

Mr. SPRINGER. But how are we to know when the business on the Speaker's table is disposed of?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. You can always know that as you know every other fact concerning legislation in this House. You probably do not know where any bill in this House is to-day except by the RECORD or the Journal, nor do I. The Journal discloses what action the Speaker takes, but, so far as I can see, it can not disclose it until the action has been taken. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. As a matter of fact, on yesterday this bill was not in the House until after that stage of business had been passed, so that it could not have been laid before the House at the time the Speaker claims it was, under this order of "unfinished business."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The attention of the House and of the country is called to communications from the Senate when they are presented to the House and laid upon the Speaker's table. Then the rule provides what disposition shall be made of them, that they shall be referred "in the same manner" as other bills. How is that? Not necessarily in open House, but by the Speaker, in obedience to the letter and the spirit of the rule. The action taken by the Speaker appears in the RECORD, where you find it the next morning, and if the RECORD is not correct, you proceed to correct it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Did not this bill come into the House from the Senate yesterday after that order of business had been passed, and therefore how can it have been disposed of as the Journal says?

The SPEAKER. The order of business on the Speaker's table was not entered upon.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then what right had the Chair to journalize this bill as having been disposed of in that way?

The SPEAKER. Prior to the order of business on the Speaker's table being entered upon a motion was made to go into Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then we did not enter upon the business on the Speaker's table at all, so that it could not have been disposed of in the "unfinished business" of yesterday, but ought to appear in the business of this day. We never got to the Speaker's table yesterday to do that business, and the bill is therefore still on the Speaker's table. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I did not yield the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My pardon is granted. Now, I beg to call attention to this fact. We are dealing here with a resolution which recites certain facts, and we can not depart from that resolution because we are acting upon its recital of facts. But the gentleman from Illinois proposes to set up another set of facts although he has not filed affidavits. I repeat, we are dealing with the recital in that resolution upon which they have asked the House to act. Your resolution, gentlemen, recites that the House did certain things which went upon the record, and very properly, for it would have been a scandalous omission if they had not, and, after that recital, my friend [Mr. SPRINGER] comes in and asks leave to amend his petition. Now, he may have thirty days in which to do that, but it can not be done to-day. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. Does not my friend from Ohio recognize a distinction between an erroneous reference and an unauthorized reference? The rule provides for the correction of an erroneous reference, but what would my friend say about an unauthorized reference?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. What a delightful metaphysical question my friend presents. [Laughter.] If by a reference of the Speaker, a bill revising the tariff, and hence properly referable to the Committee on Ways and Means, should go to the Committee on Patents, that would be both erroneous and unauthorized.

Mr. CRISP. Oh, no; let me—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, yes. It would not be authorized because the rules prescribe what shall be done by the Speaker in regard to the reference of such matters, and it would be erroneous unquestionably.

Mr. CRISP. But the gentleman does not make an apt illustration, I think.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, I can give the gentleman one that will be.

Mr. CRISP. Let me suggest one to the gentleman.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, I would rather do so in my own language. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. The Speaker, where he has any authority at all to refer a bill, may make an erroneous reference. But the claim here is that he had no authority; that he was not authorized to refer this at all, and there is no metaphysics whatever in that position.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let us see the logic of this matter. The Speaker of this House is not authorized at all to refer a bill which deals with the revenue to the Committee on Patents, is he? The Speaker of this House is not authorized by the rules, nor by that higher parliamentary law of which gentlemen sometimes talk so much on the floor, to refer a bill raising revenue to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. BLAND. But there was no authority—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If my friend from Missouri will allow me, I am going to answer myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. But there was no reference here, because there was no authority.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I say the Speaker is not authorized by the rules to refer a bill raising revenue to the Committee on Patents. Clearly he is not. But such a reference might be made. Therefore it would be both erroneous and unauthorized. My friend from Georgia will see the appropriateness of the illustration.

Mr. MILLS. Will my friend from Ohio allow me a moment?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS. That very thing occurred in the Forty-sixth Congress—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, yes, I remember that.

Mr. MILLS. When Mr. Townshend, of Illinois, referred a bill pertaining to the revenues and belonging to the Committee on Ways and Means to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. I do not remember—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I remember it perfectly.

Mr. MILLS. Two days afterward, let me say to the gentleman, the House by a resolution determined to correct the Journal, and corrected the reference of the bill, made on its own motion, by striking out the "Revision of the Laws," and inserting the Committee on "Ways and Means," and took the bill away from the committee which had no authority to consider it, referring it where it properly belonged.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly; Mr. Townshend—peace to his ashes—had introduced a revenue bill simply by reference to a statute. The title was to revise a certain section of the Revised Statutes. On its face—for it did not show its contents—it was as harmless a bill as one granting a pension of $6 a month. It was afterwards discovered, however, and gentlemen will remember that fact, that it embodied an entire revision of the tariff laws, that it was a revenue bill, and that it had been erroneously referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. What did they do? What did the House do?

They introduced a resolution recalling it from the committee to which it had been referred and making proper reference of the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means. I remember very well the circumstances. That reference was erroneous and it was not authorized.

Mr. STRUBLE. That is clear.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman did not answer my question a moment ago; did not allow me to ask it, in fact. Will he now permit an interruption?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly; I will answer it now.

Mr. BLAND. I want to suggest to the gentleman that in all of these cases the rules themselves provided for the reference. That is to say, a reference was provided for under the rules of the House; consequently erroneous reference could be corrected under the rules. But here is a case, as we contend, where the rules have not authorized such a reference to be made.

Now, the gentleman from Ohio has suggested the case of a revenue bill being referred to the Committee on Patents. But the rules of the House gave to the Speaker the right to refer such matters when bills were introduced; and if it was referred to the wrong committee methods are pointed out for correcting. But there is no rule which authorizes the reference of this proposition.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman from Missouri, I think, is entirely begging the question.

Mr. BLAND. Certainly not. Suppose the bill carried no appropriation whatever and was clearly in order to be laid before the House, and suppose, by mistake, it had been referred to the committee. The House could exercise its authority; it could overrule the reference; and in fact it would be the duty of the House to correct the Journal by striking out the erroneous reference, leaving the bill where it had been all the time and where it was before the Speaker undertook to refer it, namely, on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But if it was unauthorized it would still have been a part of the proceedings, as the gentleman recites the question. If it did not carry an appropriation, clearly the Speaker would not have been authorized to take the course he did here. But this bill does carry an appropriation, and hence the illustration the gentleman makes has no application to the question.

Mr. BLAND. I am speaking of a case where the reference is authorized by the rules and where there is a proper mode of correcting the reference under the rules. But in this case, as we claim, there was no authority to refer at all; hence this proposition now pending is in order unquestionably, because the bill is still on the table; the Journal contains extraneous matter that does not belong to it, is susceptible of correction, and should be corrected.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I have only a word more to add. My friend from Missouri, I still maintain, begs the question when he says in this case there is no authority. In this case there is authority, and the gentleman from Missouri, to whom I will pay the deserved compliment of saying that he is too good a parliamentarian to allow himself to be misled on so plain a proposition, must know it.

Mr. BLAND. But the very question in dispute here is as to the authority of the Speaker to make such a reference.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, my friend is chopping up my sentences terribly. [Laughter.]

Our honored friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] insists that the House shall follow what I think he believes to be an erroneous ruling, but which I insist, however, was a ruling made in conformity to the reference now made by the Chair, the ruling in regard to the bill No. 407, which he brought before us.

Now, I have only this to say, for there have been a large number of interruptions: First, Mr. Speaker, this proposition looks to correcting the record by striking out a part which the resolution itself says constituted a part of the proceedings—an absurdity in itself. Next, it seeks to amend the record in that way, and thereby defeat a reference of this House in direct defiance of its rules. Third, it seeks to unhorse the Republican majority of this House and place in the saddle our friends across the aisle, as being more devoted and better able to determine what the wants of the people are, better able than we to respond to the demands of our party platform. I insist that we shall not abdicate in their favor until at least it has been determined by a fair majority that we are unable to conduct the business of the majority.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. Your fellows are all here.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I insist further than that, that to reach that desideratum, if it is such with any gentleman on this floor, we shall not do it in defiance of the rules which we ourselves ordained. I am in favor of an early consideration of this bill. The question is not whether we shall have an early consideration of the bill, but it is whether we shall stultify ourselves by voting for a resolution which first asserts that a thing was done and then says it was not done; second, for a resolution that absolutely paralyzes and nullifies the rules of the House and rebukes the Speaker for having conformed to the plain letter and spirit of the rules which the honorable gentlemen here have made for his guidance. I do not think it is well to do so. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, there are two distinct questions involved in this discussion and both are undermining the thoughts of members in the House, namely: First, a fact and, secondly, the effects of that fact. And I wish, for a moment, to address myself to these two points, because the effects of the fact are something in which we all have a very deep interest, and I need not say that in so far as these effects affect the silver question I am most earnestly interested in them. As is well known, I am in favor of free coinage. I voted against the special order of the House. I voted against the House bill; and with an amendment I prefer the Senate bill to the House bill. And it is simply because of these effects and because of my interest in the silver question that I now do what I have rarely done in years of service in the House, discuss a point of order.

Under my oath and as a man trying to do what I believe to be right, I find myself first confronted with a fact. And I wish to speak of it for a moment. This fact is that yesterday the Speaker, after the silver bill had been received from the Senate, made reference of it to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. The question presented by the resolution of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has been ably discussed by the gentleman from Ohio who has just taken his seat [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], and I shall not go into that part of the subject. But the fact did occur that the Speaker referred that bill to that committee.

Now, the question is whether in so doing the Speaker was executing the rule of the House or whether he was not. If he was executing the rules of the House then, as a member of the House, I propose to stand by him in that action. If he was not executing the rules of the House, then I think my course in the past has often shown that I would be perfectly ready to vote as I thought right in the case, and not to sustain the Chair on that point if I believed the decision wrong. So that now the simple question is this: Did the Speaker, in the execution of his sworn duty as the executive officer of the House, obey the rule or did he not? Gentlemen allege that there was no authorization, no authority given to him, under which he could make any such reference. If they are right in this position, then, of course, he did not obey the rule. Now, what is the rule? It is simply this: That—

Bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate—

Please observe that the silver bill was "a message from the Senate;" that is to say, it was a House bill which the Senate had considered and amended and which it had returned to this body by message.

Mr. COWLES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Just one moment, please. If my friend will permit me to say uninterruptedly what I have to say, when I have concluded, if I have not met his point, I will then be very glad to yield, but I would very much prefer to continue in my own line if the gentleman would permit me.

Mr. COWLES. Very well, I will wait.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. As I was suggesting, this silver bill is covered by that technical phrase of the rule, it being a message from the Senate. The rule continues:

Bills, rules, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by members.

Every one knows that a public bill presented by a member goes to the Clerk and is referred during the session of the House, or I presume it might be done afterwards, but at any rate during the session of the House it is referred by the Speaker to the appropriate committee, and that fact is entered of record in the Journal and appears in the RECORD. There is the foundation for this whole proceeding, namely, the manner in which a bill introduced by a member is referred. It is not read to the House. It used to be under the old rules, but it is not now. It is not referred to a committee in open House. It simply is presented and by the Speaker, or some one under his direction acting as his agent, is referred to the appropriate committee, and that reference is an act of the House.

Mr. COWLES. Now will my friend permit a question?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will my friend please allow me to finish my remarks? That is an act of the House and is made a part of the record of the proceedings of the House. Coming now to this particular bill which is covered by the phrase, as I said, "messages from the Senate." It came to the Speaker's table in the usual way, and it is either covered by the clause of the rule which I have read or else it is covered by the second clause of the rule which I will read.

The second clause is this:

But House bills with Senate amendments—

And that is this case—

which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills, etc.

This bill must fall under either one or the other of those two clauses. That it does not fall under the second clause is evident from the fact that it carried an appropriation, and therefore, under a point of order, must have been considered in a Committee of the Whole, and that fact takes it out from under the second clause, which I will again read:

House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of.

But those which do require consideration in Committee of the Whole may not be at once disposed of. They come under the first clause, and they must be referred by the Speaker, as in the case of public bills introduced by members, to the appropriate committee.

This bill, as I said, comes under the first or the second of these clauses. It can not, by virtue of the express language of the second clause, come under it. Therefore it must come under the first clause, and so the Speaker could do nothing else than he did, namely, refer that bill to that committee in the execution of a rule of the House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COWLES. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. COWLES. Would it not have been in order under the rules of this House to concur in the Senate amendments? and, in fact, was there any time given to do that by the Speaker? The gentleman was here upon the floor and I ask him, as a question of fact and as a question of practice, would it not have been, according to the practice of this House, in order to move to concur in the Senate amendments or to allow some gentleman upon this floor to move to concur in the Senate amendments?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I will gladly and frankly say—

Mr. COWLES. Was that done?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I will gladly and candidly answer my friend; but in answering I want to go back to the case cited by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], which he described as being on all fours with this—

Mr. COWLES. That has nothing to do with this proposition.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Now, my friend has asked his question. I am proceeding to answer it.

Mr. COWLES. I asked the gentleman a question directly and I want a direct answer.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I will give you a direct answer, but you will allow me to pursue my own way. My friend from Georgia cited the case of the city post-office bill as being on all fours with this bill; but I claim that it was not on all fours with this one, for the reason that it was a bill where the Senate had asked for the appointment of a committee of conference. If you will look at the record you will find that that is so.

Mr. COWLES. But the gentleman is getting away from the question.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Just let me answer the question in my own way.

Mr. CRISP. Let me say this to my friend, that there has to be a disagreement before there is a committee of conference and before it becomes a question of privilege.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The point I make is this: That the bill which the gentleman from Georgia cited was a bill where the Senate had asked for a conference, and because of this request it was placed on a higher plane of privilege. But this bill—and I am now coming to the answer to my friend from North Carolina—is one in which the Senate had not asked for a conference. In other words, it is not lifted out of and above the level of ordinary bills, but stands upon precisely the same plane as any bill which has been sent to the Senate and amended by the Senate, but as to which neither body has asked for a conference.

The case cited by my friend from Georgia was a case where the Senate had asked for a conference, where a conference was accordingly granted by the House, and where the Speaker appointed the conferees. This important difference makes the two cases wholly dissimilar. If the Senate had asked for a committee of conference on this bill, and it then had gone upon the Speaker's table, it would have come before the House, and the question, in my opinion (and I do not pretend to be a parliamentary expert), would have been properly either to concur or non-concur; but as the Senate did not ask for a conference the silver bill came over simply as does any other bill, and went upon the Speaker's table precisely as does any other bill, there to be treated by the Speaker under the rule exactly as he would treat a public bill introduced by a member.

Mr. COWLES. Now, right there. Did not this bill come from the Senate with Senate amendments?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. COWLES. It was handed in here through the regular channel and went to the Speaker's table. It was announced there as being received and the amendments were read. Then was it not in order for any member to move that the amendments be concurred in?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The amendments were not read. The bill was received while we were in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COWLES. The amendments were read. Was it not in order, then, to move to concur in the Senate amendments?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The bill was not up for consideration and the amendments were not read, and my friend will recollect that we were in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COWLES. No, sir; the Speaker was in his chair. We could not receive a message in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. It was received in the House, but the committee informally rose.

A MEMBER. Without any motion.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Without any motion.

Mr. COWLES. The Committee of the Whole rising, the House received the bill. Now (and I do not wish to insult my friend's intelligence by presuming he does not know it), was it not in order to move to concur in the Senate amendments?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. My friend will remember this, that where a bill is taken from the Speaker's table—

Mr. COWLES. But no opportunity was given to make a motion to take it from the Speaker's table.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The reply that I make is that during that day no member under the rule could be recognized to make that motion unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. COWLES. But the Speaker slipped out of the chair and the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole slipped in so quickly that no one had an opportunity to make a motion.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Well, I hope my friend will state all he has to state and then allow me to resume my remarks.

Mr. COWLES. I asked for the immediate consideration of the bill, but that went without notice.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The question is not what my friend would have liked to have done or what I would have liked to have had done, but the question I am trying to discuss is the rule of the House.

Mr. COWLES. And the objection I make is to the manner of answering the question, which avoids the whole issue.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh, no. My friend will give me at least the same credit for sincerity that he claims for himself.

Mr. COWLES. Certainly I do.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. We may differ on parliamentary questions.

Mr. COWLES. I have looked upon the gentleman up to this time as being a friend to the free coinage of silver.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I am a friend of silver; but you gentlemen have been trying to prove, as to the rules, that two and two are six, when I know that two and two are four. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, what I am trying to do is to show that two and two are four and that two and two are not five. I want to know what this rule is; and if that rule requires the Speaker to send that bill to a committee I will stand by him, and that is the point I am trying to make.

Mr. COWLES. It is not required that the Speaker shall do it. It is for the House to do.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is where we differ and that is where I am trying to convince my friend.

Now, I think I have shown that the Speaker, under the rule, could do nothing else than refer the bill to that committee. If it had been a bill which would properly come from the Speaker's table to the House, then the time for it to do so would have been this morning; and that is a full answer to my friend; but, as the reference was made under the rules before this morning, of course that opportunity did not arise. Daily bills come from the Senate and go to the Speaker's table; and no one when they are so reported to the House pretends to ask for their consideration as a matter of right and rarely by unanimous consent. They are either referred by the Speaker or, if not, remain on his table till the next legislative day. We all know that.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to address myself for a very few minutes to the effect of this first fact which I have been discussing. There is the important point, and I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER], the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. Our friends on the other side of the House seek to make the impression upon us and the country that the reference of this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures is a practical burial of the bill. If they are correct in this assertion, we want to know it; I want to know it. If they are not correct, I want to know that. Because, gentlemen, when all is said and done, there is the real point in this whole proceeding. If I believed that your committee would not permit this House to have a vote upon the silver bill and the silver question, then I am frank to say that I would call a halt as to my vote—

Mr. CONGER. Would that make two and two five? [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No; but it raises the question whether, because two and two are four, we are to permit ourselves to be manacled when it may be in our power to do otherwise. Now, I want to ask my friend from Iowa a direct question.

Mr. COWLES. I want to remind my friend that the Committee on Rules control the question of consideration, and not the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I did not catch the gentleman's remark, and I want to ask my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, whether in his judgment that committee will give this House an opportunity to consider this measure.

Mr. COWLES. They can not do it.

Mr. CONGER. I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas whether my reply to his question will determine in his mind whether two and two make four or five. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Skip that. I would like to have an answer.

Mr. CONGER. What is your question?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to know from my friend whether, in his judgment, in view of the interest of the people of this country in this question and in view of the interest shown in this measure by the Representatives in this body and also in another branch of Congress, this bill will be reported back to the House so that the House can have an opportunity to act upon it.

Mr. CONGER. I am willing to say for myself that I am as anxious for legislation upon this question as any other man in this House, and that, so far as I am concerned, my efforts will be directed to securing the earliest possible legislation upon this question.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, that is all I want. I am satisfied. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CRISP. Does not the gentleman know that the Committee on Rules control that whole matter? Does he not know that the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures may report this bill back and put it upon the Calendar, but that their action will have no effect unless it is vitalized by the Committee on Rules?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh! Let my friend remember that the Committee on Rules has the interest of the people and the interest of the Republican party at heart—

Mr. CRISP. Yes, the interest of the Republican party; and they had that at heart before when they would not let us vote on free coinage.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The interest of the Republican party at heart, and I will trust them a good deal quicker than I will the Democratic party.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. That remark does not come with very good grace from men who have suppressed the discussion of the silver question for the last four years.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to add to my remarks some precedents which I have found in the RECORD, cases where from day to day and from week to week Senate bills have been referred precisely in the same way that this bill was referred.

Objection was made.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. Before giving my consent I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman's question to the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, as I understood it, was whether that committee would report this bill back, and the answer of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] was that he was anxious for legislation upon "this question," meaning of course the silver question, and that so far as he was concerned he was willing to report back this bill so as to give the House a chance to vote upon "this question," not upon this amendment.

I suppose the gentleman from Kansas is aware by this time that a majority of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures are opposed to the free coinage of silver, and will never report back to this House a bill in favor of free coinage. Now, I want to ask the gentleman: Are you willing as a member of this House to send this Senate amendment to that committee when you must know that the majority of the committee are against the free coinage of silver, and can you suggest any other way by which you can get the amendment back, if you do send it there, except by the report of a committee, the majority of which is against free coinage?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I will answer the gentleman in half a minute. My answer is that whether I want the bill sent there or not it is there; and, secondly, the assumption that a majority of the committee may have been opposed to free coinage may or may not be true, but there has been a very loud gun fired in this country in the last few days, and my expectation and belief, founded on good authority, is that the House will have opportunity to vote as I desire to vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. I only wished to express my surprise at the weight the gentleman seemed to give to the answer of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Well, I am not at all responsible for my friend's surprise. I have full confidence in the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, when I propounded the inquiry to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], if he would be kind enough to explain to the House how it happened that his tariff bill in the last Congress, originating in this House and coming back from the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, I hoped he would be frank enough to state the history of that transaction, because to have done so would have served to elucidate this point of order. But the only response I received from the gentleman from Texas was that it was done by unanimous consent. I turn to the RECORD and find that the gentleman is entirely in error. It will be remembered that this bill originated in the House, went to the Senate, was amended in the Senate and returned to the House with its amendment and a request for a conference. When the bill came back to the House, instead of its going to the Committee on Ways and Means or any other committee by unanimous consent, I find the following proceedings took place in reference to it (I read from the RECORD):

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, with an amendment by the Senate in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. REED. Subject to a point of order with reference to the measure going to the Committee of the Whole, I desire to propose that the House concur in the Senate amendment. Or, if the House determines to non-concur, that a committee of conference be granted as the Senate has requested; and upon that I wish to submit some remarks.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order that this bill must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MILLS. I reserve the point of order that the bill must first go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

[Laughter.]

And on that Mr. MILLS launches forth on the sufferings of the people, and among other things says:

Mr. Speaker, under the Constitution of the United States each House has the power to make rules to govern its own proceedings, and each House, in the manner of disposing of its business, is independent of the other. This House, in pursuance of that constitutional authority, has made a rule which requires all bills of this nature to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House, and so jealous has the House been of the purse of the people and so regardful has it been of the people's rights that it has adopted a rule that whenever a bill dealing with these great rights comes from the Senate it shall receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House.

By the rules which we have adopted we have several Calendars, and before any bill can receive consideration in this House on those Calendars it must have been reported from some of the standing committees of this House.

Further on Mr. McMILLIN said:

Now, Mr. Speaker, what are the rules of this House concerning the consideration of bills raising revenue, or, in other words, tax bills? for by the rules we propose to stand or fall, and there will be no surrender of every principle and prerogative of this House in violation of its rules and of the Constitution. Rule 20 provides, Mr. Speaker, as follows:

"Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point."

It will thus be seen that this bill must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, and not in a conference room.

Clause 3 of Rule XXIII provides:

"All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced."

Neither the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] nor the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McKINLEY] has suggested any rule under which we are forced to go to conference merely because the Senate invites us to conference. Nor can they cite such a rule. I think, Mr. Speaker, that these two rules settle it that this bill should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, and not in conference. In the next place, there is no means by which it can get to the Committee of the Whole except through a committee of this House. Hence it must first go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

And if gentlemen will point out some rule or principle by which this bill will go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union without its being referred to one of the standing committees of the House, I will be glad to see it.

The then Speaker of the House, Mr. CARLISLE, reviews the whole situation so clearly that if my friend from Texas at the beginning of this question had read this ruling it would have aided us very materially in reaching a conclusion. In the absence of his doing so I desire to read it myself. Mr. CARLISLE, the Speaker, then said:

The Chair decided the same question now presented, not only in the case of the oleomargarine bill, but upon several other occasions; yet it may not be inappropriate to restate briefly the grounds of those decisions.

And I desire to call particular attention to this:

Prior to the beginning of the Forty-ninth Congress all bills coming from the Senate and Senate amendments to House bills—went upon what was called the Speaker's table, which was one of the Calendars of the House. The business on the Speaker's table was reached precisely in the same way as the business upon any other Calendar, by a motion to proceed to its consideration; and when that motion was agreed to by the House the bills and amendments in their regular order were laid before the House, not for reference to a committee, but for immediate consideration, subject, of course, in the case of Senate bills or Senate amendments to House bills making appropriations or creating liabilities on the part of the Government, to the point of order that they must first have consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. So long as that practice continued it was in order for any gentleman, when a Senate amendment was taken up from the Speaker's table, to move to concur or non-concur, as the case might be, subject, as the Chair has stated, to the point of order that the proposition should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, if it was a proposition which the rules of the House required to go there.

And that is the case now before us—

But at the beginning of the Forty-ninth Congress the Speaker's table, as one of the Calendars of the House, was abolished; and in lieu of that proceeding the House adopted a rule which made it the duty of the Speaker every morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal, except on Monday mornings, to lay before the House—

Mark the language, "to lay before the House"—

Mr. SPRINGER. That is what we want done now.

Mr. BURROWS—

for reference, all bills, amendments, and other communications from the Senate and communications from the heads of Departments; and under the rule the invariable practice has been to send Senate amendments to House bills to the appropriate standing committee of the House, unless unanimous consent was given to concur or non-concur. So the Chair thinks that under that rule the Senate amendment must go to the Committee on Ways and Means, and can not, except by unanimous consent, go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, which is one of the House Calendars, until it has been reported back.

On the other point, as to the effect of a request by the Senate for the appointment of a committee of conference before there has been any actual disagreement between the two Houses—

And this I cite in answer to the argument of the gentleman from Texas, that it has reached that stage where the House ought to take the matter up and bring about an agreement—

Mr. CARLISLE said: The Chair has repeatedly ruled that until there has been an actual vote of disagreement between the two Houses the privileged stage of the bill has not been reached; and it can not be taken up for consideration under the other rule to which the Chair has referred, but must go to the committee.

The Chair has re-examined this rule and re-examined the practice of the House, and is constrained to adhere to the rulings heretofore made, because the Chair believes it is the only proper practice under the rule which this House itself has established and which has been the uniform practice ever since they were adopted.

Mr. CRISP. Does he refer to the change of the rules?

Mr. BURROWS. I will come to that. Now, under the rules of the House in existence when that decision was made, Rule XXIV, clause 2, provided that—

After the Journal is read and approved on each day other than Monday, the Speaker shall lay before the House for reference—

And this language, it will be seen, is very clear—

shall lay before the House for reference messages from the Senate, reports and communications from the heads of Departments and other communications addressed to the House, and also such bills, resolutions, and other messages from the Senate as may have been received on previous days.

The same as our rule, so far as these documents are concerned. Now, the rule is changed in this, so as to provide as far as business on the Speaker's table is concerned:

Business on the Speaker's table shall be disposed of as follows:

It does not say "immediately after the reading of the Journal," as in the old rule.

Mr. SPRINGER. But will the gentleman read that clause of the rule providing for the disposal of business on the Speaker's table? It comes before that.

Mr. BURROWS. It comes after the disposal of the morning hour, and provides specifically for the disposition of the business on the Speaker's table.

"Messages from the President," not laid before the House, but "referred to the appropriate committees without debate."

Mr. SPRINGER. But the gentleman does not read the rule for the disposition of business on the Speaker's table. Even messages have always been laid before the House.

Mr. BURROWS. I decline to yield to the gentleman just now. I want to compare these rules.

Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committees without debate.

And if my friend from Illinois will listen to this rule he will not have to ask the question:

Reports and communications from the heads of Departments and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred—

By whom?—

May be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills.

Now, how are public bills referred under the rules?

Mr. CRISP. Read further. Certain classes of bills are not so referred.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand.

Mr. CRISP. The Speaker says this comes in that class.

Mr. BURROWS. I am not discussing that question now. I am now discussing simply the reference.

Mr. CRISP. That is where the change of rule comes in. You do not read it.

Mr. BURROWS. It is not, I beg my friend's pardon. The other rule provides these messages should be laid before the House. This does not.

Mr. CRISP. The point is this, that under the old rule there was no bill on the Speaker's table, which was amended by the Senate, which without unanimous consent could be passed upon by the House; but under these rules bills so amended, without unanimous consent, may be and must be passed upon by the House.

Mr. CONGER. Certain bills, but not this bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I have not reached that point. I want to discuss this point, that under this rule these messages and bills and communications from the Senate are not to be laid before the House, but they may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills; these references to be made in the same manner as public bills are referred, carrying with the reference the right to correct which the reference of public bills carries. Now, turning right back to our rule, how are public bills referred? for that is the language of this rule:

In the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills.

How are public bills referred?

All other bills, memorials, and resolutions may, in like manner, be delivered, indorsed with the names of the persons introducing them, to the Speaker, to be by him referred.

But the rule provides that a correction may be made if there is an erroneous reference, and this rule says that these references are to be made in the same manner as public bills are referred, and public bills, under the rules, are referred by the Speaker, and by the Speaker only. Can anything be put plainer in the English language?

Mr. CRISP. My friend omits to quote the section under which it is claimed this bill ought to be referred to the House.

Mr. BURROWS. I was discussing this, item by item. I have passed that point, and now I will go to the next.

Mr. CRISP. We claim that this is one of the bills that the Speaker must submit under that very rule which you fail to read.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand. Now, what is the rest of that rule? The rule is broad and general:

Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committees without debate. Reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills.

It is done by the Speaker.

But House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole—

In other words, that do not carry appropriations—may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills, etc.

That is my friend's point.

Mr. CRISP. And that was not in the old rules at all. That is the distinction.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand my friend's point.

Mr. CRISP. And the further point that the Speaker has held expressly that this bill is one which does not require consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURROWS. I am not discussing that question. I am discussing this rule and nothing else.

Mr. CRISP. You are getting away from the point.

Mr. BURROWS. And it is not only the right of the Speaker, but it is his duty, to refer these measures coming from the Senate; that is, House bills with Senate amendments. He is directed by the rule to do it, and he would be derelict in the discharge of his duties if he did not do it.

But what bills are excepted?

House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of.

The Speaker looks over the bills, and if a bill carries an appropriation it is his duty to refer it. If it does not carry an appropriation it is his duty not to refer it, but to lay it before the House, and it is the bills upon which no appropriation is borne, bills which need not be considered in the Committee of the Whole, that the House may instanter dispose of; but any bill that carries an appropriation, the rule enjoins upon the Speaker to refer that bill just as he refers a public bill introduced by a member of this House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BURROWS. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I simply wish to say that the practice of the House as to bills is precisely that which the Speaker did with reference to this bill. At haphazard I turn to page 6485. Here are Senate bills referred under clause 2 of Rule IV, certainly a dozen of them, and I will find twenty places in that RECORD where the Speaker has referred bills like this precisely as he referred this bill, and that has been the uniform practice of the House this session.

Mr. MILLS. My friend from Michigan has made a very artful presentation of his side of the question. He reminds me of an incident that I once heard of in the old days when the ladies wore top-knots and when the ministers thought it was wicked for them to do so; and one of them reproved one of the sisters for doing it. She told him that if he would show her where the Scripture said a top-knot was wrong she would abandon it. He said very well, he would preach a sermon on that subject and convince her. So he took his Bible on Sunday and turned to that passage where the inspired writer was predicting the downfall of the city of Jerusalem, and where he said "Let him that is upon the house top not come down." He took the latter part of the text and preached a sermon from the words, "Top not, come down." [Laughter.]

Now, my friend has shown from the record that there was a controversy in this House under the old rules, which he seems to have forgotten have been abandoned—the controversy about referring the tariff bill of two years ago. In that controversy he has thought proper to read what I said to the House on the one side and failed to read what he said on the other side. Now, it seems that we have swapped sides on that question, and he is where he was not in that contest, but right on the opposite side, and contending for the opposite principle; and so it is that he and I have changed positions. Why? It is because, Mr. Speaker, the rules of the House have changed. The decision in that case was made by the distinguished Speaker who sat in the Speaker's chair during that session of Congress under the then existing rules of the House, and not under the present rules. The point which I have made is that under the existing rules of this House this bill remains upon the Speaker's table to be disposed of as the House shall determine, and not the Speaker.

That is the question; and my friend from Ohio who made his speech created a man of straw and amused himself for some considerable time in knocking it to pieces to the delectation of his friends on the other side. He said that the resolution which I have offered admitted that the House had referred the bill; that then we proposed to determine that the House illegally did it, and now to resolve that the House did not do it. Now, the resolution states no such thing. The resolution states that the Speaker has done what the House ought to have done; what the House alone had the power to do; that the Speaker did not have the authority of this House to do what he did do; that what he did do was illegal, and this House simply declares itself, asserting that that act was illegal; and that is what my resolution proposes to do.

Now, the gentleman has read the rules of the present House in reference to the reference of bills. I stated them in my opening remarks. All private bills when first introduced into this House may be referred by the Speaker under the existing rules to the committee which he thinks has jurisdiction over the subject. Another provision of the rules says:

All public bills originating in this House may be referred by the Speaker.

And still another provision which says:

All Senate bills coming into this House may be referred.

And then a provision comes which says that—

All House bills coming back with Senate amendments shall be disposed of as the House shall determine.

And that is the question before you.

Now, here is a House bill which has been considered by all the committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, and it comes back with an amendment, and what says the rule? The rule says that—

House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of as the House may determine—

Not the Speaker.

Now, then, that is what I ask for: that this House shall determine what disposition shall be made of that bill; that the Speaker shall not have the power to send it to any committee; that he shall not have the power that he would have with a bill which originated in the House; and all the sophistry and all the artful dodging that may be brought to bear on this question can not confound that proposition. There are two lines that are as clear as light: that conferring the jurisdiction upon this House upon that particular bill; and the rules of the old House are not the rules of this House; but it is the rules of this House that determine this question. I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I want to address myself to the consideration of the question raised by the resolution and the point of order. The point of order as made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] seems to me to be clearly in error, even if all that has been said by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and other gentlemen who take that view of the power of the Speaker be correct. The question of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois is that it may be out of order for the House to strike from the Journal, a provision in it? The power of the House over the Journal is constitutional. It does not become the Journal until the House has approved it. It is the minutes of the Clerk. Under our rules the Clerk is ordered to make up a paper which, in loose language, we call the Journal, but it is simply his minutes; and until it receives our approval it is not the Journal. Therefore I beg the attention of the Speaker to the point that the power of the House over that paper is absolute.

It is not for the Speaker to decide that any entry made in that paper must have the imprimatur of the House, because it is that action of the House which gives to the Journal verity. It is that which makes the statement a journal, and changes its entire nature from an unofficial paper, having no verity, to an official paper, conclusive and exclusive, the sole evidence of what has been done—the conclusive evidence of what has been done. So that I confess I was surprised to hear the gentleman from Illinois say that because the Speaker had the power to do this, because the Speaker had done this, that therefore it followed as a question of order that the House could not vote upon whether it would order this Journal approved. This consideration may well be submitted to the House when the House passes upon the proposition contained in the resolution. The "whereas" of the resolution, Mr. Speaker, does not affect the substance of the question. That can easily be stricken from it, and the question of order goes to the resolution, and the resolution is "that this entry be stricken out."

Now, it can not possibly be that a motion to strike out an entry made by the Clerk is subject to any point of order. It is not a pure question of power or of fact, but a mixed question of power and of fact. If it be a fact, it may yet be improper to be put in the Journal, for only those acts ought to be put in the Journal which the House has acted upon and are of the order of its business. The Journal does not include all that happens in the House. It does not include the debate. It includes only what is done by this House or by its officers in its presence and by its order which is necessary to a fair and just historical narration of its action. So that I do not see how the point of order can be sustained, even if the view as to the power and propriety of the action of the Speaker taken by the gentlemen on the other side is correct. The action of the Speaker not in the presence of the House and as Speaker acting officially is not the action of the House except when it is taken under the order of the House and in the scope of the authority conferred upon him in the rules.

I admit in all its force the proposition laid down by some gentleman on the other side, that the Speaker is a constituent factor in the transaction of the business of the House, and he is a most important one. I agree that every Speaker, by the very nature of his office, is necessarily the organ of the House, its representative, empowered in its name to act; and, acting within the scope of his authority, whether his action be erroneous or not, it is in fact and in law the action of the House until reversed or corrected. Therefore, the resolution to strike from the Journal this particular entry must necessarily be based upon the proposition that the Speaker, in his chamber and not in the presence of the House, did that which he had no power to do; not that he acted erroneously, but that he acted illegally in the sense that he overstepped the authority given to him.

I can not imagine why my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], who is so able a lawyer, could for a moment have been confused about the clear distinction between the erroneous execution of a power and an illegal attempt to execute a power. An agent authorized to do a particular act may do it improperly, or may do it in such a way as may well be said to be erroneous, but when he does an act beyond the scope of his authority it is not merely erroneous, but it is void. Now, if the Speaker had a right, in his chamber, to refer this bill, then I admit that an erroneous reference of the bill can not be corrected except under the provision of the other rule. Of course that is impracticable, but it is the only mode open to the House. That mode is, first, by unanimous consent, which, of course, would not be given; second, upon the motion of the committee claiming jurisdiction of the bill or by the return of the bill by the committee to whom it was referred, which of course would not be made in this case. So that if it be an erroneous reference the House is powerless.

But my judgment is that it was not an erroneous reference, but an illegal reference. I do not mean to say that this proposition is free from doubt. On the contrary, dealing with the House with entire candor, as I endeavor to do on all occasions, I say that it is a very doubtful question. It is a case which, under a fair construction of the provisions of these rules in the light of the decisions under the former rules, presents a question of very grave doubt, and for one, if the question had never been passed upon by the Speaker, I would not have resisted this reference. But when the Speaker made the reference in the other case to which reference has been made, having studied these rules with some care, and having very grave doubt in my own mind upon the point in question, I sent for the bill so that I might know what was the real gist of the Speaker's decision, and I confess that I came to the conclusion that his decision was right.

His construction applied to a case where there was an appropriation, for it is perfectly clear that the Speaker was mistaken when he said in that case that there was no appropriation, and I think it is clear from the colloquy which took place that he meant to correct that mistaken statement of his. Of course, we all know how these things are done at the Speaker's table, in a hurry, the bill read hurriedly, and he relying on the statement of somebody that there was no appropriation, but the Speaker no doubt subsequently looked at the bill and proceeded to change the position he had taken. Not that in his previous statement he was misleading the House; not that what was done was not done openly and frankly, because I believe it was so done, and that there was no covert or concealed action or purpose, not anything that was in any way improper.

It was simply a mistake of the Speaker in an attempt to reach a just conclusion in a hurry. In that case the House had passed a bill authorizing the condemnation of a certain piece of ground and appropriating a certain fixed amount. The Senate took the bill, changed, by way of amendment, the particular plot of ground and put in a different one, and erased the fixed appropriation and put in an indefinite one. The bill was therefore in principle on all fours with this bill. When that bill got to the Speaker's table it had to be disposed of, and the proper disposition of it the Speaker held was to submit it to the House, and the Speaker having submitted it to the House, nobody made the point of order that it should be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

If the point of order had been made on that bill, then there would have arisen these questions for the Speaker to decide: First, the proposition that the bill having been considered in Committee of the Whole in the House it was not within the spirit of the rule, and therefore did not have to be considered in Committee of the Whole again. Or he could have decided that the amendment presented a different form of appropriation from that made in the House bill, not merely a change of amount, but an entirely different form of appropriation, and would therefore have to be considered in Committee of the Whole; and then what would the Speaker have done? He would have referred the bill to the Committee of the Whole and it would have gone on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole, and that would have been the simple disposition of it, and, it seems to me, to be the proper disposition.

Here is the reference which the Speaker made in the case of a bill in which there was no special interest, which attracted no special attention, in which no great party issue was involved, and as to which there was no reason why he should not decide it according to the best judgment of the trained parliamentarian who is the author of the rule. And in either event, as is suggested to me by a friend, it would be subject to the control of the House.

I call the attention of the House to that colloquy, and I hold in my hand, subject to inspection, the bill (H. R. 407) as amended by the Senate:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 3, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILLBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 407) to authorize the acquisition of certain parcels of real estate embraced in square No. 380 of the city of Washington, to provide an eligible site for a city post-office; said bill having been passed by the Senate with amendments and with a request for a conference thereon with the House.

The amendments were read.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. How does this bill come before the House? Is it a conference report?

The SPEAKER. Is it a House bill with Senate amendments?

Mr. ROGERS. Does it fall within clause 3 of Rule XXIV? Does not the bill carry an appropriation?

Mr. MILLIKEN. The bill has already been considered by the House in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER (after examining the bill). There is no appropriation in the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. Does it not involve an appropriation or a charge on the Treasury?

The SPEAKER. The House bill has been considered in Committee of the Whole. Mr. ROGERS. That is not the point I am trying to get at. I simply wanted to know whether this is one of the bills that can be appropriately laid before the House at this time under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so thinks.

Mr. ROGERS. That is all. I simply wanted to understand the practice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] moves that the House disagree to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently announced the appointment of Mr. MILLIKEN, Mr. LEHLBACH, and Mr. OLIVER as conferees on the part of the House.

Now, therefore, when this bill came here from the Senate, it came under the rule as construed by the present Speaker. Let us not refine the point away. The Speaker may have been in error. No doubt if he is convinced that he was in error in that decision he will frankly say so in reversing it. But this bill came here under a decision made by the present Speaker upon a bill which any lawyer who takes it up and examines it will find it difficult to distinguish on principle from this one. Of course there are points of difference. No two bills are exactly on all fours. There is always some difference to be found between them. But the judgments of the Speaker of the House are somewhat like the decisions of the Chief-Justice of the United States. They are not mere temporary make-shifts for party supremacy in the struggles on the floor of the House or in the political struggles of the day. They are not the forgotten statements that arise amid excited disputes upon the floor.

The Speaker stands as the representative of the parliamentary law like the justices of the Supreme Court, or like the Chief-Justice of that court, of "the law of the land," and therefore his decisions are the decisions which ought to be—which I will not intimate are not—derived from his very best judgment, and not from the desire to accomplish party advantage or some party supremacy and make votes at the polls; and it can not be that any lawyer can draw a distinction in principle between that decision and this.

But my friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], always able, and if he will not take it as an unkind criticism I might say not always ingenuous, for the vigor of his mind and his intense desire to succeed sometimes blind him to the ingenuousness of the arguments he uses, illustrates the position he takes by a citation from a decision of ex-Speaker CARLISLE, decided on a point of order raised by the present Speaker of the House, and argued by my friend from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY], chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, on January 26, 1887, on the return of the Mills bill with the Senate substitute. The two cases are in some respects analogous, and that decision does shed light upon the theory raised here by gentlemen who submit this point of order. That decision was under the old rules, and would control the decision in this case if the old rules were in operation. But my friend was not entirely ingenuous when he read with great emphasis certain quotations from the decision of Mr. CARLISLE on that question. Under the rules prior to the Forty-ninth Congress there was a provision for a calendar known as the Speaker's table. A change was made subsequently in the rules, and in reference to this Mr. CARLISLE said:

At the beginning of the Forty-ninth Congress the Speaker's table, as one of the calendars of the House, was abolished; and in lieu of that proceeding the House adopted a rule which made it the duty of the Speaker every morning immediately after the reading of the Journal, except on Monday mornings, to lay before the House—to lay before the House for reference all bills, amendments, and other communications from the Senate and communications from heads of Departments.

And my friend says the emphatic pivotal words of the opinion are "to lay before the House"—

The controlling phrase of this opinion is "all bills, amendments, and other communications from the Senate," and these—"all"—were to be laid before the House "for reference," and this is clear, because under the rule as it then was, all messages, all bills, all communications came to the Speaker, and it was the Speaker's duty to lay them before the House solely for reference; and there was no other mode of consideration except by reference or a report from a committee. Now, let us see what the present Speaker did. I am not speaking of the Speaker's practice. I have no criticism to make on the cases as referred to by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON], my friend who is always clamorous for silver, and yet always voting in such a way as to tie his hands so that he can not vote to get more silver; who always succeeds in tying his hands so as to prevent getting what he wants. It may be that the Speaker has sent such bills to committees. I have not examined; no question was made; no decision announced. It is true that he was not subject to the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress which required that all messages which came to the Speaker's table shall by him be laid before the House for reference, but under the new rules.

Let us see what are the changes in the present rules. All bills and communications must come to the Speaker's table now as then and the Speaker must in public clear his table. My friend from Michigan shakes his head.

Mr. BURROWS. Read the language of the rule.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will. I will read the exact text of the rule, because I want to treat this whole subject as a lawyer would treat an intricate question of law. First, then, under Rule XXIV, it is of the Speaker's duty to see that the daily order of business as therein prescribed is carried out. He is the organ of the House to carry out that order of business. What is that daily order of business? First, prayer by the Chaplain. The Speaker does not do the praying; but he sees, first, that all of us rise in our places and that we stand with proper decorum until the Chaplain offers prayer; and then comes the reading and approval of the Journal. Third, the correction of reference of public bills; and when that is disposed of, fourth, "disposal of business on the Speaker's table." How, where, when is "this disposal" to be made?

In the same presence, under the same conditions, and by the same authority as he supervises the transaction of the other prescribed duties. Noscitur a sociis is a well established canon of construction. This duty is incumbent upon the Speaker in the presence of the House, as the organ of the House. This must be the meaning of this rule of the House.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. One moment. I will gladly give way to my friend from Ohio after awhile. I want first to get through with the comparison between these rules.

In the presence of the House, as the Speaker of the House, in the fixed order of business prescribed by the rules of the House, the Speaker goes to the business on the Speaker's table, and disposes of it. When we come to the second section of that rule—

(2) The business on the Speaker's table shall be disposed of as follows: Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committees without debate.

That must be done in open House. Second:

Reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the House.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH rose.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I see my friend rises. I can not yield to him just at present.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I suppose I have a right to stand. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Undoubtedly; and I am very glad, however powerful my argument has been, that you are able to stand it. Though, when I have seen my friend from Ohio in the last seven months approve what he has, I am not surprised at anything he can stand. [Laughter.] There is nothing that can be done on either side of the House that, in the superabundance of his good humor, he would not stand, after what I have seen him stand in the last few months.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman will confine himself to the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I freely admit, Mr. Speaker, that I was not confining myself to the point of order in intimating that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] could stand all the points of order made by all the gentlemen on the floor, even by my friend from Illinois; and I take the censure of the Chair, I being the first person to whom it has been given to-day, with the proper degree of respect, I hope, to the Chair.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will my friend yield to me for a question just there?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is it on the point of order?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. You are certain it is on the point of order?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Then I yield.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman suggests that it is the duty of the Speaker publicly to dispatch business under the rule to which he has called the attention of the House. There is a certain part of that business, my friend will observe, which he disposes of as he does of the bills.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I was just coming to that.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I want to call my friend's attention to that. The other may be disposed of by the House without reference, but the rule itself provides that as to certain bills they shall be disposed of as they are disposed of when presented by members of the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No such rule.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Read it and see.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. There is no such rule. That is what I was coming to. The gentleman has construed a rule by changing a word entirely. I say that the Order of Business No. 4 is the disposal of the business upon the Speaker's table. That must be done publicly. That is fourth. I wish the gentleman would get his copy of the rules and follow me, because I want him to consider it carefully. It is in language drawn, I have no doubt, by the Speaker himself, and drawn, I think, with great care, capable, I freely admit, of two constructions, but capable, I think, of that construction which the Chair himself put upon it on the 3d of June. He is engaged in the disposition of public business when disposing of the business on the Speaker's table. Messages of the President are put first, and he reads them.

Now the next part of that rule is:

Reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may—

Not "shall," as my friend reads it—may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by members.

Now, therefore, it is not an obligation upon the Speaker to do it privately. It is a grant of permission, and as an exception, that he may do it privately. It is not his duty to do it privately. He is not only not guilty of the dereliction of which my friend from Michigan spoke so eloquently if he does not act privately, but he simply has permission to do it. The obligation is to do it publicly, but the permission is, as an exception, to do it privately. Under this permission he has the right to do it, and if this bill comes within its scope, then of course he had the right to make this reference. What is the next?

House bills with Senate amendments—are especially excepted.

Now, the description of "bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate" which he has the right to refer privately must have a technical meaning. The word "bills" there evidently means Senate bills, not House bills. "Bills from the Senate" means bills passed by the Senate. "Resolutions from the Senate" means resolutions passed by the Senate and sent here; so that in the word "message" must be found the construction contended for, and does include House bills with Senate amendments. But "House bills with Senate amendments" are expressly taken out of the operation of the rule, and as to them this clause—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH rose.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Please let me read the clause, and then I will answer any question my friend may wish to ask.

But bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole—shall have what done to them? Why, they may be disposed of at once, as the House may determine.

Senate bills, substantially as House bills already favorably reported by a committee of the House, not required to be considered in a Committee of the Whole, may be disposed of in the same manner on motion, as directed. Now, how is the House to know what is contained in the bills, and whether they come within this rule? The Speaker acts as our organ. He acts subject to our will. He submits all questions when decided to the judgment of the House, so they may be appealed from. How is the House to know when a House bill with Senate amendments is or is not subject to the point of order that it should be considered in the Committee of the Whole, except by the action being done openly before the House? How that a Senate bill is a bill substantially like a House bill already favorably reported by the Committee, except by having the bills laid before it; and if any decision on such bills is made by the Speaker it is a decision as Speaker, not merely as to the reference of a bill, but as to its nature, provisions, and the right of the House to act upon at once, and such decision must be in his chair as Speaker of the House, and in the presence of the House, upon which a member has a right to be heard, a right to have the bill openly read, examined, and compared, and from which a member has a right to take an appeal; on which appeal the House has a right to pass.

Therefore you must construe those rules in consonance with the rights of the House and its members and so as not to widen the exception, but to limit it, as it is a canon of construction that the general provisions of a statute are to be modified, explained, and construed in the light of a proviso. This power of the Speaker to privately refer bills must not be construed to refer to Senate bills which are of the same nature as House bills favorably reported, or House bills with Senate amendments; but as to them the Speaker decides in the presence of the House. Whether the Speaker decides rightfully or wrongfully is a question that must be determined by the House, and the House must have the power to overrule that decision by a direct vote on appeal made at the time of the decision. It is not a reference. I beg the gentleman to read that clause again. This is not a power of reference.

The House in this rule reserves the power to act at once on bills of a certain description. As to them there can be no reference until the House has an opportunity to take action. As to other bills the Speaker has a power of reference. By whom is the decision to be made, and when? Surely when these bills are on the Speaker's table and before a reference, and surely by the House, who only has the power to act. If the bill be a House bill with a Senate amendment, creating a change or making an appropriation, and that point of order be made, then it goes to that Calendar, or on motion the House can resolve itself into Committee of the Whole and consider it.

These be questions which the House has the right to pass upon, upon which Representatives have the right to be heard, and by this construction every clause and phrase of the rule are given full and consistent effect. The general rule is that the Speaker must act in his chair in the presence of the House. There is an exception; it ought not by inference to be widened; it is not necessary to do so; it is only by a forced construction that it can be done.

Now I will answer any question that my friend, Mr. BUTTERWORTH, may desire to ask.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I beg to call attention—

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Does the Speaker take me off the floor for yielding to a question asked by the gentleman from Ohio?

The SPEAKER. Not in the least. The Chair supposed the gentleman had ceased. The gentleman was taking his seat.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Ohio wished to ask me a question. I was simply going back to my seat to get another paper.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has not concluded the Chair has no intention to take him off the floor. The Chair supposed he had concluded.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not desire to interrupt the gentleman, except to ask him a question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is no interruption. I was simply trying to be courteous to the gentleman from Ohio who wished to ask a question. I beg the gentleman from Ohio to believe that nothing could make me treat him discourteously.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is always courteous. My friend will observe, referring to the words he omits to call special attention to, that these bills may be referred—may be referred, I admit, but in the same manner as certain other bills. How are these bills referred? By the Speaker, with reference to the subject-matter, and the line is drawn between those bills which the House may dispose of without reference and those bills which should be referred by reason of their subject-matter. And the Speaker, in my judgment, is called upon to decide that question precisely as he does in the original reference; that is, in disposing of this bill he may do it in the same manner that he disposes of the bills which are presented by members of the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will say frankly that under that clause the Speaker has the right, as to bills described therein, to refer them precisely as he does the public bills introduced by members, and that, of course, is to a standing committee. He can not refer them to anything but a standing committee. As to those public bills which are introduced by members, he must refer them to standing committees; but the argument that I was trying to make was that when you consider the whole rule, the fourth clause of the first section of that Rule XXIV and the first clause of section 2 of this rule, about messages from the President and the provisions in the latter clause, that this particular bill, a House bill with Senate amendments, does not come within the clause of the rule which confers permission to the Speaker to refer privately, and the reason is perfectly clear, all bills ought to be considered by a committee.

This is the principle that lies at the foundation of the legislation of the House. That committee reports it—it goes upon the Calendar. The Calendar has been presumed heretofore to be the indication of how the bill is to be considered. If it went upon the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, then it was supposed to be considered in Committee of the Whole under the rules of that committee. That, however, has ceased to be anything but historical as to most of the important bills of the House; but the reason why a bill should be referred to a standing committee does not hold good with reference to a bill which has first been considered in the House, then considered in the Senate, and sent back here. The bill has been considered privately in the committee here, publicly on the floor, has gone to the Senate, been considered by a committee privately there, discussed there, and amended there, and it then comes back here, and there is no reason why there should be any further consideration by a standing committee here.

Mr. Speaker, I have tried to confine myself to a discussion of the question, and to make it clear that the action of the Speaker is not valid until we give it our sanction.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Before my friend passes from that, I beg to call his attention to the fact that under the old rules the words used are not "shall be," but "may be" referred, and he is aware that the words "may be" are very often construed as "shall be," perhaps quite as often as the word "shall" is construed as "shall."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I was going to say the Speaker is the organ of the House, and this act of the Speaker gets no validity until we approve this Journal to-day. Whether it goes off on a point of order, or whether the Speaker holds the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois good, so that we shall not have the right to have a vote upon that question, or whether the Journal is approved by a vote of the House, it is the House which makes this reference, and not the Speaker.

I presume no man will be clearer than the present Speaker of the House in the announcement of the principle that he acts in no other way than as the organ of the House; that he speaks in its name, uttering its voice, and doing its will. Now, we refuse to give validity to this action of his by adopting this resolution as now drawn, drawn as we understand to be in accordance with existing facts, that some order made by him in a way he thought proper was delivered to the Clerk, and that then the Clerk, in the execution of what he believed to be his duty, entered it upon the Journal, and it was done without legal authority and was void; was beyond the power granted and was a nullity, and it was fair and frank in the gentleman from Texas to so draw his resolution as to show that the order had been entered by the Speaker, not as a criticism of the action of the Speaker, except as to the claim of authority, which is a pure question of law under the rules. I suppose no Speaker, and certainly not the present Speaker, would claim that he can act officially except in obedience to the law and within the authority granted, and that any act not so authorized is binding upon the House and has any place in its Journal.

We give validity to this reference by our action, and a vote upon the approval of this Journal is a vote that sends this bill to that committee. It is not the act of the Speaker; it is not the act of a Representative from Maine; it is the act done by this House, for the Speaker acts only in the name of this House in sending it there, and it would be indorsed by the votes of the Representatives on this floor. Let us deal frankly with each other. He who votes to sustain that reference gives it whatever validity it can have. It is that act which buries it in that committee or gives to that committee the right to bring it out. Thus when we are passing upon this question we are not passing on a question as to what is due the Speaker or of what is the respect due the Speaker, but is a respectful construction of his acts as the incumbent of the chair. It is that we discharge our duties upon this floor on this question as to whether we shall take this bill up and act upon it. We have the power to act upon it.

The Speaker has no right to assume that if under the rules it ought to go to the Committee of the Whole some member will raise that point of order. The House has the right by unanimous consent, without a point of order, even if it ought to go to the Committee of the Whole, to take it up and consider it. I think upon this important matter the Speaker has no right to act in his private chamber upon the hypothesis that any member of this House will interpose a point of order to the settlement of this great question quieting the business interests dependent upon it, restoring stability to trade, removing obstructions to the growth of prosperity, and making a settlement of matters of great public concern. The whole matter depends upon the House. Gentlemen have said that the majority has all power. It depends upon that majority frankly to give the House the right to legislate or frankly to say they will not. They can not straddle this position under the pretense of sustaining the Speaker and go before the bar of this country under the cover of a set of rules which they themselves have made. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to pass upon this question whenever the House is ready.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to submit some very brief observations on this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend until a message has been received from the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 8831) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River, at or near Kansas City, Kans., and not over 10 miles above the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railway bridge at Kansas City, Mo.," approved March 1, 1889.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 138) to increase the number of members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and to fill vacancies in such board, asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes thereon, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. MANDERSON, and Mr. WALTHALL.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the following: A joint resolution (S. R. 95) to surrender certain bonds, drafts, and other papers in the Department of State to Robert S. Hargous, administrator of Louis S. Hargous, deceased; in which concurrence was asked.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States, was delivered to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced the approval of acts of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 8295) to authorize the purchase of certain public lands by the city of Buffalo, Wyo., and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 10390) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the last quarter of the fiscal year 1890, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 1306) for the relief of the Southern Exposition at Louisville, Ky.; and

An act (H. R. 10906) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the payment of pensions, and for the expenses of the Eleventh Census, for the fiscal year 1890, and for other purposes.

APPROVAL OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. CUTCHEON. With the intimation of the Chair, I will not consume the time of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires first that the House, if any member of it has that impression, should rid itself of the idea that any unusual procedure has taken place in connection with this bill. The reference of bills of this kind and in this way has been of daily occurrence since the adoption of the present rules of the House. The Chair desires also that the House should know that this particular transaction did not take place in a corner. In the regular course of business the officer of the House to whom the Speaker has intrusted the clerical work of the reference of bills, the Journal clerk, informed the Speaker that upon his list of bills which were to be referred, under the rules, to committees of the House, in the same manner as hundreds, and possibly thousands, of bills have been referred heretofore, was the bill known as the bill for silver coinage which had come from the Senate, and the Chair was asked if he had any particular direction to make in regard to it.

Knowing the bill to be one of grave public importance and anxious that he might have all the light that could be thrown upon it, he consulted with two members upon the other side of the Committee on Rules, also the gentleman who was specially in charge of the bill upon the Democratic side, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], and with another gentleman upon the left of the Chair, not for the purpose of throwing any responsibility upon them, but for the purpose of obtaining whatever light it might be possible to obtain in that way. After listening to and conversing with those gentlemen it seemed very clear to the Speaker that the rules of the House covered the question and that his duty was to treat this bill the same as he would treat any other. Accordingly, the Clerk was not directed to make any change in regard to the reference. It is due to the House, since the question has been made—and the Chair is appreciative of the courteous manner in which the question has been discussed—it is due to the House that the Chair should give the reasons which induced him to make such reference and to feel perfectly clear that that reference was in accordance with the rules of the House.

The House must bear in mind that this is not a question of politics or of currency, but a question of parliamentary law, and that upon its decision depends the carrying out of the system of rules which the House has adopted. That system of rules, like every other, is an evolution from the preceding rules. Under the former rules of the House every bill which came from the Senate had to be referred in open House to a committee. No other motion was permissible unless by unanimous consent. When the tariff bill, for instance, came over here, suggestion was made that it go at once to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, but the Speaker ruled that it should go to the Committee on Ways and Means, and it went there. The only control which the House had left to itself, under its rules, was to change the reference if it was not satisfied with the reference directed by the Speaker. Under the present system of rules the same reference is to be given to Senate bills, because the same language which applied to them then is applied to them now. The only difference is that, instead of being done in open House, it is done by the Speaker, with a right of correction which the House thought ample; because, if the committee to whom the bill was wrongfully referred did not desire it or if there was another committee that thought the bill ought rightfully to be referred to them, either committee could make a motion in open House (there being a special provision in the order of business for the time of that motion) for a change of reference.

Such had been the case for a long time with petitions. Such had been the case for a considerable time with private bills, and under the new rules of the House it was made so with regard to public bills, both those sent in by members and those which came from the Senate. But the new rules made two exceptions: first, Senate bills the like of which had been passed upon favorably by a committee of the House could be taken up and disposed of when that committee voted that it should be done whenever the bills came over from the Senate; second, House bills with Senate amendments which were not subject to be considered in Committee of the Whole, could also be laid before the House for its disposal. The question is, Was this a House bill? Undoubtedly it was. Did it have Senate amendments? Unquestionably. The third test is: Does it contain provisions which under our rules require it to be considered in a Committee of the Whole? There was a provision in the original House bill by which certain bullion was to be purchased, for coinage or otherwise, and certificates were to be issued.

The Senate amendment was an amendment for free coinage, or for fashioning the silver into bars without charge to those who deposited it, and for that an appropriation was made. It has been said that the House dispensed with the consideration of the original bill in Committee of the Whole. That is perfectly true, and it was perfectly competent for the House in a proper way so to do. But the fact that the House dispensed with the consideration in Committee of the Whole of a provision which it knew, does not in any way indicate that it was its intention to dispose in the same way of an amendment which it did not know. This being a Senate amendment, the question is, What rule of the House is applicable to it? And the Chair desires to call the attention of the House to the very strong language of the rule, which is Rule XX. It does not content itself with saying that an amendment of the Senate to a House bill shall be subject to the point of order, but it says any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order. If there is anything clear in parliamentary law, it is that this bill was one of those that would be properly considered in a Committee of the Whole, and consequently was not within the exception. What, then, was the duty of the Speaker in regard to it? Obviously, to refer it in the same manner in which hundreds and thousands of bills have been referred at this session.

Some gentlemen contend, not many, but some contend that it was not intended that bills which came from the Senate, which were subject to the point of order under Rule XX, should go to a committee at all, but must go directly to the Calendar. The Chair thinks that if any gentleman will carefully examine the rule he will perceive that it is impossible for the bill to go to the Calendar in that manner.

The Chair desires also to animadvert upon a decision which has been the subject of so much studied compliment on the part of the gentleman from Kentucky, a decision said to have been made with regard to a bill which came over from the Senate. The fact that that bill contained an appropriation or required an appropriation for a matter different from the House bill was not in any way called to the attention of the Chair, and there are too many lawyers in this House for the House to fail to comprehend that when the matter is not brought to the attention of the presiding officer or the judge he can not be making a direct decision upon that point.

If the Chair recollects this matter correctly, the answer which was made to the inquiry of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] was with reference to the request, or the Chair had in mind rather the request, for a conference on the part of the Senate. The former Speaker of the House decided both ways in regard to that question of asking for a conference, that it was to be permitted, and afterwards, upon what was perhaps maturer consideration, that it was not. The present occupant of the chair had a different opinion, and, until argument convinced him to the contrary, he would be disposed to regard that as a desirable thing; not meaning, however, now or at any other time, except at the proper time, to enter into the consideration of the question whether the point of order upon an appropriation bill would send it to the committee even if the conference had been asked by the Senate.

But the particular point of order which has been presented here by the gentleman from Illinois puts the Chair in a position somewhat of embarrassment, because the proposed action of the House is the declaration that an error has been made in parliamentary law upon this subject, and it is proposed to erase from the Journal a statement of fact. While the Chair might have some doubt upon that point of order, it feels this to be a question which the House ought to determine. As to what would be the effect of overruling a statement in the Journal which was a fact would have to be a matter of afterconsideration. But it is a matter now for consideration on the part of the House. If the House sees fit to put anything which is or is not a fact into its Journal, the Chair has no means of interfering and no desire to interfere, and the Chair will therefore overrule the point of order and submit the question on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a question of personal privilege. In order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the statement of the Speaker with reference to gentlemen consulted in connection with this subject, I wish to state that I received a communication through the Speaker's clerk stating that the Speaker desired to see me in his room. I called upon the Speaker in obedience to that summons. The Speaker there contended, as he contends now, that he had authority under the rules to send this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. I want to state, however, that I insisted then, as I do now, that the matter had to be considered by the House, and I gave no assent at that time to the opinion of the Speaker, as I do not at this time.

I wish to say further that I make this statement in order that I may be understood. The fact that the Speaker stated that I had been consulted might convey a wrong impression as to my position, and I had supposed at any rate the bill would come before the House from the Speaker's table for reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that he did not intend to convey any inference in regard to the action of the gentleman from Missouri other than he has himself stated. It was solely on the point mentioned, and the matter was not in any way secret.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments, Mr. Speaker. I suppose the Speaker's statement would probably convey the correct idea; but it is not improper to state, as the Speaker would bear witness, that at the time of this consultation I suggested the propriety of whatever was done being done in open House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did; and the Chair gave it careful consideration.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Speaker has correctly stated, so far as I am concerned, what took place: that he submitted this question of the construction of this rule to myself, and I gave the opinion announced by the Chair. I take pleasure in saying here that, so far as I know, there was no effort on the part of the Chair to do any other thing than what was fair about this matter. The opinion given by me was rather an off-hand opinion, and I desire to state that I have some difficulty in my own mind, and I wish to state that fact to the House.

Whatever may be the conclusion of the House or the opinions of other gentlemen on this question, I have no doubt the Speaker has undertaken to reach a right conclusion in the matter; but in the course of the discussion a difficulty has arisen in my mind which I wish to present. It occurs under Rule XXIV, section 2:

2. Business on the Speaker's table shall be disposed of as follows: Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committees without debate. Reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner, and with the same right of correction, as public bills presented by members.

If this were all I should have no difficulty in my own mind as to the true construction. But further it provides:

But House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of, as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported by a committee of the House, and not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole, may also be disposed of in the same manner on motion directed to be made by such committee.

Now, here is a discretion to be exercised by the Speaker of the House in determining whether any House bill with a Senate amendment belongs to the one class or to the other of these bills. There is a discretion to be exercised by the Speaker in that matter, and in the exercise of that discretion the House has the right to review that decision. The Speaker may err as to whether or not a particular amendment to a Senate bill contains any appropriation. Suppose he should err about that, how would the House ever get consideration of it at all? Suppose some bill without any appropriation should be referred by the Speaker in the manner that House bills are referred; suppose he should do that; there would be no chance for the House to correct it.

There would be no opportunity for appeal from that decision, and it does seem to me that the true course is to give a reasonable construction to all portions of the rule, so that all may have their effect. There is some contradiction. There is a difficulty in reaching a conclusion, but the very fact that this House has the right to pass upon the ruling of the Speaker upon that question, if he makes a ruling distinguishing erroneously between these two, and that the House may have the right to correct it by appeal, it does seem to me the better construction is that where there is a House bill with Senate amendments it shall be disposed of in the House. I freely confess, sir, that it is not a matter free from doubt.

Mr. MILLS. I now insist on the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. I move to lay the resolution offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] upon the table.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. CANNON; and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

A division was called for.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 120, noes 110.

Several Members demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 118, nays 123, not voting 86; as follows:

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Until further notice:

Mr. McDUFFIE with Mr. FORNEY.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, with Mr. PHELAN.

Mr. WATSON with Mr. ROGERS.

Mr. PAYNE with Mr. STAHLNECKER.

Mr. DARLINGTON with Mr. FLOWER.

For the rest of this day:

Mr. NUTE with Mr. RUSK.

Mr. WILSON, of Washington, with Mr. WIKE.

Mr. HOUK with Mr. WASHINGTON.

Mr. GEST with Mr. STONE, of Kentucky.

Mr. PERKINS with Mr. CRAIN, on this vote.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. LEE, on this vote. Mr. HARMER would vote "ay" and Mr. LEE "no."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] on this vote. Had I not been paired, I should have voted yea, to lay the motion on the table.

On motion of Mr. LODGE, by unanimous consent, the recapitulation of the vote was omitted.

The SPEAKER. On the motion to lay upon the table the yeas are 118 and the nays are 123, and the motion is lost. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Texas for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question recurred upon the resolution offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

The resolution was again read.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 121, nays 117, not voting 89; as follows:

So the resolution was adopted.

The following additional pairs were announced:

On this vote:

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. BLANCHARD.

Mr. DARLINGTON with Mr. FLOWER.

Mr. PERKINS with Mr. CRAIN.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. LEE.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I am paired with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN]. Had I not been paired, I would have voted to sustain the action of the Chair on this question.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I am paired with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BUNN]. Had I not been paired, I should have voted to sustain the Speaker on this question.

Mr. GEST. I am paired with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE]. If I had not been paired, I should have voted "nay."

The vote was recapitulated.

Mr. FUNSTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to change my vote from "ay" to "nay." [Cries of "Ah!" on the Democratic side, and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ABBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have my vote recorded. It was not called by the Clerk. I voted on both roll-calls.

Mr. MILLS and Mr. MCCREARY. I heard him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not need any testimony except the statement of the gentleman himself.

The name of Mr. ABBOTT was called, and he voted "yea."

Mr. BULLOCK. Mr. Speaker, I voted on the first roll-call.

The SPEAKER. The name of the gentleman will be recorded.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I desire to change my vote.

The name of Mr. MCKINLEY was called, and he voted "ay." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted.

Mr. MILLS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. MCKINLEY. And pending that, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MILLS. I moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio was recognized to move to reconsider, and he also moved that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MILLS. But I moved to lay his motion on the table, and then he moved to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman give the authority which gives that precedence over a motion to adjourn?

Mr. MILLS. He moved to reconsider; I made the motion to lay that on the table, and then he moved to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not said that the gentleman did not make the motion.

Mr. MILLS. There is no question that a motion to adjourn has precedence over my motion. There is no difference about that.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn; and the Speaker announced that the "yeas" seemed to have it.

Mr. MILLS. I demand the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 119, nays 120, not voting 88; as follows:

YEAS—119.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, my pair with Mr. BUNN having been transferred to another gentleman, I vote "ay."

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. WHEELER, of Michigan, with Mr. BUNN, until further notice.

Mr. DARLINGTON with Mr. FLOWER, on this vote.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. LEE, on this vote.

Mr. McDUFFIE with Mr. CHIPMAN, on this vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the name of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. MUTCHLER, read.

The SPEAKER. There has been no recapitulation thus far, which may account for the gentleman not hearing the name of the gentleman from Pennsylvania read.

Mr. SPRINGER. His name was called on the second roll-call, but he did not answer, having answered on the first.

The Clerk recapitulated the name of members voting.

Mr. MUTCHLER. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I voted on both roll-calls, and voted "no."

The SPEAKER. The Chair takes the gentleman's statement, and his vote will be recorded.

The SPEAKER. On this question, the yeas are 119 and the nays 120. The motion to adjourn is lost, and the question recurs upon the motion made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], that the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] to reconsider be laid on the table.

The question was taken; and the Speaker declared that the Chair was in doubt.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 121, nays 114, not voting 92; as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, with Mr. CULBERTSON, of Texas.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR with Mr. SKINNER, for the rest of this day.

Mr. SIMONDS with Mr. WILLCOX, for the rest of this day.
Mr. MILLIKEN with Mr. CATCHINGS, for the rest of this day.
Mr. DARLINGTON with Mr. FLOWER, for the rest of this day.
Mr. HARMER with Mr. LEE, on this vote.
On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MILLS. I now move the approval of the Journal as amended, and on that I ask for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. There is still a question pending with regard to the preamble. Does the gentleman from Texas move the adoption of the preamble?

Mr. MILLS. I am moving the approval of the Journal as amended.

The SPEAKER. The preamble is before the House for its disposal.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the preamble, and move the approval of the Journal as amended.

The SPEAKER. The preamble can not be withdrawn except by unanimous consent.

Several MEMBERS. Let us hear it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the preamble. The House must either adopt or reject it.

The preamble was again read, as follows:

Whereas the order of reference made by the Speaker referring House bill 5381, which was returned to the House yesterday with a Senate amendment, to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, was incorrect under the rules of the House and done without authority under said rules—

Mr. MCKINLEY. I object to any withdrawal of that preamble.

Mr. LODGE. So do I.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the preamble.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 121, not voting 97; as follows:

Mr. HARMER with Mr. LEE, for the rest of the day.

Mr. CHADLE with Mr. COTHRAN, for the rest of the day.

On motion of Mr. STRUBLE, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MILLS. I move the previous question on the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

LANDING EMIGRANTS IN VIOLATION OF CONTRACT-LABOR LAW.

Communication from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a letter from the collector of the port of New York, and certain other papers in reply to the resolution of the House of Representatives inquiring into the action of the Cunard Steam-Ship Company refusing to obey the orders of the officers of the United States to give return passage to certain emigrants landed at New York by said company in violation of the contract-labor laws, and also looking to a thorough enforcement by the Department of the laws prohibiting the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

RECLASSIFICATION OF RAILWAY POSTAL CLERKS.

Communication from the general superintendent of the railway mail service in reference to the reclassifying of the railway postal clerks employed in the railway mail service, and requesting and urging the passage of House bill 8299, which pertains to the same—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following resolutions were introduced and referred as follows:

By Mr. LODGE:

Resolved, That on Tuesday, June 24, immediately after the reading of the Journal, House bill 10958 and the substitute therefor, reported with favorable recommendation from the Committee on the Election of President, Vice-President, and Members of Congress, be considered then and thereafter, from day to day, until Saturday, June 23, at 3 p. m., when the previous question shall be considered ordered on the bill and all pending amendments; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. RUSSELL:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to have the reports of the commissioners of the United States to the Paris Exposition of 1889, or such of them as may be accepted by him for publication, printed and bound at the Government Printing Office; and that, in addition to the usual number, there shall be printed 13,000 extra copies, of which number 3,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 4,000 for the use of the Department of State, of which 600 copies shall be distributed among the authors of the reports printed;

to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. RUSSELL:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed, in addition to the usual number, 13,000 copies of the twelfth number of the Statistical Abstract of the United States, for the year 1889, of which 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Printing.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk and disposed of as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 20, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting supplemental estimates for newly established land offices; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an additional estimate of appropriation for contingent expenses, Department of the Interior, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, in the sum of $18,481.30, for furniture, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office relative to accounts of disbursing officers, etc., and recommending a modification of section 3622 of the Revised Statutes upon that subject; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing recommending an enlargement of the building occupied by the bureau; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

WILLIAM P. ATWELL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 209) to authorize the Secretary of War to cause to be mustered William P. Atwell.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives, and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a resolution adopted by the Farquhar Association of Naval Veterans, of the port of New York, favoring the passage of the bill transferring the revenue-cutter service to the Navy Department; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Baltimore, Md., favoring an appropriation of $500,000 to widen and maintain the ship-channel of that port; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MANDERSON presented petitions of Farmers' Alliances of Furnas and Dundy Counties, in the State of Nebraska, praying for the passage of the Conger lard bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Farmers' Alliance of Furnas County, Nebraska, and a petition of citizens of Furnas and Dundy Counties, in the State of Nebraska, praying for the passage of what is known as the Butterworth option bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAMERON presented the petition of George W. Albright and 47 other residents of Easton, Pa., praying for the passage of House bill 5978, to prohibit the transportation of intoxicating liquors from any State or Territory of the United States to any prohibition State or Territory; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORRILL presented memorials of citizens of Chittenden, Orange, and Windsor Counties, in the State of Vermont, and a petition of citizens of Cortland County, New York, remonstrating against the imposition of an increase of duty on tin-plate; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VOORHEES. I present the proceedings of the Business Men's Association of Evansville, Ind., in which they urge upon Congress the wisdom and importance of adopting promptly such measures as experience, the results of the Mississippi River Commission, and the judgment of the United States Corps of Engineers shall determine to be needed to create a permanent protection against the overflows of the Mississippi River. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented a petition of the National Association of Naval Veterans of the port of New York, praying for the passage of a bill proposing to transfer the revenue-cutter service to the Navy Department; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. REAGAN presented resolutions of the Farmers' Institute of Kent County, Delaware, in favor of the free coinage of silver; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PIERCE. I present a petition of the Farmers' Alliance of North Dakota, praying Congress to enact legislation to restrict so far as possible the operation of lotteries in the United States, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. In this connection I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads what has been done with the bill which I understood was introduced by him and referred to that committee some weeks ago.

Mr. SAWYER. That subject was referred to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] as a subcommittee, and it has not yet been reported to the full committee.

Mr. PIERCE. May I inquire if it is likely that there will be an early report?

Mr. SAWYER. I think so. I spoke to the member who is the subcommittee about it the other day, and he said he had been very busy with other matters, but he had now time to pay attention to it, and would soon report it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CHANDLER presented a petition of the New Hampshire Society of the Sons of the Revolution, signed by C. R. Morrison, president, and C. L. Tappan, secretary, of Concord, N. H., praying for the erection by the General Government of an equestrian statue of Maj. Gen. John Stark in the city of Manchester, N. H.; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BLAIR presented the petition of S. G. Griffin and many others, citizens of Keene, N. H., praying for an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the application of public funds to the support of sectarian schools; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. DAWES presented a memorial of certain fish-dealers of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against an increase of duties on salt or fresh fish; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present a memorial, 10 feet in length, containing the names of 263 citizens of the District of Columbia, protesting against the passage of Senate bill 2352 or Senate bill 2396 at the present session. There are five reasons given, about 2 inches in length, which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD, if there is no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; that is against the rule.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then I ask leave to state what the objection of the memorialists is, very briefly, within the rules.

These people object to the passage of these bills because they say that—

The people of this District are sufficiently protected by existing laws against the evils of malpractice.

Said bills are clearly in the interest of the two medical sects named, and not in the interest of the people.

Said bills propose to prohibit by severe penalties the sale of any medical remedy by any except physicians licensed by a board of allopathic and homeopathic physicians, whereas we, the people, claim the right to buy and use medicines without restriction.

Said bills make it a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment for any person, without permission of said board of physicians, to treat disease by manipulation of any sort, i. e., by Swedish movements, magnetic treatment, mind cure, Christian science, etc.

And the memorialists think the proposed legislation is all wrong, and they object to the bills.

I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7079) for the relief of Thomas J. Parker, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 4686) granting a pension to Hannah Bedford;

A bill (H. R. 2110) granting a pension to Braddock F. Stocking; and

A bill (H. R. 1598) granting a pension to Sarah A. Tryon.

Mr. PLUMB. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9856) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, to report it with amendments. I desire to give notice that at an early day as possible I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar. Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8061) to increase the pension of Jennie D. Hoakins, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3927) granting a pension to Maria E. Baker, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2031) to incorporate the trustees of the National Industrial Institute, in Washington, D. C., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Appropriations I report the bill (H. R. 9603) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, with sundry amendments, and give notice that I shall call it up at an early day, probably on Monday next or perhaps to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. EVARTS, from the Committee on the Library, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 497) to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DOLPH. I report from the Committee on Commerce the bill (S. 3918) in regard to collisions at sea. I will state that it is a companion of the bill reported by me yesterday to adopt regulations to prevent collisions at sea, an important public measure, and I hope to get both bills up for consideration in the Senate at a very early day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

ROSWELL M. SHURTLEFF.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the bill (S. 3436) to correct the military record of Roswell M. Shurtleff, which was adversely reported from the Committee on Military Affairs yesterday by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] and postponed indefinitely during my absence yesterday, may be placed on the Calendar. I suppose there will be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). If there be no objection, the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection; and the bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 4117) for the relief of the Mount Zion Society of Willsborough, S. C.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 4118) for the relief of Rosa Vestner Jeffrey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 4119) granting the right of way to the Metropolitan Southern Railroad Company through the property of the United States in Montgomery County, Maryland; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 4120) granting a pension to Patrick Flynn; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have been requested by the Wage-Workers' Political Alliance of Washington, D. C., to introduce a bill, and I ask that in printing it that fact shall be distinctly shown upon its face, for I have not read the bill and know nothing of its merits.

The bill (S. 4121) to establish a Department of Printing, and for other purposes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. EDMUNDS introduced a bill (S. 4122) to regulate the confinement of prisoners sentenced by courts created under treaties and laws of the United States in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE introduced a bill (S. 4123) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Jackson, Mich.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. RANSOM introduced a bill (S. 4124) for the relief of the Cape Fear Steam-Boat Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4125) for the relief of Thomas S. Luterloh; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4126) for the relief of Elizabeth Jones, widow of John Jones, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4127) for the relief of Levi Jones; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 4128) for the relief of Mrs. Letitia Tyler Semple; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 4129) to appropriate $400,000 to the Creek Nation of Indians, as per third article of treaty of 1866; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. SQUIRE. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 10716) making appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

I will explain that the Agricultural College in the State of Washington has just been established, and I present, to accompany the amendment, a letter from the Acting Secretary of Agriculture, showing that the appropriation for experiment stations needs to be increased from $660,000 to $675,000.

I move that the amendment, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLUMB submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege. I ask the Chief Clerk to read what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chief Clerk will read as requested. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[Washington dispatch to the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.]

REAGAN AND STEWART—THEY QUARREL AND COME TO BLOWS—NO BLOOD SHED, HOWEVER.

If the present hot weather continues there will be blood on the face of the moon as it courses over the Senate wing.

Two antiquies in that dignified body got into an altercation yesterday afternoon in the Marble Room that might have ended in filling two hospital cots if bystanders had not wrenched apart the two venerable gladiators engaged.

Senator STEWART is about seventy years old, with hair and beard white as snow. REAGAN, the ex-postmaster-general of the Confederacy, is seventy-five years old and weighs about 250 pounds. Mr. REAGAN was chatting with some friends yesterday afternoon when STEWART came along. The Nevada Senator has just met with a decided defeat in the fight he has made on Major Powell, the chief of the Geological Survey, and consequently feels very tender. REAGAN, on the contrary, has been a staunch champion of Powell. As STEWART passed REAGAN, the latter began chaffing him about his defeat.

Mr. STEWART took one or two samples of Texas badinage, then wearied of it, and angrily charged REAGAN with being a mere tool and puppet of Powell. REAGAN's wrath rose, and he retorted in good kind. Words ran high, until at last STEWART, beside himself with anger, charged REAGAN with falsehood. Despite his seventy-five years of age and 250 pounds, the ancient Texan jumped for the venerable Nevada, and for a moment it looked as if the two antiquies would indulge in an old-fashioned fist fight of the date of 1800. REAGAN's arm shot out for STEWART's eye, but his arm was short and he missed STEWART by a foot. Before STEWART could retaliate the horrified bystanders interfered, and the old gentlemen were carefully led to sofas in opposite ends of the room and calmed down. Later in the afternoon Mr. STEWART called on Mr. REAGAN and apologized for his remarks, but Mr. REAGAN haughtily declined to speak to him.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, a paragraph of this kind in different forms has been going around in the papers for the last two or three weeks, and I felt it due the dignity of the Senate to call attention to it. There is not one word of truth in it. The Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and myself are the best of friends and never on any occasion has an unpleasant remark passed between us. We have always been cordial friends, and there is not a word of truth in the statement. I think that this much ought to be said out of respect to the Senate. It is said that this quarrel occurred in the Marble Room of the Senate. Who invented such a story I am unable say, but I want it known that the Senator from Texas and myself are friends, and that there is no truth whatever in the story.

Mr. PLATT and Mr. REAGAN addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. PLATT. I have only a word to say.

I doubt very much whether it is necessary for the dignity of the Senate to take any notice of such newspaper articles, or rather special dispatches. I think it is within the experience of every Senator here that it is very seldom if ever that a newspaper dispatch, a special dispatch, purporting to contain information of a personal character relating to Senators, is ever sent out from Washington without more or less inaccuracy, and usually such inaccuracy as to make it entirely unworthy of belief or credence. I think that the people of the United States are coming to understand that when they see a special dispatch from Washington relating to Senators or members of the House they are to take it certainly with many grains of allowance.

I think myself that the dignity of the Senate would be much better preserved and the dignity of Senators much better preserved by treating such matters with silence.

Mr. STEWART. Let me say in reply to that, in excuse for my bringing the matter before the Senate, that friends in different parts of the country have written to me, a large number of them, and relatives, regretting that such an occurrence should happen in the Senate Chamber or in the Marble Room, and that I should be a party to it. They have really been deceived about it, and I thought it was time I should call attention to it.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, when this publication first made its appearance the Senator from Nevada and myself saw it and talked about it, and thought it best to let it go without any notice whatever. But it seems to have been circulated rather extensively and to have drawn out letters and expressions of a kind which indicated that it was not only discreditable to that Senator and myself, but discreditable to the Senate of the United States that such things should occur.

Mr. President, I can not conceive what could have originated this story. Sometimes stories of that kind have some sort of foundation, but there never was any controversy, never any ill feeling, between the Senator from Nevada and myself. We never met in the Marble Room, we never used harsh words to each other, nor, as far as I know, felt unkindly to each other. So the thing is the work evidently of a genius in lying, a man who was prepared to make a lie altogether without any kind of a foundation to begin upon. I think among liars on the part of newspapers he ought to be pensioned for such an achievement in manufacturing a lie that had no earthly foundation.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat. Is the statement accurate in regard to the ages of the Senators? I thought it was flattering to the Senator.

Mr. REAGAN. That is an important question. I will deliberate upon that.

Mr. VANCE. Peace having been restored, I should like to have a little morning business transacted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will receive further morning business.

BILL RECOMMENDED.

Mr. VANCE. I move that the bill (H. R. 10193) providing for the assessment and collection of water-main taxes be taken from the Calendar and recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1) to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies.

DISPOSITION OF ESCHATEED MORMON CHURCH FUNDS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask unanimous consent, with the leave of my friend from Iowa, who has charge of the legislative appropriation bill, that the Senate take up and pass Senate bill 4047, Order of Business 1634. In asking that unanimous consent I wish to say that the bill is very short—it will not take two minutes to read it—and that it is a bill which only provides, after the decision of the Supreme Court about the abolished church in Utah, that the funds to which no private right appears shall be turned over to the common schools, as according to the decision of the Supreme Court is right, but the act of Congress did not say to what purpose these escheated funds should go. Therefore, in order to avoid a difficulty in mere equity law, to save a question, the bill should be passed. I suppose nobody will oppose it, and as it is a matter of public and immediate interest, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered. If it leads to any debate, of course I shall withdraw it for the present.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4047) supplemental to the act of Congress passed in March, 1887, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes,' approved March 22, 1882."

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in line 11, to strike out the words "in respect of which funds and property it shall appear" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "except so far as it shall appear in respect thereto," and in line 13, after the word "is," to strike out the word "no" and insert "a," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any and all funds or other property lately belonging to or in the possession of or claimed by the corporation mentioned in section 17 of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes,' approved March 22, 1882," at, before, or since the taking effect of said act, except so far as it shall appear in respect thereto that there is a lawful private right, shall be devoted to the use and benefit of public common schools in the Territory of Utah; and the Secretary of the Interior shall take and receive the same and dispose thereof to the uses aforesaid in such manner as shall seem to him, with the approval of the President, to be most expedient. And the supreme court of said Territory is hereby invested with power and authority to make all necessary and proper orders and decrees for the purpose hereinbefore mentioned.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move, at the suggestion of a very learned and eminent gentleman in the law, to amend the bill further by inserting, after the word "right," the words "to the contrary," so as to make the phrase, as it appears to him, a little more clear.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 13, after the word "right," it is proposed to insert the words "to the contrary;" so as to read:

Except so far as it shall appear in respect thereto that there is a lawful private right to the contrary, shall be devoted to the use and benefit of public common schools in the Territory of Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. CALL. I should like to have that bill again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not think that bill ought to pass without some mature consideration of the late decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think, if my friend from Florida, whose views upon the general subject I understand perfectly and respect, will give me a minute to explain he will not ask that this bill go over.

The law which he opposed passed; the corporation was dissolved; its property was disposed of and is in the hands of a receiver in the court there now. All private rights and donations and everything that the other bill provided for, saving for churches and parsonages, etc., have been attended to. The Supreme Court has held that the act is constitutional and that everything is all right in point of law; but there is left a residuum of personal estate in the hands of the court to which there is no private claimant, and the only question is whether that money shall be used for the purposes of common schools or shall stay in a perpetual receivership in the court. All that this bill does is to settle that, I assure my friend on the most careful examination.

Mr. BLAIR. How much does it amount to?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not able to say; but probably three or four hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. CALL. It was not my intention to express any opinion on the subject, but only to say that I understood there had been some decision of the Supreme Court upon some of the legislation which had been enacted by Congress, and I thought it would be more satisfactory that we should have a very full understanding of how far the decision of the Supreme Court had made the legislation adopted here valid. I have understood that upon a motion made to the court a mandate in this case had been withdrawn. Now, the precise effect of this bill is a matter, I think, of very great importance, and which ought to be carefully considered by the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is due to say, and after the remark of my friend from Florida I will say, that I have the best of reasons for believing—the Senator will know what I mean by that—that the mandate was withdrawn on account of this very difficulty in the minds of the court as to what could be done by the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal or the supreme court of the Territory as a court of equity. The law which they held valid did not fully provide for what in England is called the power of the King, as parens patrie, to devote these funds to which there was no claimant to the nearest use possible of the charity or beneficence that was intended; and therefore they withheld the mandate in order that Congress might solve this question. As I said before, it is the simple question, as the thing now stands, whether this money shall stay in the hands of the court as a perpetual receivership, or whether it shall be devoted to schools. That is all there is to it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I regard this as very important legislation, and I do not think the Senate has looked into it. If it is open to objection, I object to the present consideration of the bill, in order that we may have some time to look into the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I give notice that I shall move to-morrow to take it up again, because this money should not be left in that condition.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 20th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 977) for the erection of a public building at New London, Conn.; and

An act (S. 2143) granting a pension to Henry Strawbridge.

The message also announced that the following bill and joint resolution were presented to the President on the 7th instant, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which they originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution they have become laws without his approval.

A bill (S. 1854) for the relief of James H. Bacon; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 28) for the relief of the Venezuela Steam Transportation Company.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9086) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the point of order raised by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] whether the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska is in order. Upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the question upon which the yeas and nays have already been ordered be stated again by the Chair, so that there may be no misunderstanding.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is whether the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska increasing an appropriation is or is not in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Those who believe the amendment is in order will vote "yea."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Those who believe the amendment is in order will vote "yea."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the amendment read. I was not in the Senate when the precise form of the amendment was stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 82, it is proposed to strike out all after the words "General Land Office," in the tenth line, down to and including the word "dollars," in the eighteenth line, and to insert in lieu thereof:

For the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $5,000; one assistant commissioner, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall be authorized to sign such letters, papers, and documents, and to perform such other duties as may be directed by the Commissioner, and shall act as Commissioner in the absence of that officer, or in case of a vacancy in the office of Commissioner, $3,500.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I understand the objection made is that this amendment is general legislation, and therefore not in order on this appropriation bill. I should like to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that there is a good deal of general legislation in this bill if that view is correct. While the general statutes provide that the governors of Territories shall receive a certain amount as salary, that salary, in some cases at least, is cut down in the bill, and the salaries of the surveyors-general, I think, of all the States, except the very newest ones, are cut down. If this is general legislation there is general legislation already on the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. On that point I will state that in the case of the surveyor-general of Oregon the amount of salary is fixed by law at $2,500 and the appropriation in this bill is only $1,800.

Mr. ALLISON. I should say that the statutory salaries alluded to by the Senator from Colorado have all been changed in appropriation bills.

Mr. TELLER. They have all been changed by appropriation bills from time to time. That is true. The Supreme Court said that was proper, and, as I understand, that is all the court said.

Mr. ALLISON. I mean that these old statutes have been repealed.

Mr. TELLER. They have not been. If they have, I am not aware of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I have just looked at this question and I feel bound to say, although I am opposed to the amendment so far as I now understand it, that I think the amendment is in order. The point, I suppose, is that it is general legislation. I see that the bill is only limited, and these appropriation bills generally are, to one year or a certain fiscal year, and the amendment proposes to give this gentleman during this year more money than the general law says his salary shall be. Well, I can hardly suppose that to be general legislation. If the amendment had said "that hereafter the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall be $5,000 a year instead of $4,000," it would have been general legislation; but if Congress choose to give this gentleman a bonus for this year or an additional gratuity of another $1,000, I am not able to see that that is general legislation.

Mr. DOLPH. I entirely agree with the Senator from Vermont, but I should like to ask him a question. There are numerous cases in this bill where less than the amount fixed by statute for the salary of Federal officers is appropriated. Is it not a fact that the statute is left intact and that the officer would have a claim on the General Government for the salary fixed by the statute, notwithstanding Congress appropriates less this year for it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very much afraid that is so.

Mr. HALE. This is a fact, that in some of the appropriation bills which originated in the other branch there is a sweeping clause declaring that thereafter the salaries of the officers provided for in the bill should not be larger than the amount therein appropriated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that in this bill?

Mr. HALE. That is in some of the old bills. It changes the general legislation which is found in the statutes and leaves the legal salary as provided in the appropriation bill by that sweeping clause.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Supreme Court decided without reference to that, and before that was passed, that Congress could change the amount of salary in an appropriation bill, and there was no claim by the officer for the difference between the statutory amount and the amount fixed in the appropriation bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But if the Senator from Colorado will allow me, the Supreme Court went further in that very case and decided that when the general statute fixed the salary of an officer and less than that amount was appropriated for the payment of it, he might go into court and recover the difference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, but that was before the statute.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That was before the statute of 1884. I called up the case of the marshal of the Supreme Court this morning. His salary is fixed in the general statute at $3,600. For several years past he has absolutely been paid a salary of $3,000, but on investigation this morning I became satisfied that that statute passed in 1884, if I remember correctly the date, did repeal the general statute fixing that salary at $3,600.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Most certainly, if its language is what is stated.

Mr. ALLISON. In all the legislative bills for the last eight or nine years these repealing clauses have been inserted, and in the beginning of the act a clause has been inserted that the amounts therein appropriated shall be in full compensation for that year, and, as properly stated by the Senator from Colorado, the Supreme Court has decided that that operates as a repeal of the previously existing law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly, but that is not this case.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not now speaking of this case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Here is a statute which says the particular officer shall be entitled to a particular sum, and this amendment is that for this particular year we shall give him a thousand dollars more than the law entitles him to, as I wish Congress would put in a clause to give it to me, for I think I need it. We simply say we will give this gentleman for this year a gratuity of a thousand dollars in addition to his salary; and I am unable to see, I confess, wishing to stand by the committee, how that is obnoxious to the point of order that it is general legislation.

Mr. DAWES. Is it not the province of appropriation bills to make appropriations in pursuance of existing law?

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the practice has not shown it to be that way.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOAR. Which way does an affirmative vote resolve the question? The VICE-PRESIDENT. An affirmative vote is to the effect that the amendment is in order.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]; otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is a mere point of order and pairs should not be observed about it.

Mr. FAULKNER. Then I vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL], and withhold my vote.

Mr. VANCE. I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN]. I am not informed how he would vote. If he were present I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. KENNA] is detained from the Senate by sickness and is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. PASCO. I wish to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] is detained from the Senate, and is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HIGGINS. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] on party questions, but I understand this is not a party question, and therefore I shall vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 14; as follows:

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill, on page 105, line 18, by striking out the word "two" before the word "hundred," and inserting the word "five," and after the amendment is stated from the desk I will explain it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 105, line 18, before the word "hundred," it is proposed to strike out the word "two" and insert "five;" so as to read:

The Chief Clerk and ex officio superintendent of the building, $2,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, this is the chief clerk of the Department of Justice, whose present salary, compared with that of the chief clerks of other Departments, is extremely small, and in respect of whom the estimate of the Department of Justice and of the Treasury sent to us provides for this increase. I should not stand on that alone, nor stop the committee a moment, but the matter in the form of a bill having been brought to the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary, it considered the bill, and some time in April last it reported the bill increasing this salary in a regular and square way to $2,500 a year. On the 19th of April the Senate passed the bill.

So in this instance we have had the judgment of the Senate, and within the very letter of the rule a bill passed to do this thing, and if I may speak of the other House I am informed the House committee has reported a similar bill, and perhaps the very same bill, and I think it is now on its Calendar.

So, then, the motion I make is not to strain any point, but the Senate having passed a bill to increase this salary in the regular way to $2,500, in order to conform to a bill passed by the Senate, I make this motion, and I presume there will be no objection to it.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to the amendment, if I have a right to object to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You have the right to take the sense of the Senate upon it.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, as to the merits of it, but this amendment comes from no standing committee so far as I know—it certainly has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and therefore I submit it is not in order. I make the point with great deference to the Senator from Vermont, who finds a thing in order generally when it is convenient to have it in order. If he can point out the rule under which it is proper, of course I shall have to yield.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend from Iowa does me great injustice. I find it convenient to have a thing in order when, according to the law of the Senate and the truth, it is in order, and I do not find it convenient to have it in order otherwise; and on the last case we had up, if my friend had done me the credit to listen to me, while I saw that the amendment was in order I stated that but for my pair I should have voted against the amendment that I thought was in order. It is not a question, therefore, of convenience, and my friend has got a little silvery, I should say, upon that particular topic just now. [Laughter.]

Now let us see what the law of the Senate is. The Senator's point is that the amendment has not been reported by a standing committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The rules say:

All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by the direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill * * * shall be referred.

This is not an amendment "moved by direction of a standing or select committee" at all. I do not claim any privilege for it on that ground. But this is what I stand upon:

Unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

It is all in the disjunctive, and therefore the Senate having passed a bill to increase this gentleman's salary by the sum of $300, I submit to my distinguished friend from Iowa, whether it is convenient or inconvenient, the amendment is in order. If the Senate thinks that the Senate made a mistake in passing the bill that it did, then it can say it does not want the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. Is that an "act?"

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is "an act."

Mr. DAWES. Before it gets through both Houses?

Mr. EDMUNDS. And that has been so for forty years, as the Senator perfectly well knows, in the sense of this rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is not well taken. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The amendment will be considered agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. No; I ask for a division.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have a vote upon it.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 24, noes 26—no quorum voting.

Mr. HARRIS. It is evident that no quorum has voted and I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment so that we shall develop a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEWART. Let the amendment be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. Under the head of Department of Justice, on page 105, line 18, before the word "hundred," it is proposed to strike out "two" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Chief Clerk and ex officio superintendent of the building, $2,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, now if the Senate will do me the grace to listen to me for two minutes, I will try to state this case, and then my duty will have been done.

On the recommendation of the Executive Department of the Government a bill was introduced to provide for the paying of this chief clerk the salary of $2,500 a year instead of $2,200 a year. The Committee on the Judiciary, to which the bill was referred, reported in its favor, and on the 19th of April, 1890, the bill passed the Senate. If I may allude to proceedings in the other House, and I do not know that it is right—well, they are officially reported, and I think I may, without any comment, take the risk of doing it, for I think myself it is probably in order—on the 17th of February on a House bill for this very same thing the House Judiciary Committee made a report in favor of this same increase. I have no doubt of the fact that the House is for it, though that ought to have no influence upon us at all, I agree. In the House report are tables as to the pay of the various chief clerks of Departments. The chief clerk of the State Department receives $2,750 a year; of the War Department, $2,750; of the Navy Department, $2,500; of the Treasury, $2,700 a year and $300 as superintendent of the building, making $3,000; of the Post-Office, $2,500; of the Interior, $2,500 and $250 as superintendent of the building, making $2,750; of the Department of Agriculture, $2,500; of the Department of Justice, $2,200. Then the tables go on to show the various appropriations and the times when the salaries appeared to be fixed, etc., that I will not delay the Senate by reading.

It is for the Senate to consider—and that is all I care about it, to have gentlemen vote on the statement of the facts—whether it is wise or just that this gentleman's salary in the Department of Justice should be increased by this $300. It is my duty to state the case, and that is all there is to it.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I will vote "yea" for the time, for I am afraid there is no quorum present.

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR], but I do not think he will object to my voting on this question. I vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I now announce for the day my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN].

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will say to the Senator from Maryland that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] concurred in the report, and if the Senator from Maryland is in favor of the motion he is entitled to vote, as I know the Senator from Iowa concurred in this report.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I prefer not to vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. As this is not a party question and my vote seems to be needed to make a quorum, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. To make a quorum, I vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DIXON. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] to my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH], and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS. In order to make a quorum, I vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a quorum now.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Allen,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Platt,
Blair,	Evarts,	Moody,	Power,
Call,	Harris,	Morgan,	Sanders,
Cameron,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Cass,	Hoar,	Paddock,	Washburn.
Cullum,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pettigrew,
Dolph,	Manderson,	Pierce,

NAYS—18.

Allison,	Coke,	Gorman,	Teller,
Bate,	Dawes,	Hale,	Vest,
Berry,	Dixon,	Payne,	Wilson of Md.
Butler,	George,	Reagan,
Cockrell,	Gibson,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—40.

Aldrich,	Eustis,	Jones of Nevada,	Spooner,
Barbour,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Squire,
Blackburn,	Paulkner,	McMillan,	Stanford,
Blodgett,	Frye,	MCPHERSON,	Stockbridge,
Brown,	Gray,	Pasco,	Turpie,

Colquitt,	Higgins,	Quay,	Walthall,
Daniel,	Hiscock,	Ransom,	Wilson of Iowa,
Davis,	Ingalls,	Sherman,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. On page 5, line 12—

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator proceeds I ask, in view of this amendment, on page 106, line 8, to increase the total by striking out "four" and inserting "seven."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 106, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "four" and to insert "seven;" so as to read "$27,770."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. On page 5, line 12, after the word "each," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 12, after the word "each," it is proposed to insert:

One superintendent of Senate stables, at $1,440, under resolution of Senate of March 4, 1890.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is not estimated for. The resolution referred to expires on July 1.

Mr. HARRIS. My friend from Iowa is a little at fault in his memory as to the resolution. He is right, of course, as to the fact that this is not estimated for, but the resolution is "until the further order of the Senate," which does not expire until the Senate shall, by resolution, order otherwise. The office exists and will continue to exist after the 1st of July as well as before.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator read the resolution?

Mr. HARRIS—

Resolved, That William R. Reynolds, who has been for the past five years a faithful and efficient officer of the Senate, be appointed, under the authority of the Sergeant-at-Arms, superintendent of the Senate stables, at a salary of $1,500 per annum, until the further order of the Senate.

I will send it to the Secretary's desk.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, Mr. President, does the Senator read from the RECORD?

Mr. HARRIS. I read from the RECORD; yes.

Mr. ALLISON. I will thank the Chief Clerk to read what immediately precedes and follows that resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The matter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SUPERINTENDENT OF SENATE STABLES.

Mr. FARWELL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That William R. Reynolds, who has been for the past five years a faithful and efficient officer of the Senate, be appointed, under the authority of the Sergeant-at-Arms, superintendent of the Senate stables, at a salary of $1,500 per annum, until the further orders of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. The resolution read by the Chief Clerk is the resolution referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. HARRIS. It came up on March 4, and you will find that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate reported it back, and by unanimous consent of the Senate it was considered and agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Reported by the committee?

Mr. HARRIS. Precisely.

Mr. ALLISON. I, of course, only speak from memory; but now I have the resolution, and will see what it is. I read now from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 4:

SUPERINTENDENT OF SENATE STABLES.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. FARWELL, December 4, 1889, reported it with an amendment, in the nature of a substitute; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a superintendent of the Senate stables, at a salary of $1,440 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, during the remainder of the current fiscal year, upon vouchers approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Now, the Committee on Appropriations regarded this as a resolution only existing up to the 1st day of July.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what it is.

Mr. ALLISON. And certainly, unless there is a further order of the Senate in some way, it will not exist after that time.

Mr. PLATT. This would make a further order.

Mr. ALLISON. This would make a further order, as the Senator from Connecticut suggests.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator please send me the paper from which he reads? And it is due to myself to say—

Mr. ALLISON. I do so with pleasure. I only desire to correct the Senator from Tennessee by showing him a very different resolution passed from the one read at the Secretary's desk and the one read by him.

Mr. HARRIS. Yesterday I asked the Journal Clerk to look up the resolution and the action of the Senate upon it, and he referred me to the resolution and to the action of the Senate as it was read from the desk a moment since. If the resolution just read by the Senator from Iowa was adopted, certainly that resolution was changed and that record does not show it.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator, if he will allow me a moment, the Committee on Appropriations examined all these resolutions with care. We had an apprehension that the expenditures of the Senate were beyond the necessities of the Senate, and therefore it was that we looked into these resolutions carefully, intending to appropriate whatever the Senate ordered us to appropriate and not a dollar more, and on examination of this resolution we found that practically it was intended to expire by limitation on the 1st day of July.

Now, I hope that the Senator from Tennessee will not press this amendment, because if it is necessary to have this new office, created on the 4th of March, 1890, of superintendent of the stables, it can easily be ascertained hereafter and the necessary sum can be appropriated out of the contingent fund. But I submit to the Senator that to have a superintendent of the stables and four or five or six or seven employes at the stables for the purpose of caring for the few horses that are owned by the Senate to carry around the mails is an unnecessary and extravagant expenditure.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator if it is a fact that there are more employes at the stables than there are horses?

Mr. ALLISON. I think so; but I am not sure.

Mr. BLAIR. At least the number is twice as many as the horses that belong to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. It is one more or one less. I think there is one more employe than there are horses. That is my recollection.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to ask how the exigency, after the experience of the Senate for now a hundred years, arose last March for the first time. The country had been able to get along without a superintendent of Senate stables for well-nigh a hundred years till last March. Some Senator may be able to enlighten the Committee on Appropriations as to the sudden exigency which arose last March.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Senator would tell us what are the Senate stables, and how many horses the Senate has.

Mr. HALE. It is a little building off at one corner of the Capitol grounds where the few horses that are used in the Senate mail-wagons are kept. It is an establishment that a private individual keeping would have one man attend to, and possibly one cheaper man assisting him. That that should be dignified and should be swelled up into the importance of having a superintendent at $1,200 a year is the reductio ad absurdum of all the absurd things that we are asked to do for the Senate employes. This has run the thing into the ground, and it is the natural result of the pressure that is being made here to swell the importance of everybody who is about the Senate—a superintendent of stables, who shall order, like a centurion, a colored man who is engaged in cleaning the horses or putting them into the wagons, to go and do such a thing, and shall have $1,200 a year for it, or who shall order somebody to lock up the stable at 9 o'clock at night, and that shall go to make up his duties.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator mistakes his duties. He is to see that the other man locks the stable.

Mr. HALE. I say he gives the order to another man, who exceeds, with his fellows, as the Senator from New Hampshire has said, the number of horses. What we ought to have, in order to satisfy everybody who wants these places, is to have two or three men to every horse, and every third man ought to have a superintendent, and there ought to be over the superintendent a supervisor of stables, and then there ought to be over him a commissioner of stables, and there ought to be, as the Senator from Kansas suggests, a grand master of stables and harnesses and wagons and horses.

Mr. DAWES. And there ought to be a chief clerk!

Mr. HALE. Of course, a chief clerk, as the Senator suggests.

Mr. BLAIR. And a chief of staff, also!

Mr. HALE. And messengers to wait upon these officials, and private secretaries, and telephones, and all these things; and by that time you would get a really respectable establishment, and a great many people who have not got these places would get into them.

Therefore it is difficult to oppose this amendment. I have not the pleasure of knowing who it was that offered it, for I was out of the Chamber; but the subject has been before the committee time and time again, and we are beginning to be impressed with the magnificence of this superintendent of stables.

Mr. BLAIR. I suggest to the Senator that upon the best judgment I can form from having seen the horses, they undoubtedly did service in the original entry into Jerusalem, at least eighteen hundred years ago. There are not more than three or four horses in the use of the Senate that anybody ever sees.

Mr. HALE. You would not want these employes of the Senate to endanger their valuable lives with getting behind fast horses? They ought to be safe animals, and this superintendent ought not to imperil himself by going into a building where a horse has any activity or liveliness in him. They ought to be old horses, so as to make it a safe place.

Mr. BLAIR. Well, they are old horses.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I desire to say that when I answered the Senator from Iowa a moment since that I was reading from the RECORD I was in error. I was reading from the Journal of the Senate, as the Journal Clerk informs me. Yesterday he furnished me the data. On page 151, under date of March 4, I find the following:

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the contingent expenses of the Senate, to whom were referred the following resolutions, reported them without amendment:

Resolution submitted by Mr. FARWELL, December 4, 1889, authorizing the Sergeant-at-Arms to appoint a superintendent of the Senate stables.

Resolution submitted by Mr. MITCHELL—

And so on; other resolutions reported without amendment. So says the Journal; and by unanimous consent the resolutions were agreed to.

Now, with regard to the merit of this amendment, I desire to say that I know, perhaps, as little as any other Senator upon this floor about the present superintendent. I could not have called him by name if I had met him on the street until day before yesterday. But I am informed by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate that he has inaugurated economies at that stable which save annually more than the proposed salary, besides a vast improvement in the general conduct and care and management of it.

I feel no earthly interest in the matter. If the resolution as read by the Senator from Iowa was the resolution that was passed, then I think he is right upon the question of order; but if the resolution as handed to me by the Journal Clerk was the resolution that was passed, then the amendment is clearly in order, and the Senate can dispose of the question on the merits of it. It is a matter of the supremest indifference to me in what way it may be disposed of; but upon the authority of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and the showing on the Journal of the Senate I offered the amendment for the action and judgment of the Senate.

That is all, Mr. President, that I care to say; but I should like to have it ascertained with certainty which resolution was the resolution that was actually passed.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course I did not know what the Journal contained. I will only say to the Senator that what I sent to the Senator from Tennessee is taken from the daily RECORD, and I do not see how the daily RECORD could possibly be mistaken in recording in the RECORD a substitute offered by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. HARRIS. There may have been a failure to record the substitute.

Mr. ALLISON. But, whether in order or out of order, I hope the Senator from Tennessee will not press the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. If the resolution is as the Senator thinks it is, then the amendment is not in order; but if the Journal resolution was passed it is clearly in order. However, it is a matter about which I feel no personal concern.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the Journal entry is incorrect, and rules that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. DOLPH. I move, in lines 23 and 24, on page 96, to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$2,500;" so that the clause will read:

For surveyor-general of Oregon, $2,500.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some reason given for that amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to say in regard to the amendment that on the 20th day of September, 1850, when the first law for the disposal of the public domain in Oregon was passed and the office of surveyor-general of that Territory was created, the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon was fixed at $2,500. That salary is also fixed by section 2209 of the Revised Statutes. Up to and including the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of 1884, annual appropriations were made for the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon at $2,500. So if there was not any act passed in 1884 repealing the general laws fixing the salaries of officers whose compensation was appropriated for in that year, the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon has not been changed, because, as I say, the amount appropriated in 1884 was $2,500. I believe in 1885, or if not 1885 in 1886, in the appropriation act only $1,800 was appropriated for the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon.

Oregon is a State 300 miles square. It contains nearly 100,000 square miles. A large amount of the public domain is yet unsurveyed. The surveyor-general's office is as important in Oregon as in any of the States or Territories where the surveyors-general to-day are paid $2,500. If Senators will refer to the bill under consideration they will find that for the surveyor-general of Arizona Territory $2,500 is appropriated, for the surveyor-general of California $2,750 is appropriated, for the surveyor-general of the State of Colorado $2,500 is appropriated, for the surveyors-general of the two Dakotas $2,000 each is appropriated, for the surveyor-general of the Territory of Idaho $2,500, and for the surveyor-general of Montana $2,500.

The question of reducing the compensation of the surveyor-general of Oregon never has received the consideration of any committee of either branch of Congress except the Committee on Appropriations. It never has been changed except by an appropriation bill. The Representative and Senators from Oregon never have known any reason why this discrepancy was made and why the salary was reduced by the appropriation act of 1885 or 1886 to $1,800. I assert that there is no provision of law for it.

Mr. HALE. Is this office vacant?

Mr. DOLPH. No, it is not. There is an incumbent.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon a question, if he will permit me.

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. Do I understand that up to 1885 this salary was $2,500, and since that time only $1,800 has been appropriated? Is that the statement of the Senator?

Mr. DOLPH. I do not remember just the year when the changes were made. I say in 1884 $2,500 was appropriated.

Mr. ALLISON. The change was made in 1886.

Mr. DOLPH. The change was made before any change in office on the incoming of this Administration, and I understand it was made on the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. MITCHELL. Section 2209 of the Revised Statutes fixes the salary at $2,500.

Mr. DOLPH. The salary is fixed by statute.

Now, I desire to come to the question as to whether there has been any change in the statute. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of 1884 provides, in substance, that the amount appropriated by that act shall be in full for the services for the next fiscal year. Then at the close of the act there is a provision that "all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed." I suppose that to be the only general legislation changing the salaries of officers that is referred to. That is susceptible of two constructions.

One construction would be that "all acts and parts of acts so far as inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed." That would be sufficient to prevent the incumbent from claiming any greater compensation for that year, but that would be the only intent to which the act would be inconsistent with the general law fixing the salaries of surveyors-general.

The other construction would be that the law was repealed in toto for all future time; and as the appropriation act does not fix the salary for any other year except the year for which appropriations were made, in every case where it was changed it would leave this situation: there would be no law whatever fixing the salary of these officials.

I can not believe that it is the effect of the repealing clause that as to the large body of officers appropriated for in this bill there is no law to-day which fixes their annual salary.

If that is the case, then it is competent for the Committee on Appro-provisions every year in making appropriations to fix the salary of every official, more or less, in accordance with its own judgment. I do not believe that that is a proper function of a Committee on Appropriations. I believe that if that act is construed in that way it is most vicious legislation.

It seems to me that the duties of the Committee on Appropriations are onerous and important enough to determine the amount of appropriations and allow the salaries of officials to stand as fixed by law, after the matter has been considered by the appropriate committees and passed upon by Congress, rather than to undertake in every annual appropriation bill to fix for every year the salary of every official wherever there is to be a change in the compensation.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to say a word once for all respecting these salaries. In 1876 the House of Representatives—I speak historically—cut down a large number of salaries, and in doing so they inserted apt phraseology to work a repeal, as they believed and as the courts have construed, of all existing laws in conflict with the salaries there fixed.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to say to the Senator that I should be glad to see a decision which holds that the repealing clause contained in these acts affects any more than the year for which the appropriation is made.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will pardon me; I have not time now to look it up. That has gone on from year to year, and although the Senate for some years insisted upon appropriating the salaries provided for in the statutes, yet the House of Representatives finally prevailed in this respect on these appropriations, and we yielded. The appropriations as they are now fixed in this bill are substantially the appropriations that have prevailed as respects these officers for the last twelve years or more.

Mr. DOLPH. Not in this case to which I refer.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I will come to the case of the Senator. That is the general rule as respects these salaries. In 1885-'86, when the House of Representatives was under the control of an opposing party and when the Administration was under similar control, they cut down the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon to $1,800 on the ground that that was a sufficient compensation in view of the small appropriations being made for surveys of the public lands. When the Republican party came into power in the executive and in the legislative departments your Committee on Appropriations, following the precedents that have been laid down and have been incorporated in your statutes year by year, are confronted with one amendment after another increasing the compensation of officers appointed under this Administration, when similar officers have served under prior Administrations for the compensation proposed to be appropriated by the bill.

Now, all I ask is that Senators will understand that if this is to be pursued to the logical sequence of the amendment of the Senator from Oregon then this appropriation bill must be practically reorganized as respects these salaries, and we shall be confronted with the question of undoing what has been done for the last twelve years in the way of reducing compensation; and we are called upon now to do this as Republicans at a time when there is complaint, whether just or otherwise, as to the extravagance of Congress, and when there is complaint, whether just or otherwise, of the extravagance of the Senate. We are doing this at a time when there is prevailing over this country a belief that those who are engaged in laboring pursuits are not receiving that compensation which their labors require. We are doing it at a time when a great many people in this country feel the oppression of low prices and of no or but little employment.

I submit to my fellow-Senators on both sides of the Chamber that this is not the time to run through this appropriation bill and increase salary after salary in the Senate above and beyond what has been the rule for the last twelve years. I do not say in this particular instance whether this salary is exactly what it ought to be or not. I know that for two years of Democratic administration, and under Democratic dominance, it was reduced and held. I have no doubt a most worthy and excellent man holds it now, but I submit that he ought not to ask us at this time to increase his compensation when there is practically no increase of duties for him to perform.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator knows very well that the Senators from Oregon made strenuous opposition to the reduction of the salary the first time it was attempted.

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. DOLPH. So far as following it to its legitimate conclusion is concerned, I give the Senator notice that as long as such a difference as exists, for instance, between the Territory of Idaho and the State of Oregon is made, I shall follow it to the legitimate conclusion of securing an increase of the appropriation, if possible. If we are going to have general retrenchment and reform and cut down the salaries in all the States and Territories similarly situated, that would be one thing; but I have never been able to learn why the State of Oregon was singled out and why the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon should be cut down $700, from $2,500 to $1,800, while the surveyor-general of the Territory of Idaho and the State of Washington and the Territory of Arizona and the Territory of Wyoming and the Territory of New Mexico and the Territory of Utah, and nearly all the public-land States and Territories should be left at $2,500, and why the Senate committee should have fixed the compensation of the surveyor-general of the two Dakotas at the present session at $2,000 and the Senate should appropriate for their salary without question, and Oregon be still left at $1,800.

I will say that the present incumbent of the surveyor-general's office is an appointment made under the last Administration, but that is a matter of entire indifference to me. It does not affect my judgment at all. I have made just as strenuous an effort here when the reduction was first attempted, and every year I have offered an amendment to increase the salary. I think it has been raised by a vote of the Senate on one or two occasions and dropped out in conference.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is true. Since this salary was reduced to $1,800 a year, I think it has been twice increased upon an appropriation bill by a vote of the Senate, but finally dropped out.

Mr. President, because under a Democratic Administration or any other Administration a wrong has been committed, it does not follow that we are to continue that wrong. My friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, if he will be entirely candid about this matter, as he generally is candid about everything, must admit, if he will look over the ground, that $1,800 is not an adequate salary for the surveyor-general of the State of Oregon, in view of the amount of unsurveyed lands in that State and in view of the amount of work that is imposed, or should be imposed if it is not, by proper appropriations, upon that officer.

Again, an invidious distinction is made here that is all wrong and should be righted, and righted now. The surveyor-general of the Territory of Arizona gets $2,500; the surveyor-general of Colorado gets $2,500; the surveyor-general of Idaho, where there is really less work than in the State of Oregon, a less number of acres of public land to be surveyed and smaller appropriations made, perhaps, for the surveys, gets $2,500; the surveyor-general of Montana gets $2,500. And yet a few Congresses ago Congress singled out Oregon, in the face of the statute fixing the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon at $2,500, and reduced it to the sum of $1,800. Not by a regular statute repealing the act fixing the salary, but in an inappropriate way, by a clause in the appropriation bill, that statute was repealed either for the purposes of that year or for all time, as the case may be, by reducing the salary of the surveyor-general of the State of Oregon from $2,500 to $1,800.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations talks about extravagant and increasing expenses, and what we propose now as a Republican Administration to do in view of what has been done before. Mr. President, I do not think the fate of the Republican party in this nation depends upon the question as to whether we shall pay the surveyor-general of the State of Oregon a proper salary, to wit, $2,500, or whether we shall pay him $1,800. I think if there is nothing more than that to be brought up against the Republican party hereafter the Republican party will win in the future as it has won in the past.

In view of all the circumstances of the case I sincerely hope that no further opposition will be made by the committee to the proposition to increase this salary to the same amount that is paid in the surrounding States and Territories. The surveyor-general of the State of Washington gets $2,500; of the Territory of Idaho, $2,500; of Arizona, $2,500; of Montana, $2,500; and with the same amount of business, if not more, in comparison with some of these adjoining districts the surveyor-general of Oregon must be put off with $1,800, and with an allowance of $3,000, I believe it is, for clerk-hire.

Mr. DAWES. I call the attention of the Presiding Officer to the fact that there is no quorum here.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that there may be a call of the Senate, if there is no quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Ransom,
Bate,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Reagan,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Manderson,	Sanders,
Blair,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Call,	George,	Moody,	Squire,
Carlisle,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Oullom,	Gray,	Paddock,	Teller,
Davis,	Harris,	Payne,	Turpie,
Dawes,	Hawley,	Platt,	Washburn,
Dolph,	Hearst,	Power,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The roll-call develops the presence of forty-three Senators. A quorum is present. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 894) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that that order may be laid aside temporarily, until the Senate can act upon the legislative appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside in order that the Senate may proceed with the appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The pending question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I was very much astonished to hear both Senators from Oregon state a few moments ago to the Senate that it was vicious legislation to appropriate a different sum than that which was provided by law as the salary of an officer. That identical question has been pending before the Senate since yesterday; and if I am not very much mistaken both Senators from Oregon voted this morning to appropriate $5,000 to pay an officer's salary when the amount fixed by law was $4,000. Yet each of them says that where the statute fixes the salary it is vicious legislation to change it on an appropriation bill, although it has not been one hour since both those Senators voted to change the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office from $4,000 to $5,000, and that by an amendment to an appropriation bill. It would seem, then, that it is only vicious where it reduces a salary, and not vicious where it raises it. If I have misstated the vote of either of the Senators, I hope they will correct me, but that is the way I understood it.

Mr. DOLPH. Then I will correct the Senator right away. I said the question was whether the repealing clause contained in this bill and contained in other appropriation acts since 1884—

Mr. BERRY. Did not the Senator vote to raise the salary?

Mr. DOLPH. Wait a moment; I am coming to that. I said the question was whether that was a repeal, in so far as it was inconsistent with the first clause of the act which provided that the appropriations made in it should be in full for the service of the fiscal year. But I said if it was construed to be a repeal of the clause of the general statute fixing the salaries, there is now no law fixing the salary of officers, and it leaves the Committee on Appropriations every year to fix the amount they should receive; and I said that would be vicious legislation.

Mr. BERRY. I ask the Senator if he did not vote to raise the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. DOLPH. I did.

Mr. BERRY. You did so vote?

Mr. DOLPH. I did, for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. BERRY. Although the statute fixed the salary at $4,000, both Senators voted to change that and give him $5,000 upon an appropriation bill?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, I did, and will do it again, because I believe the salary of $4,000 is entirely insufficient; and I believe the salary of $1,800 is insufficient and inadequate for the surveyor-general of the State of Oregon. Therefore I shall vote to put up the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon to what the statute fixes it at, and because I believe the statute does not fix the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office at an adequate sum I voted to increase it to what I think is adequate. So I will try to do right all around.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon may reconcile it to himself to say that it is vicious legislation to appropriate $1,800 where the statute fixes a salary at $2,500—

Mr. MITCHELL. I said, so far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. BERRY. I decline to yield for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas declines to yield.

Mr. BERRY. And yet the Senator says it is not vicious where the statute fixes it at $4,000, and therefore he votes to raise it to $5,000. If he thinks there is no inconsistency in that position, if he can assert that the one is vicious legislation while the other is entirely proper to be put upon an appropriation bill, that is a question for him; between him and the Senate. Now I will hear the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator yield now?

Mr. BERRY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MITCHELL. So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, although the Senator from Arkansas has repeated it at least half a dozen times, I said nothing at all about vicious legislation.

Mr. BERRY. The RECORD will show.

Mr. MITCHELL. The RECORD will not show anything of the kind. I did not use the term. I said nothing about vicious legislation. I simply advocated this amendment because I believe the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon is inadequate and ought to be raised. I never used the word "vicious." I said nothing about "vicious legislation," and the RECORD will not show it; and I defy the Senator from Arkansas to point it out, either now or to-morrow morning.

Mr. BERRY. It is not in the RECORD now; it is in the Reporter's notes. As to the exact language, unless the Senator changes his notes, I think he will find it in the RECORD. The Senator may see the Reporter and have it made different to-night, but we shall see to-morrow morning. At any rate, both Senators attacked the practice, referred to the fact that the statute fixed the salary at a certain amount.

There is another thing that is a little peculiar about this to me. It is remarkably strange that in 1884, or, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said, in 1885, when a Democratic Administration came in and there was a Democratic surveyor-general for the State of Oregon, this salary should have been changed, which before that time had been $2,500 by statute. Yet it was changed, and he was given $1,800, and I do not remember in all the years from that time to this that either Senator has ever appeared upon this floor and asked to have it raised back again until now.

Mr. DOLPH and Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. BERRY. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To which Senator does the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. BERRY. To either one.

Mr. DOLPH. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me a moment?

Mr. BERRY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Arkansas surely does not desire to misrepresent me.

Mr. BERRY. I not only do not desire to misrepresent, but I have not done so.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Arkansas has without intending it misrepresented, because there has been no session of Congress that I have been in the Senate since the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon was reduced to $1,800 when I have not advocated an increase. I advocated an increase for Mr. Taylor, the Democratic surveyor-general of the State of Oregon, at two sessions prior to this, as the records will show. Therefore, either the Senator from Arkansas does not know what he is talking about, or he is willfully misrepresenting the fact.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Oregon produce the record and show where he advocated an increase for a Democratic surveyor-general? When he does that, I will admit that my recollection is reversed.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BERRY. Not now.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to make—

Mr. BERRY. No, not now. I stated that I did not remember upon any occasion that either of the Senators had appeared here and advocated a change of this salary. That was the statement I made, and if the Senator [Mr. MITCHELL], instead of making an assertion, would bring forward the record which shows where he has done so, it would be a good deal better evidence. However, it might have been done when I was not present. I simply said that I had no such recollection.

But the fact remains, Mr. President, that up to 1885, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, this surveyor-general, when he was a Republican, was paid $2,500, and the fact remains that whoever may have advocated an increase no change was made during the four years of Democratic rule and that the Democratic surveyor-general received only $1,800; and now at the first session after a Republican surveyor-general has been appointed the Senators come here and ask that it be brought back to $2,500. Those are facts which can not be denied. Whoever did advocate it the law was changed in 1884, as stated by the Senator from Oregon, or in 1885, as stated by the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, and the salary has remained at $1,800 up to this day, and now they ask the Senate to give $2,500.

I say, Mr. President, that such legislation is unfair; it is unjust; and it illustrates better than anything I can say the impropriety of changing on an appropriation bill the statute law where the salary is fixed, and increasing or decreasing the salary, if it has not already been done, as in this case. I believe the rule should work both ways. I say when Congress deliberately fixes a salary we have no right on an appropriation bill to give more or give less. That is true.

But, as the chairman of the committee has stated, this salary and many others have been changed heretofore. It remained so for years, and I presume it will so remain. In view of that fact I think it would be very unfair and very unjust that now at this time, after four years at $1,800, without showing that there is any necessity for an increased salary, the new officer should be paid $700 more per annum than the one who served under the last Administration.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator is incorrect when he states that I said the change was made in 1884.

Mr. BERRY. I so stated.

Mr. DOLPH. On the contrary, I stated that in 1884 in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill the salary fixed by statute was appropriated, that is $2,500; and therefore if there was an act, as has been claimed, in 1884, which provided that the sums appropriated by that act should be the salaries of the officers, the salary should remain fixed at $2,500. I also stated that I did not know whether it was the next year, 1885, or a subsequent year that the salary was cut down.

I now state, for the benefit of the Senator, that the very first year that the salary was cut down I offered an amendment in the Senate restoring it to $2,500. The amendment was adopted by the Senate, but it was dropped out in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. BERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.
The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to know from Senators who are in favor of this amendment what special necessity exists, if there exists such, for raising the salary of this officer at this particular time. If the Senator from Arkansas is correct, for the last four years the officer has been paid only $1,800. I should be glad to be informed of the fact.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senators from Oregon believe, both of them, that he has been paid just $700 too little all the while, and on this floor, whenever the opportunity presented, both of us have advocated an increase, all through the Democratic Administration, for the Democratic surveyor-general of Oregon, Mr. Taylor. We believe that $1,800 is inadequate. It is $700 per annum less than is paid to the surveyor-general of any of the surrounding Territories or States.

Mr. DOLPH. The surveyor-general of California receives $2,750.

Mr. MITCHELL. The surveyor-general of California receives $2,750; of Idaho, $2,500; of Arizona, $2,500; of Washington, $2,500; of Montana, $2,500; but for some reason which I could never understand Oregon was singled out some three or four years ago and the salary was reduced from the amount fixed by statute, $2,500, to $1,800; and we have been endeavoring all the while to get it back, because we thought it was an injustice to that officer, irrespective of the question as to what his politics were.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator if he means to say that the officer discharging the same duties in Washington and in the other places which he has named receives a different compensation from the salary received in Oregon?

Mr. MITCHELL. I mean to say exactly that. I mean to say that they all receive $2,500, while this officer, performing the same duties in the State of Oregon, receives but $1,800, and that the amount of $2,500 has been reduced by clauses in appropriation bills from year to year, whereas there is a statute on the statute-book to-day, unless it has been repealed by the clauses in the appropriation acts, which fixes the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon at $2,500. Those are the facts.

Mr. GEORGE. Is there any difference, so far as the Senator knows, between the duties and the labors of the officers of the several States and Territories, and the expenses attendant on the duties of their offices, and those of this office?

Mr. MITCHELL. In some of the Territories there is more surveying done, perhaps, than in others, but in each and every case the whole time and attention of the officer is required.

Mr. DAWES. If that be so, there are several of them that are in as bad a predicament as the surveyor-general of Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL. In a few of the old States, where there are no lands to be surveyed, they still have surveyors-general who are receiving $1,800 a year.

Mr. DAWES. In the old States of North Dakota and South Dakota the surveyor-general receives $2,000 a year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]? The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH], and vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SAWYER. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT], but I have reserved the right to vote to make a quorum, or where the question involved was not political, so I vote "nay."

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. My colleague [Mr. McMILLAN] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. HIGGINS. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PASCO. I again announce my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL].

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], but I will vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS. As my vote is necessary to make a quorum, I vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Allen,	Davis,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Blair,	Dixon,	Mitchell,	Sanders,
Oali,	Dolph,	Morgan,	Squire,
Cameron,	Evaris,	Payne,	Stewart,
Carlisle,	Frye,	Pierce,	Stockbridge,
Casney,	Hawley,	Plumb,	Teller,
Chandler,	Higgins,	Power,

NAYS—20.

Daniel,	Hoar,	Quay,
Eustis,	Ingalls,	Sherman,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to offer an amendment on page 2.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me, I want to change a footing, made necessary by the amendment just agreed to. In line 25, on page 96, I move to insert "$5,500" in lieu of "$4,800."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 2, line 24, I move to strike out the words "and financial clerk, at" and the word "each" after "dollars," and to insert after the words "three thousand dollars" the words:

Financial clerk, $3,000.

The financial clerk now gets $3,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which financial clerk?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. Nixon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, yes; the Senate financial clerk.

Mr. TELLER. He handles a very large amount of money, not only for the payment of Senators and the force of the Senate, but he has a great many demands upon him by Senators in the way of having drafts cashed and those things which are inevitable to his position. It seems to me that after his long service he is entitled, if we are going into raising salaries, to have his salary raised.

Mr. PLATT. How much does the Senator propose to make it?

Mr. TELLER. I propose to make it $3,600. It is now $3,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order upon the amendment that it is not estimated for and that it has not been reported from any standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. I can not hear what the Senator says.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order upon this amendment that it is not estimated for, nor is it reported from any standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that the Senate has ruled this morning on an exactly similar case that such an amendment was in order. If that be so—

Mr. EDMUNDS. What case does the Senator refer to?

Mr. GEORGE. I believe it was the proposition to raise the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was reported by a standing committee.

Mr. ALLISON. And referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GEORGE. I understood from several Senators who are familiar with the rules—I am not—that that was a precedent for this case. I desire to say, in opposition to the point of order which has been made by the Senator from Iowa—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This debate proceeds by unanimous consent, as the question of order is not debatable.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well; I should like to say just one word on that subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS and others. No objection.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that the rule under which the point of order is made is the one which says that general legislation shall not be grafted on an appropriation bill. Am I right in that proposition?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not the question of order raised by the Senator from Iowa. It is that this amendment is not reported by any standing or select committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that it is not estimated for. That is what the Chair understands to be the question of order raised by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. Those are the points I make on the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Is there a rule which prevents the Senate from making an appropriation which has not been estimated for and which has not been reported from any standing committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In this particular case the Chair says he regrets that there is.

Mr. CALL. I submit the question whether this is any more general legislation than the other cases which have been admitted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question of general legislation is not raised in this point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DAWES. On page 84, in the first line—

Mr. CALL. If the decision of the Chair has not been made, it seems to me that as this is a matter concerning an officer of the Senate there can be no estimate made. There is nobody to make an estimate. As to the matter of general legislation, it seems to me clearly within the decision of the Senate this morning.

Mr. DAWES. On page 84, in the first line, I move to strike out "four" and insert "five."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment moved by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

Mr. GEORGE. Has any disposition been made of the amendment moved by the Senator from Colorado?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustained the point of order raised by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GEORGE. Then I will appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi has a right to appeal, and does appeal, from the decision of the Chair, and the question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? That question is debatable.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, Mr. President, as suggested by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], this does not come within the rule of estimates, because it does not belong to any department of the Government except the Senate itself. If one of the Departments makes an estimate for an increase of salary for one of its officers, it is allowed to be in order, because we have the judgment of the Department in favor of the advisability of raising the salary. We stand in relation to this officer exactly as the head of a Department stands in relation to any officer under him. I think, therefore, that the true meaning of the rule can not be applied to an officer of this body, since it is impossible under our rules and proceedings that any Department of the Government should make an estimate for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, there is a mistake about this matter, as is evident by the statement of the Senator from Florida. These officers are all embraced in the estimates which are submitted to Congress for appropriation, just the same as all the other employees of the various Departments.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator this question, How are these estimates made out? Is there any officer in the Senate who makes any estimate, or does the Treasury Department take the appropriation of the last session as its guide and simply estimate that amount?

Mr. PLUMB. The Secretary of the Senate sends to the Secretary of the Treasury his own estimate, and the Secretary of the Treasury either adopts that or revises it according as his judgment dictates, and embodies it in the formal estimates which he sends down at the beginning of the session of Congress.

Mr. GEORGE. Allow me to ask a question. Does the Secretary of the Treasury ever submit an estimate of this sort—

Mr. PLUMB. Always.

Mr. GEORGE. So many dollars for the Secretary of the Senate, so many dollars for the Chief Clerk, so many dollars for the various officers of the Senate, specifying each one of them, or does he submit an estimate in a lump for the whole expenditures of the Senate for its officers?

Mr. PLUMB. They are estimated for in detail, just as they appear here in the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. How is that? Are the estimates made in detail or in a lump sum?

Mr. PLUMB. They are estimated for in detail, just as they appear in the bill.

I want to say, Mr. President, that I think there is no member of the Senate who will take issue with anything that may be said favorable to the officer who is the subject of this proposed increase. He is as faithful and intelligent as any official about the Senate, and that is saying enough. But I want to say upon the general proposition, in which the point of order is only remotely involved, if at all, that the officers of the Senate are better paid than any persons performing similar duty in any other branch of the civil service. The places about the Senate are the prize positions of the civil service of the United States. The pay is not only greater, but the duties are less arduous and less protracted. One year of every two there is a vacation of at least eight months, during which all these persons are perfectly free to go and come as they please, without any restraint growing out of their official employment, while their salaries go regularly on and are paid to them every month by drafts transmitted to their post-office address.

Mr. PLATT. That hardly applies to this officer.

Mr. PLUMB. After the long session, of course the vacation that these people have is less, but they all have less service and more pay than any persons similarly employed by the Government. I do not object to that, Mr. President, but I think we have got to a point where we ought to stop, and we ought to stop, not because we may not have our compassion moved about a particular individual, but we ought to stop because it is our duty to stop. It is our duty to the Senate as a body, it is our duty to the country, that we should stop.

I want to say further that I regard the service of the Senate (I am only repeating in this what I have said before) as being exceedingly top-heavy. I believe $100,000 a year more is spent every twelve months for the service of attendance upon the Senators here than is anywhere necessary for the proper discharge of the public duties. It is growing every year, and it will soon become so large that in itself it will become an issue in this country; and it would not surprise me if men were elected to this body within a very short period of time upon a pledge to ruthlessly and relentlessly apply the knife and cut off the excrescences around this body.

I do not speak of this as reflecting upon any individual member of the Senate force. So far as the duties devolved upon them are concerned they are equal to them, and they discharge them faithfully and well. We have been generous with them in the matter of salaries. But that is not enough, Mr. President. Not a session goes by that we are not importuned from the beginning of the session to the close thereof, or at all events so long as the proper appropriation bill is pending, to increase somebody's salary and to add to the already extraordinary and extravagant force with which the Senate is provided.

I think, Mr. President, we have a right to say to these people whom we thus employ that they shall let us alone; that they shall not pursue us in our committee-rooms and in the corridors, and all other places where men can be got at, soliciting us to increase their salaries. There is an open way which any one of them can find if he desires to, and that is the way of resignation. If any one is not satisfied with his pay here, I hope he will manifest that dissatisfaction in the only practicable way, and that is by resigning.

It is not fair that these people whom we come to regard so kindly should impose upon the good nature of the Senate in the way it has been imposed upon during this session and during all the sessions. We have at intervals given premiums at the close of a session of 10 per cent. of the annual pay of all these people upon the theory that they were overworked, and so on, without any pretense whatever that there was any justice in it, or fairness in it, or anything else but the absolute robbery of the Treasury. Salaries fixed by law for service rendered in accordance with it, slight as it has been, have been added to by an absolute donation out of the Treasury in defiance of law.

I hope, Mr. President, that we shall be satisfied, as I said, to stop where we are, and, when we have taken a careful account of what we are confronted with, that the Senate will deliberately take up this question of force and apply to it the doctrine of retrenchment which ought to be applied and reduce the expenses of this body, as I said, by at least $100,000 annually, bringing about, of course, two things: the discharge of a very large number of persons already employed and the reduction of the salaries of many of those who will remain.

As I said, this is not in any sense a personal reflection upon any of these people, except as they may have transcended the proprieties by solicitation, but it is a protest against a system totally unjustifiable and entirely out of keeping with the rules which we prescribe for other branches of the public service, and totally at variance with everything which men do with reference to their own private affairs.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I think that while the Senator from Kansas in what he says is correct he overlooks the difficulty and the reason of the condition of things to which he alludes, and that is a law which pervades both branches of the National Legislature, and has for many years, to let each House regulate its own affairs in this respect. The Committee on Appropriations of the House and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, with the sanction of the two bodies, have assumed to say that we will let each House regulate its own affairs and its compensation according to its own suggestions. The courtesy which exists has pervaded the relations between the two Houses for many years and has resulted in just this condition of things. The House does not feel at liberty to criticize our provisions for our service, and we in turn do not feel at liberty to criticize any provision which the House makes for its own service, whatever may be our own opinion in respect to it.

So each House goes on with the feeling that the other House will have nothing to say, whatever provision it may make, and imperceptibly almost this condition of things has come to be such that it is, as the Senator from Kansas says, a serious matter, which sooner or later the two branches together must take hold of and reform.

Mr. GEORGE and Mr. MORRILL addressed the Chair.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course I yield to the Senator from Vermont if he desires to occupy the floor.

Mr. MORRILL. Only for a moment. I was going to say, Mr. President, that I hope the time of the Senate will not be consumed in useless debate, because I am sure that this will result in no action. This amendment is clearly out of order. If it were otherwise I should vote in favor of it. This officer is in charge of a financial trust that would be rewarded by any private party or corporation by a salary of not less than $5,000 or $6,000 a year. He is detained here during the entire year. He is a man of character and is worthy of an increase of compensation, but at the same time no committee has reported in favor of the proposition. It is clearly out of order, and therefore I shall vote against it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I feel that I ought to reply to the remarks made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and, in the first place, I desire to state to the Senate that the officer in whose behalf this motion has been made has not requested me, nor, as far as I know or believe, any other member of this body, to make the motion. He has not gone to any Senator in his committee-room or elsewhere asking for an increase of his salary.

Mr. President, allow me further to say in the line of the remarks made by the Senator from Vermont that this officer is not, as was stated by the Senator from Kansas, relieved from his duties during the vacation. He stays here all the time and makes remittances to absent Senators every week or every month as they direct him to do. More than a million of dollars is received by this officer every year and disbursed.

He has received this large sum and disbursed it, as I understand, for about twenty-seven years, and not one dollar, not one nickel, not one cent, has been lost to the Government by his action. In addition to that, Mr. President, as was suggested by the Senator from Colorado, he collects for the accommodation of Senators and the employees of this body from eighteen to twenty-five thousand dollars a month outside of the fiscal operations of his office.

Under these circumstances, I think that this meritorious, this honest, and this modest officer, who I undertake to aver has never suggested to a single member of this body (and if there has been one to whom the suggestion has been made I should like him to get up and say so), known by every member of this body to be all that I describe him to be, and who has never suggested to any member of this body that he desired his salary raised—I say that, taking into consideration all that has been said by the Senator from Vermont and all that we all of us ought to know, he ought to have the very moderate compensation for this very large responsibility, for this very careful, honest, and continuous service of the Senate, at least the sum of $3,600, and I was in hopes that, as every Senator knew of the extraordinary merits, of the fidelity, the care, the skill with which the duties of this office have been performed, every Senator in this body would be glad to testify his appreciation of his merits by voting for this very small increase in his salary. I believe notwithstanding the technical reading of the rule that it was never meant by this body that its discretion, its power to deal with its own officers, should ever have been transferred to a head of a Department.

We, sir, are the head of the Departments so far as our officers are concerned. We are presumed to know what our officers deserve, and not the Secretary of the Treasury, and it is a strained and technical construction, if not a perversion of the rule, for it to be asserted here in opposition to our right to deal with things within our personal knowledge, that we can not do so without the permission of the Secretary of the Treasury. I have done what I believed to be a duty which I owe to the Senate and to this very meritorious officer in saying that much.

I might be indulged in making one single remark which I hope will be offensive to nobody, that, in this day of faithlessness on the part of private and public custodians of other people's money, a conspicuous example of one who has been faithful in all things ought to receive recognition from us.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, upon the appeal from the decision of the Chair the merit of the amendment has been somewhat extensively debated. As the temporary occupant of the chair I decided the question of order as I understand the parliamentary law and the rule of the Senate to be. I regretted the necessity of so deciding. Nothing has been said by the Senator from Mississippi or any other Senator in commendation of the conduct of the financial clerk of the Senate that I can not most fully indorse. I do not know an employé of the Government in any one of its Departments of any grade that I regard as more meritorious or worthy than the official whose salary it is proposed to increase. I am quite satisfied that he deserves every dollar that he would receive if this amendment were agreed to; and if the Senate shall decide it in order against my judgment I shall most cheerfully vote for the amendment; but that it is out of order I am perfectly satisfied. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. CALL. I should be glad to have the rule read under which it is ruled out.

Mr. HARRIS. Rule XVI.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The rule will be read.

Mr. CALL. I hold it in my hand, the rule.

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have the first or second clause read?

Mr. CALL. I will read it. I have it here.

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law.

Now, what does that mean, Mr. President? Is there any existing law authorizing the office of financial clerk of the Senate or is there not? If there is, is there any existing law which confers upon this body the authority to increase or decrease that appropriation? There can be no doubt about that, that this amendment is to carry out the provisions of an existing law, a law creating the office of Secretary of the Senate and a law which leaves his compensation to be fixed by each Congress that may sit and pass an appropriation bill.

Now, as to the question of an estimate. There is no doubt that the estimate provided for in this rule does not refer to the case of an officer of the Senate, that the recommendation of a Cabinet officer upon a subject which he is expressly forbidden to have any cognizance of and in reference to which his opinion can not even be considered by the Senate, because by the Constitution the Senate is made the sole judge of whatever is necessary for its organization, would be out of place. How, then, can it be said that that rule is intended to ask of a Cabinet officer what his opinion is in reference to the manner in which the Senate shall perform a function committed to it alone?

For these reasons, Mr. President, it is not only certain that this provision in regard to an estimate being required to move an increase in an appropriation bill does not refer to the estimate that is made by the head of a Department of the appropriations for the expenses of the Senate, for the reasons, as I have stated, that the opinion and recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury or of any other authority outside of the Senate can not be regarded by the Senate. The Senate must be the judge of the compensation of its own officers and what is necessary for them.

Now, Mr. President, in regard to this matter of economy, if it be true that the service of the Senate contains a great many superfluous persons they should be dismissed immediately from employment, but that has nothing to do with the question of whether a particular officer deserves a higher or a lower compensation. The duties performed by Mr. Nixon and many other officers here require their entire time and attention, both during vacation and during the session of the Senate. The compensation, according to the rates of living in Washington, leaves them to serve their lifetime, and if they have a family, without the ability to make any adequate provision for them.

If, then, this service is important to be rendered, it is important to the people of the United States that it should be rendered efficiently, that it should be rendered by men of capacity; and the fact that there are thousands of others who are willing to do it for nothing or for a small compensation makes nothing in the argument that the true interests of the people and the true economy of the Government consist in selecting capable persons and paying them a reasonable and even a liberal compensation. Let there be no superfluous servants in this body, but let the compensation be what is not only reasonable, but sufficient to enable them to make some adequate provision for their families. That is the true rule of economy which would diminish the expenditures of the Government in every Department.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa moves to lay the appeal on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the bill may be reported to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAWES. I was absent when the bill was taken from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill has not been reported from the Committee of the Whole, I think.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been reported at this moment.

Mr. HARRIS. I had not noticed it.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair. As I understood the question just now upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, it was on an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and that the question to be determined by the Senate was, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? and under that impression I voted "ay."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] moved to lay the appeal on the table, and that motion was carried.

Mr. GEORGE. To lay the appeal on the table?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not understand it at the time, and if I had I should have called for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will again put the motion. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator will not do that. It compels a great many Senators here who are just as warmly in favor of this amendment as the Senator from Mississippi is to vote "no," because the Chair was clearly right in his decision.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not see why, if everybody is in favor of it, the amendment can not pass. That is what bothers me. That is one of the troubles I have in this whole matter. On the suggestion of friends around me, I shall call for the yeas and nays, if I can be sustained on that question.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere with any full and proper consideration of this question, but the bill is now in the Senate and open to amendment, and I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that the amendment can be renewed in the Senate, and the same question can be considered over and over again.

Mr. GEORGE. All right. Then I shall offer it at the proper time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate, and the question is on agreeing to the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is now before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I moved to amend in Committee of the Whole, but was taken off my feet by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], and I now renew the amendment in the Senate. On page 84, in line 1, I move to strike out "four" and insert "five."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 84, line 1, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

For the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $5,000.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President—

Mr. ALLISON. At the proper time—I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Massachusetts—I shall make the point of order upon this amendment that it has not been estimated for.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator is laboring under a mistake in that respect. I desire to state to the Senate, however, why I have made this motion. I have uniformly during the whole discussion voted against the raising of any of these salaries. I did not think it was right to enter upon the raising of salaries in the manner and at the time the Senate has done it to-day. I entered my protest against it. I am upon the Committee on Appropriations, where all this matter was discussed. I co-operated with the Committee on Appropriations in the conclusion they came to that it was not wise at this time to raise these salaries.

At the same time and in committee I was compelled to state—if I am not out of order I will state here now that if the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is to be measured by the amount of labor to be performed, by the annoying, perplexing, and wearing character of that labor, as well as by the responsibility attached to the office, there was no office of them all that called upon the Senate for raising it so much as the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I stated also that, as I have been supposed to be somewhat so situated that it was my duty to look after the proper administration of that office, I should be compelled in committee to insist upon it, so far as I could, if any of these salaries were to be raised, that the salary of that office, first of all, should be raised to the sum of $5,000.

The Committee on Appropriations, with my approval, as I have said, decided against raising any of these salaries. I have come into the Senate and, in the face of a very strong case put by the Senators from Nebraska, I have stood by that decision. But here is an officer the character of whose work, as everybody knows, is more perplexing, more wearing, and more continuous day and night than that of the Commissioner of the General Land Office or any other. He has to do with those who never know whether he is doing right with them or wrong. He has to hear their complaints from sunrise till sunset, and if he is not called out of his bed by night to hear their stories of complaint and injustice, whether right or wrong, he does well. He discharges what no other one of these Commissioners does, an appropriation to the amount of $7,000,000.

For the last ten years and more every Secretary of the Interior has recommended and urged upon Congress that his salary be raised to $5,000. Secretary Kirkwood in his time, while Mr. Price were himself out in that office, urged upon Congress that he should have a compensation more in accordance with that received by others in less laborious and responsible situations. He was followed by Mr. Schurz in the same recommendation, and he in turn was followed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] when Secretary of the Interior; and when Mr. Atkins had to leave the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, so laborious was it as to exhaust him in the earnest efforts to discharge its duties, Secretary Lamar sent a communication to Congress in these words:

The office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the great responsibilities and the peculiar nature of the duties imposed upon it by law for "the management, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, of all Indian affairs and of all matters arising out of Indian relations," is one of the most trying and difficult positions in the public service, requiring constant and exacting labors and unremitting care and watchfulness. The salary of $4,000 allowed by law is by no means commensurate with the requirements of the office, and I therefore recommend that it be increased to $5,000 per annum, thus making it to correspond with the salaries allowed for other bureau officers of this Department, which it at least equals in importance.

He also called attention to the fact that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was responsible for the disbursement of $7,000,000 or thereabouts each year. The present Secretary communicated all these facts to Congress and earnestly recommended that this salary be raised. On the 18th of May the Secretary of the Treasury communicated to Congress a new estimate for this salary made by the Secretary of the Interior in Executive Document No. 130, and therefore I suppose there can be no question that the amendment is in order.

Mr. President, I submit this because this man ought to have his salary raised. If the Senate had adhered to the position recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, I should not have said a word. I took my share of the responsibility in the committee-room and I took my share of it here in the Senate during the discussion; but the Senate has decided differently, and having so decided I think they ought not to make an exception in their decision, but should give this officer a compensation in some measure commensurate with the responsibilities of his office.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Iowa state his point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. My point of order is that this is not estimated for and that it is not recommended by a standing committee of the Senate.

The Senator from Massachusetts calls the document which I hold in my hand an estimate. I do not think, fairly construed, it can be so designated. I desire to show to the Senate how this "estimate" had its origin. It will be borne in mind that in the Book of Estimates there is no suggestion for an increase of the salary of this office. I hold in my hand what the Senator from Massachusetts calls an estimate, which begins as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, May 24.

Mr. DAWES. It does not begin there.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What year?

Mr. ALLISON. Eighteen hundred and ninety. This is the communication:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, May 24, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to be in receipt, by your reference of the 23d instant with direction to forward the estimate called for, of a communication addressed to you by Hon. R. T. PETTIGREW, United States Senator, in which he states that he has introduced a bill to increase the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the assistant commissioner.

He further states that this bill can be incorporated in the judicial, executive, and legislative appropriation bill if an estimate for it from the Department be transmitted to the Committee on Appropriations in regular order.

He further requests that such an estimate be prepared and forwarded at once, the increase of these salaries to be at $1,000 per annum, each.

In compliance with the request of the Department, I have caused to be prepared the necessary estimate, herewith inclosed, and inasmuch as the bill introduced by Mr. PETTIGREW (S. 3908; see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 23d instant, page 5396) contemplates in addition the increase of salary of the financial clerk of the Indian Office, I have also estimated for an increase at the rate of $50 per annum for said financial clerk, with the recommendation that the same be forwarded to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations through the honorable the Secretary of the Treasury.

The letter of Senator PETTIGREW is respectfully returned herewith.

Very respectfully,

R. V. BELT, Acting Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

It proceeds to estimate additional compensation for Commissioner of $1,000 and additional compensation for assistant commissioner of $1,000 and for financial clerk $250. That estimate is transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury in a brief note which I will read:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, May 26, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a supplemental estimate of appropriation for "Salaries, Indian Office, 1891," and request that the increase of salaries of the several officers therein proposed be incorporated in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, now pending in the United States Senate.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. NOBLE, Secretary.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The point I make is that these are not estimates made by the Secretary of the Treasury in contemplation of law. Now I will read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 28, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior of the 26th instant, submitting a supplemental estimate for "Salaries, Indian Office," for the ensuing fiscal year.

Respectfully yours,

WM. WINDOM, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

That is a mere letter of transmittal, and is not an estimate in contemplation of the law which requires that an estimate shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting this whole Book of Estimates.

In conformity to the requirements of sections—

Of the Revised Statutes named—

I have the honor to transmit, for the information of Congress, the estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, as furnished by the several Executive Departments; also, statements of the proceeds of sales of Government property.

Mr. ALLISON. What are the sections of the Revised Statutes to which the Senator refers?

Mr. DAWES. Sections 3669, 3670, and 3672. That is the way they come here. Each Department makes its separate estimate and transmits it through the Secretary of the Treasury, and he recommends the appropriations exactly in the words here for the consideration of Congress. They are to be transmitted through him as made by the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of complying with the law.

Mr. ALLISON. I read two of the sections of the Revised Statutes referred to. They are as follows:

SEC. 3670. The Secretary of the Treasury shall annex to the annual estimates of the appropriations required for the public service a statement of the appropriations for the service of the year, which may have been made by former acts.

SEC. 3669. All annual estimates for the public service shall be submitted to Congress through the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be included in the Book of Estimates prepared under his direction.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will allow me, the estimates are to be submitted through the Secretary of the Treasury. This is the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 28, 1890.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior of the 26th instant, submitting a supplemental estimate for "Salaries, Indian Office," for the ensuing fiscal year.

Respectfully yours,

WM. WINDOM, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if I may make an observation?

Mr. DAWES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BLAIR. I am desired by those who know to make a correction, by authority, in regard to the horses taken care of by the Senate employes. The Senate has ten horses and five men to take care of them; and instead of there being two men to one horse it is two horses to one man. I make this statement in justice to those who have been maligned in debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In view of the difference of opinion existing among Senators in relation to the point of order raised by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the Chair prefers to submit the question for the decision of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I want to complete this bill, and I waive the point of order made on the Senator from Massachusetts as respects the question of the estimates, but I submit that such a letter as I have read, whether it is or is not technically an estimate, is not such a paper as the Senate should act upon in making appropriations. It shows distinctly that this originated in a special bill introduced into the Senate, and that it had not its origin in the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DAWES. In answer to the Senator from Iowa, I wish to call his attention to the fact that this estimate was preceded on March 10 by a letter from the Secretary of the Interior to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, in which he elaborates his recommendation of this proposed increase of salary in five pages, and in which he sets forth the duties of this officer, and from which I quoted myself Secretary Lamar, and accompanying it with the form of a bill.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] took the bill sent here by the Secretary of the Interior and introduced it as a separate measure; but, knowing, as everybody does, that there was great doubt whether that would get through, the Senator from South Dakota, proceeding as everybody else did, undertook to make this increase of salary in order upon this bill, and the Secretary, carrying out his recommendation, on purpose to make that which he recommended in March in order, made these estimates and states the reasons therefor. That is why there are no reasons accompanying the estimates, because they preceded the estimates made out there.

I think, if there had been nothing before the Senate from the Secretary of the Interior but that naked estimate, there would be some force in what the Senator from Iowa says. The Secretary, however, took the responsibility of urging this upon Congress at length before he sent in the estimate, and, when he was told that to make the amendment in order an estimate must be made, he simply made the estimate.

I put this, as I have already stated, upon the ground of the position the Senate has taken in reference to the other measure. The Senator from Iowa will do me the credit to say that in all these matters I have stood by him; but I have told him distinctly that if the Senate should depart from the decision of the committee there was no reason in the world why the salary of this office should not be raised like the others.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Chair to understand that the Senator from Iowa withdraws the point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when Mr. McMILLAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. McMILLAN] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT], but I reserved the right to vote on questions not political, and therefore I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DIXON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. ALLISON. I hope Senators who have pairs will feel authorized to vote on this question.

Mr. DAWES. I inquire if, by unanimous consent, the call of the yeas and nays can not be withdrawn. I do not know that it can be.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; it can not.

Mr. WALTHALL. I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. We transfer those pairs so that the Senator from Nebraska and I can vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say that I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], but, believing that he would feel at liberty to vote upon this question if I were absent, I have taken the liberty of doing it also. I have already voted, but I desire to make this statement, as I am satisfied the Senator from Delaware would be willing to allow me to vote.

Mr. PADDOCK. Under the arrangement for the transfer of pairs indicated by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DIXON. I will transfer the pair I have with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] to my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH], who is absent, and I vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR].

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—22.
Allen,	Hawley,	Pettigrew,	Stewart,
Blair,	Hearst,	Pierce,	Stockbridge,
Casey,	Hoar,	Power,	Teller,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what duties the executive officer of the Geological Survey has to perform. I find on page 91 of the bill that the Director of the Survey receives a salary of $6,000 a year, which is higher than that received by any other bureau official by $1,000. Then come executive officer, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,400; chief disbursing clerk, $2,400; librarian, $2,000; one photographer, $2,000; three assistant photographers, one at $900, one at $720, and one at $480; two clerks of class 1; one clerk, $1,000; four clerks, at $900 each; four copyists, at $720 each; one watchman, $840; four watchmen, at $600 each; one janitor, $600; four messengers, at $480 each; in all, $35,540.

It will be seen that there are two clerks of very high grade, and the Director receives a larger salary, as I have said, than any other bureau officer, and then the executive officer receives $3,000. I should like to inquire what the functions of the executive officer are and if there is any law creating such an office, unless it be some item in an appropriation bill?

Mr. ALLISON. Is any amendment now pending?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. ALLISON. There is one matter that I omitted. On page 95, line 25, I move to strike out "six" and insert "nine;" and in line 1, on page 96, to strike out "eight" and insert "eleven." That is in the appropriations for the office of the surveyor-general of Montana.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 95, line 25, it is proposed to strike out "six" before the word "thousand" and insert "nine;" and in line 1, on page 96, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eight" and insert "eleven;" so as to make the clause read:

For surveyor-general of Montana, $2,500; and for the clerks in his office, $9,000; in all, $11,500.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that to increase the salary of the surveyor-general?

Mr. ALLISON. No, it is an additional amendment for the surveyor-general's office in Montana.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is the amendment only for the expenses of the surveyor-general's office or for the increase of his salary, or both?

Mr. ALLISON. It is for clerk-hire only in the office of the surveyor-general of Montana, I having omitted to make that amendment, which ought to have been made, for the increase of clerk-hire in view of the estimate which was sent to us after the bill had been made up. Of course the whole matter will be open in conference.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 96, line 5, I desire to add $500 to the incidental expenses of the office of the surveyor-general of Montana, making the amount $2,500. My amendment is to insert the word "five" after the word "thousand."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 96, line 5, after the word "thousand," it is proposed to insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

For rent of office for the surveyor-general, fuel, books, stationery, pay of messenger, and other incidental expenses, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], I will say that the position of executive officer of the Geological Survey has been in existence for a number of years. I understand the duties of the officer to be to take charge of the surveying parties in the field and arrange their accounts, etc. He is the executive officer of this great bureau.

Mr. STEWART. Surveying parties in the field! Why, one branch is in charge of a gentleman whose name I do not recall, one branch is in charge of Captain Dutton, the irrigation department, and Major Thompson—I think that is his name—of the geological department. I am inclined to think that the executive officer at the head of this bureau and the two high-priced clerks are supernumerary. There is no law creating the office and I move to amend by striking out the words "executive officer, $3,000."

Mr. COCKRELL. On what page?

Mr. STEWART. On page 91. I believe the office entirely unnecessary and there is no law for it.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no law but the appropriation bills from year to year. The Geological Survey itself is a creation of an appropriation bill.

Mr. STEWART. There are two clerks in that bureau of a higher grade, so far as the salary is concerned, than can be found in any other bureau. I move to strike out the words "executive officer, $3,000."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 91, line 24, in the appropriations for office of the Director of the Geological Survey, it is proposed to strike out the words "executive officer, $3,000."

Mr. STEWART. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment. I think it is an entirely useless office. The person who fills it has the reputation of being an executive officer of a literary bureau that runs newspapers. I want to know whether that office shall be continued.

Several SENATORS. Let it go.

Mr. STEWART. Friends around me say, "Let it go." Very well, if Senators desire, let it pass. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the attention of the chairman of the committee a moment. Of course the Senate is aware that the Commissioner of Education is one of the most eminent educators in the world and that the duties of that office are exceedingly onerous and constantly increasing in importance. In fact, it has now become one of the most laborious bureaus of the Government, and the salary, as I observe, is only $3,000. I ask the Senator from Iowa if he would object if I should ask unanimous consent of the Senate that that salary be increased to $5,000?

Mr. ALLISON. I will not object to the Senator asking unanimous consent, but I shall object when that consent is asked.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent that at the proper place this be inserted:

The Commissioner of Education, $5,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator object?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. BLAIR. I did not expect the blow would come thence; but I call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to this office and ask their favorable consideration in their deliberations upon the next appropriation bill of the merits of the application for the increase of this salary.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I think the present Commissioner of Education is an able and accomplished man for the work he is doing and that he is not paid as highly as he should be; but it is not our province to increase his compensation in this way. That more properly comes under the consideration of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLAIR. I will say to the Senator that that same committee has on former occasions made an effort to have the salary of this office increased, but we have not succeeded. There may have been reasons why we should not have succeeded formerly, but the continually increasing importance of the duties of that office, its greater consequences to the country, the greater labors, and other considerations which might be suggested are such that I think the Committee on Education and Labor will no doubt ask the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to this matter at the next session, and I hope successfully.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to page 111. Before I do that, however, I wish to call his attention to an amendment which was offered by the chairman himself yesterday, but about which I asked for some information. If the Senator desires to renew that amendment, I shall not interpose an objection, understanding that it is a matter to be left entirely to the other House.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, at the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, I shall move, on page 13, line 18, after the words "War Claims," to insert "Irrigation of Arid Lands." It is a matter for the convenience of the House and will entirely rest with them after the action of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13, after the words "War Claims," in line 18, it is proposed to insert "Irrigation of Arid Lands;" so as to add to the list of committees entitled to clerks in the House of Representatives the "Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I line 22, on the same page, I move to strike out "forty-eight," before the word "thousand," and insert "fifty;" so as to make the total correspond to the increase which has been made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 22, on page 13, before the word "thousand," strike out "forty-eight" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the total "$50,400."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 10, line 16, we have already struck out "two" and inserted "one," but in view of the amendment just made "one" must be stricken out and "three" inserted; so as to read "$393,113.30."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, line 16, strike out the word "one" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the House of Representatives, $393,113.30, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was going to ask what had become of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART]. Was any action had upon it?

Mr. ALLISON. He withdrew it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. STEWART. I will renew it again in the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill is in the Senate now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The call for the yeas and nays was withdrawn.

Mr. STEWART. The amendment was withdrawn, but I will renew it in the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill is in the Senate now, and this is your last chance.

Mr. STEWART. I want to have a vote on that amendment, and I will offer it again. I move to strike out, on page 91, lines 24 and 25, the words "executive officer, $3,000."

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada why he makes that motion. What is the object of it?

Mr. STEWART. Because I think the office is entirely unnecessary. There are two high-priced clerks at $2,400 each, and the director, who should be the executive officer himself, has $6,000; and now here is another executive officer who is provided for, and no law for it, at $3,000. It is entirely out of proportion to all of the salaries paid to other officers of the Government, and nobody is able to say what the duties of that new executive officer are, at least nobody states them publicly. I do not think he has much legitimate business to do. I think that giving one bureau so many more high-priced officers than any of the others and giving them a larger force than the others is not fair. We ought to have legitimate business, and there is no use for an executive officer.

Mr. DAWES. The work of the Geological Survey is not in a particular room in this Capitol, but is in the field, in the distant field, and is carried on upon such a scale that it is necessary to have a considerable outfit for every party sent into the field. There are three or four parties sent in different directions during the year, and each one of them has to have an outfit, and this executive officer stands in the relation of quartermaster to all of these field arrangements, some dozen or fifteen, or twenty or thirty in each one of them, with horses and mules and carriages and tents and everything much like unto an army of that size, and it is absolutely necessary for somebody to be in the field to procure these outfits, to be responsible for them, to receipt for them, to return to the War Department such of them as the War Department furnishes, to purchase such articles as it is necessary to purchase, and at the close of the season either sell them and account for the proceeds, or procure the care of them during the winter for further use in the coming season. The executive officer disburses all of the money except that which is disbursed here in this city. He is one of the most responsible of all the officers connected with the service.

Mr. STEWART. Are you sure of that? There is a provision here for a chief disbursing clerk at $2,400.

Mr. DAWES. There is a chief disbursing clerk, who keeps accounts such as a disbursing clerk of a quartermaster keeps, but he does not go and purchase horses and mules. There are some twenty or thirty horses which accompany every one of these expeditions.

If it is worth while to carry on this Geological Survey at all, it can not be carried on in a picayune one-horse wagon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It might be done in a Senate wagon.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator if the executive officer furnishes any of these things and if there is not a head of each division in the field making the purchases. The head of the Geological Survey, the head of the topographical survey, and the head of the irrigation survey, and their subordinates make the purchases. I will ask the Senator further if he is aware of the fact that the executive officer never leaves Washington, but is here all the time.

Mr. DAWES. I am not only not aware of that, but, to my personal knowledge, for the last five or six years he has been in the field during all the summer.

Mr. STEWART. I want to ask further if the Senator is positive that this vast service is necessary to the Government at all.

Mr. DAWES. I will answer that by saying that upon an appropriation bill I did not suppose it would be necessary to argue the usefulness of any of these divisions of the Interior Department or of the other Departments of the Government. I supposed it was necessary to appropriate according to law; but if there is any question about whether the Geological Survey ought to be suppressed or carried on with vigor and efficiency and economy, let that be brought up in a proper way and let it be attended to.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to know of the Senator in what possible way it can otherwise ever be brought up, as the whole thing has grown out of appropriations on appropriation bills, and there is no law for the whole survey. If we can not reach it on an appropriation bill, where can we reach it? It is a fungus grown up as no other bureau ever did on appropriation bills and nothing else, and we can not discuss it in any other way except on an appropriation bill.

Mr. DAWES. I did not rise for the purpose of discussing funguses. I merely rose for the purpose of communicating to the Senator what he seems to have entirely overlooked, the duties of this executive officer.

Mr. STEWART. And I have overlooked the duties of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate in lecturing the Senate for not having considered this in general legislation. They have never had an opportunity of considering this in general legislation. This bureau has got in these appropriation bills now nearly a million and a half of money, all given to one man in a lump sum, to be distributed, and what it is to pay for never has been determined by any general legislation, but stuck in an appropriation bill, commencing with a map, and growing year by year until it overgrows everything else, and here is an executive officer, and nobody knows what his duties are, who draws $3,000 a year. If we do not object to it on appropriation bills we can never object to it anywhere, for it is the only way in which it can be reached. This whole bureau has been built up by appropriations in appropriation bills. There is no law for the whole fabric and no use for it.

Mr. VEST. I wish to ask the Senator from Nevada a question. Do I understand him to say there is a million and a half of dollars absolutely at the discretion of this officer?

Mr. STEWART. Very nearly. It is over $1,300,000, and in this bill and in the sundry civil bill which is pending, and then the other contingent expenses, the printing, etc., will bring the expenses of that office to over $1,500,000 this year if it is carried out according to the plan of the Director, and, as I have said, the whole of it has grown up out of appropriation bills, putting in items without any authority of law. It was created by the Appropriations Committee without the necessity for such a bureau ever having been discussed. It has exceeded the limits of its powers. This condition of things has grown up in this way, and now we are told that we should not consider it on an appropriation bill. Where shall we consider it appropriately except on an appropriation bill?

Mr. VEST. May I ask the Senator who is this executive officer to whom he refers?

Mr. STEWART. I understand his name is Croft. I believe you can see him any day around the corridors here.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know the officer; I never saw him in my life, to my knowledge; but I have had something to do with the growth of this Geological Survey, and I have thought it was taking in work that would enlarge it to a very great extent. I have known from the functions which have devolved upon me here in the Senate what have been the duties of the different officers in that bureau. The Senator has waked up a remarkably new idea, that things grow up on appropriation bills.

Mr. STEWART. I know it.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator has forgotten that the whole Army system as it now exists grew up on an appropriation bill. The Senator must have also forgotten that the Signal Service grew up with a start on an appropriation bill of only $15,000, but now it has gone up to over a million dollars, I believe.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And misleads us every day as to the state of the weather.

Mr. DAWES. And what it is worth the Senator from Vermont has some doubts about. The Fish Commission may be another. The Fish Commission started in an appropriation bill with only $5,000. And so in appropriation bills, whether this be one or not, great and valuable bureaus of this Government have been created to carry it on upon a larger and broader and grander scale than when it began, and when these institutions were created by specific acts of Congress. A very large part of the efficient force of the Government owes its creation to appropriation bills. I see nothing in the way, if that be so, as to this particular branch of the service. If it be good for nothing, as the Senator says, I see nothing in the way of his bringing in a bill to dispense with it. But the Senator prefers here at the last end of the legislative bill—not the bill upon which the funds are appropriated to carry the bureau on, but in the last gasp of opportunity on the legislative bill, that provides for officers created by law—to discuss the merits of some particular individual with whom he unfortunately has had a difference.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator then withdraws his censure of us considering it on an appropriation bill. He justifies the creation of these things on an appropriation bill, but denies the right to discuss them on an appropriation bill. That is the way. If it is proper to create everything on appropriation bills, if that is the only place we are to have general legislation, we should have discussion of its details.

Now, that the Senate may see a little of the style of this bureau, I will read a few salaries of the officers:

For Director, $6,000; for executive officer, $3,000—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Who is the Director?

Mr. STEWART. Major Powell, Director of the Geological Survey—

Executive officer, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,400; chief disbursing clerk, $2,400; librarian, $2,000; one photographer, $2,000; three assistant photographers, one at $600, one at $720, and one at $480; two clerks of class 1; one clerk, $1,000; four clerks, at $600 each; four copyists, at $720 each; one watchman, $840; four watchmen, at $600 each; one janitor, $600; four messengers, at $480 each; in all, $35,540.

That is not a complete list of all the officers. In the next bill we see that many others are provided for.

UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

For salaries of the scientific assistants of the Geological Survey: For five geologists, at $4,000 each;
For two geologists, at $3,000 each;
For one geologist, $2,700;
For two geologists, at $2,400 each—

Mr. EDMUNDS. From what bill is the Senator reading?

Mr. STEWART. I am reading from the sundry civil appropriation bill for this year, on page 44—

For two geologists, at $2,000 each;
For one paleontologist, $4,000;
For one paleontologist, $2,000;
For one chemist, $3,000;
For one chemist, $2,000;
For one chief geographer, $2,700;
For three geographers, at $2,500 each;
For one general assistant, $3,000;
For three topographers, at $2,000 each; in all, $67,700.

For general expenses of the Geological Survey: For the Geological Survey, and the classification of the public lands, and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and the products of the national domain, and to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States, including the pay of temporary employees in the field and office, and all other necessary expenses, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, namely:

For pay of skilled laborers and various temporary employees, $15,000;
For topographic surveys in various portions of the United States, $200,000;
For geological surveys in the various portions of the United States, $100,000;
For paleontologic researches relating to the geology of the United States, $40,000;

For chemical and physical researches relating to the geology of the United States, $17,000;

For the preparation of the illustrations of the Geological Survey, $16,000;

For the preparation of the report on the mineral resources of the United States, $10,000;

For the purchase of necessary books for the library, and the payment for the transmission of public documents through the Smithsonian exchange, $5,000; in all, $468,000.

For engraving the geological maps of the United States, $45,000.

Irrigation Survey: For the purpose of investigating the extent to which the arid region of the United States can be redeemed by irrigation and for the investigation of the sources of water to be used in irrigation, and the segregation of irrigable lands in such arid region, and for the selection of sites for reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for the storage and utilization of water for irrigation and for ascertaining the cost thereof, and the prevention of floods and overflows, and to make the necessary maps, including the pay of employees in the field and in office, the cost of all instruments, apparatus, and materials, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, the work to be performed by the Geological Survey under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $720,000, and the Director of the Geological Survey, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall make a report to Congress on the first Monday in December of each year, showing in detail how the said money has been expended, the amount used for actual survey and the engineer work in the field in locating sites for reservoirs, and an itemized account of the expenditures under this and any future appropriation.

For the engraving of maps, including the pay of employees, the cost of apparatus, instruments, and materials, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, $50,000.

For rent of office rooms in Washington, D. C., $7,500.

There is $67,700 for salaries in that bill and there are $35,540 in the bill under consideration for salaries in this bureau, independent of the work of the bureau, regular salaried officers, in the bill under consideration $35,540, and in another bill that has come from the other House we have this further amount for salaries.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much does it foot up altogether.

Mr. STEWART. You can figure it up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Over $100,000.

Mr. STEWART. Over $100,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the draft on the Treasury.

Mr. STEWART. The draft on the Treasury for the regular salaries of this bureau is more than $100,000. I believe the amount is $67,700 in this one bill and $103,000 for the regular salaried officers of this bureau, which has grown up in appropriation bills. None of these offices has been created by law, but all have been created by appropriation bills. There is over $1,300,000 in these bills in lump sums to be disposed of by the Director, besides these regular salaries. Is there any other officer of a Department that is allowed to run his bureau in this way?

When it is proposed to increase the clerks in one of the other bureaus we discuss the necessity for it. When my friend from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] desires to increase the salary of the chief clerk of the Department of Justice, he makes a regular report from his committee, tells us what the duties of the officer are in the Department of Justice and the necessity for the increase, and then after deliberation the office is created, or the salary is increased, and so in every other bureau. But here is a bureau that has higher salaried officers than any of the rest probably, certainly more than any other one bureau, and not one of these offices created under any general statute, but created in an appropriation bill.

There is not a parallel for it to be found in the history of the Government. Then after giving the number of salaried officers, a million and a quarter is given in a lump sum, which is never allowed to any other bureau or Department. When they want in the General Land Office a few additional clerks, they are scrutinized here and you discussed particularly the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and you have kept him down to $4,000 during all these years, and it was discussed twenty years ago whether that salary should be raised to $4,500, and it has not been done because it was said a regular law was necessary to do it, and it was said there was no statute for it. It has been so in the Treasury Department and in the War Department, but here is a bureau that has grown up in a few years, having more salaried officers than all the rest, with a lump sum of a million and a quarter dollars to distribute at the good pleasure of the head of this bureau. I have nothing to say about him, but I say that is not good legislation.

If it is necessary to have a Geological Survey, let it be created by law and let the number of officers and their duties be defined by law and be based upon some statute. But this bureau was built up on a little map. First, they got a map at $5,000, and on that this whole fabric has been built.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think my friend from Nevada is slightly mistaken about that. My recollection goes back a good way, and I think the first time this appeared was in a provision for one single item in an appropriation bill of $10,000 to provide for the survey of the Colorado River under Major Powell, then a professor in an Illinois college. The Senate was not very agreeable to it, but our late friend, then chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Judge Trumbull, took a deep interest in the survey of the Colorado River and started the $10,000 for that year, and out of that little beautiful scheme these millions have grown, which shows the capability of a republic.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to correct him?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. Previous to Mr. Powell's being authorized by law to survey the Colorado River, Professor Hayden had been employed under the Government to make the surveys of the Yellowstone and all that region of country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was later on.

Mr. DAWES. Lieutenant Wheeler was employed in the Army to do the same thing, and another gentleman, who preceded Professor Powell in this particular office, had a survey. So there were four different surveys cognate and having very much the like duties in different sections of the country, all going on at the same time, and Professor Powell came in as the last of them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is mistaken about that. He was the first.

Mr. DAWES. Whether he was last or not is of no importance, but there were four of them. Finally, the four were consolidated and one of the four was put at the head of the Geological Survey, which embraces all of those different portions or different departments or different work, and he remained several years. I can not call to mind his name. He published a very large report.

Mr. BLAIR. Hayden?

Mr. DAWES. No, Hayden was one of the others. Afterwards Congress by law imposed upon this geological survey of the western country of our domain the duty of a geological survey of all the States. It was then clearly set forth to Congress that that would involve an immense outlay of money and a large force and that they would be a long time in the work; and Congress, after long debate upon a bill for that purpose, imposed upon this Geological Survey, which was the consolidation of four different surveys, the duty of making a geological survey of all the States, and that is why there is a large force and this large expenditure. It is at this moment making maps of the old States in connection with the geological surveys of those States, carried on by the States themselves.

Congress, without the action of this Geological Survey, upon its own motion, prompted and urged by a distinguished Senator from West Virginia here in this body, imposed upon this survey a duty which exceeded its original duty many fold and involving many thousands, if not millions, of dollars before it will be completed. But Congress insisted upon imposing it upon that bureau, and maps of the old States, Virginia and West Virginia and all of these States—geological maps—are the result from time to time of this work imposed by law, by statute, upon this Geological Survey.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That fell under the regulation of commerce, I suppose, among the several States?

Mr. DAWES. I am not discussing that question. I am only suggesting to the Senator that the Congress has made this great work.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We anticipated the judgment of the Supreme Court in the Iowa case.

Mr. DAWES. I opposed this feebly, for I foresaw this great expenditure, and I said to the Senate here in my place that I could not think that the Senate was aware of the magnitude of this undertaking and what it would lead to, but the Senate was wiser than I was, and imposed this duty upon this survey, and now the Senator from Nevada thinks it has grown into a very large institution, as it has, but the judgment of the people of the United States in the several States where this work has been done, I think, is nearly unanimous, if not quite so—

Mr. STEWART. Which State?

Mr. DAWES. The judgment of all scientific men.

Mr. STEWART. How many scientific men are there on the payroll whose judgments have been rendered?

Mr. DAWES. I am not prepared to say. Perhaps the Senator's position as a scientific man could enable him to tell me that better than I can tell him.

Mr. STEWART. Are you sure that nearly every institution in the country has not one of its professors on the scientific roll?

Mr. DAWES. If every scientific institution of the country contributed some of its best men to carry on this work it would not be so bad a thing as it would be to pick up politicians to do it. I am inclined to think, if that be true—whether it is or not I do not know—it is one of the best things that can be said about this institution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask my friend a question?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What has this particular bureau been doing the last year for which we have spent, I assume, a million of dollars? What has happened in the last fiscal year? What have they been doing?

Mr. DAWES. I can not give the Senator any detail as to what has been done on such a day of such a month of such a year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not ask that.

Mr. DAWES. I can tell the Senator that from the investigation which the committee and others have made into this matter they have been carrying on this work—

Mr. EDMUNDS. What work?

Mr. DAWES. The work of a geological survey of the United States and making geological maps of the United States. Is that new to the Senator? The Senator was here, and, if I do not forget, participated in the debate very much with a view, that I had myself, to the magnitude of this undertaking and its expenditure. I have not forgotten it.

Mr. REAGAN. In response to the inquiries as to what has been done, I will say that the Geological Survey has been engaged in nearly all the States, at least a great many of them, in making topographical surveys and maps and explorations which are tending to develop the mining resources and other elements of wealth of this country. Besides that the main item of expense is growing out of another duty imposed on that survey of making the necessary topographic surveys, and the engineering work, the measuring of the flow of water in the arid regions of the United States. There is where the main work has been.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg to ask my friend from Texas, for whose judgment I sincerely have the very highest respect, where we get the constitutional authority to provide for a geological survey of the State of Vermont or the State of Texas out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator is a better constitutional lawyer than I am, and I leave him to answer his own question. Perhaps he can satisfy the Congress that provided for this survey that they did wrong. If he can, it is all right.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I know nothing whatever about the details of the management and administration of this bureau. It may be extravagant. There may have been improper expenditures. It may be that there are too many officials. But I have no hesitation in saying that there is no department of this Government that has more cordially approved itself to the common sense and intelligence of all the people where its operations are known than the work that has been done by the Geological Survey.

I do not speak as the advocate or champion of the head of the bureau or of any of his subordinates. I do not know them. If they have approached others, they never have approached me. I do not know their names or their salaries. But the contributions of that bureau to the knowledge of this country have been exceedingly valuable and exceedingly important. There is not a Territory of the United States west of the Mississippi River that has not been greatly increased in value by the operations of the bureau. There is no publication by any one of the bureaus of this Government that is sought for with more avidity by readers, cultivated and uncultivated, everywhere, than the contributions that have been published by the Geological Survey; not only those of this year, but those of previous years. They have been of enormous scientific and positive value. The work that has been done has been a contribution to the resources of this country, and, instead of being curtailed and diminished, the operations of the survey ought to be extended.

It is a matter of great importance to all the people of this country that we should know topographically what it contains, its water falls, the area of its irrigable lands, its mineral resources. Therefore, connected with the topography, the geology of the country has a commercial value. I am surprised to hear from the cultivated and educated East these strictures upon scientific inquiries for the development of knowledge about the condition of our common country. I had supposed, Mr. President, that these denunciations of culture and of scientific investigation were confined to the wild and lawless West.

Mr. VEST. The woolly West.

Mr. INGALLS. "Woolly," as the Senator from Missouri says, speaking after the manner of the tariff. I suppose we all know the secret of the hostility of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] to this bureau. He is known and read of all men. If there is any special grievance that he has to complain of, I shall be glad, if it be a grievance, to concur with him. If there has been improper expenditure, I will agree with him in curtailing it. If there has been any officer appointed who ought not to remain there, I shall be glad to assist him in dismissing him. But this vague and incoherent expectation of abuse against this bureau is not sustained by the facts and it is not warranted by the common sense of this country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, it might be said for the "wild and woolly West" that it is the llama inside of the fence that is expectorating in defense of his preserves rather than the other fellow who is expectorating the other way. The real point about this business, as I do not belong to the East—I live in the North—is this: We have gradually enlarged, as unhappily we do when we legislate on appropriation bills and start this business of geological surveys and maps of all the States in the United States, not merely the Territories, until we have reached this point. Granting that it was within our competence to do it, as I feel inclined to admit, as it was for the increase of human knowledge, I am not opposed to it; but out of very small beginnings the thing is growing, and the more work that is done and the more States that are finished geologically the more reason there is for a larger appropriation and more force the next year, like the sibilant leaves.

So in some way, with the greatest possible respect to my friend from Kansas and to the very good ideas he has expressed about the increase of knowledge, there must come a time in the Senate when this business is looked straight in the face, to see what these people are doing and what comes out of the money that the tax-payers of the United States pay for it; and the tax-payer in Kansas, and in Maryland, and in Vermont, and in California, and in Louisiana, and in every other State has a right to know about it. The only way he can know about it is if with meekness and apology we address the Committee on Appropriations and ask them to tell us really how the thing is and what they are doing. I do not think we ought to be accused in that case of being opponents of the advance of human knowledge; but that we have a right for our tax-payers to ask where is the hard fact, what has become of this money, and what is being done, and how much unnecessary force, if any, is employed, and so on. That is the way it seems to me.

Now, I am bound to say that, as to Professor Powell, who is at the head of this affair, he has been a most earnest and diligent, as I believe, friend of his country, trying to do the best of his duty. I am glad to say it, as I believe it; but I am bound to say also in criticism of Professor Powell that it appears to me, and not to me alone, but to everybody interested in the agriculture and safety of the United States in respect of its forests, that Major Powell has gone wild on the subject of forests. That does not affect the question whether we shall pass this bill or not, but only this item.

However, it is due to us here, it is due to us, as he is my personal friend, to say it, Major Powell is of opinion that the best thing to do, as appears in an article of his in The Century of a month or two ago, or whatever the time was, to increase the availability of the arid lands of the United States for the homestead agriculturist, the honest man and father of a family who builds up his home, is to cut off every tree there is in the mountains in order that the arid lands may have more water.

I think in some way or somehow the administration of that department, if he has charge of it, should be controlled, if the Senate and the House of Representatives and the President think so too, in such a way as that thing should not be done, unless we think that the best way to get water is to set fire to everything in order to get it. I feel bound, as I say, as a friend of Major Powell personally and privately and publicly and every other way, to state here publicly, so far as my voice goes among you gentlemen, that I am amazed that he has entered upon a career, so far as his influence can go, of that kind, which I believe would be destructive to all the interests of the States that are concerned.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Can he state what the Director's theory is; that is, what are his ideas about cutting off timber? What reason does he give? I never heard of it before. Why does he say that will produce more water?

Mr. EDMUNDS. He gives the reason apparently—and I do not speak by the book exactly, but I think I am pretty sure of what I am saying—he gives the reason apparently, as is stated by Professor Sargent in the last number of The Garden and Forest—and Professor Sargent I suppose everybody in the Senate knows as one of the most capable and level-headed men, not drawing any salary from any one, in reviewing this article of Professor Powell in The Century—Professor Sargent, as I read it last evening, states that Professor Powell's view is that if you cut off the forest the winds will blow all the snow into the gulches and there it will pack, and it will give a more continuous stream during the summer than if you leave the great shadows of forest to stand and let the snow fall in where it would not be concentrated. I think, according to Sargent (and I will stand by Sargent in advance every time), that that is a fair statement of Powell's idea as to what is to be got out of cutting off the forests.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator from Vermont that I never heard that statement made by Professor Powell; I did not know that he had ever mentioned it; but very reputable engineers and practical men who have lived in the mountains have asserted for years that that is the fact, and that the destruction of timber on the mountains does not destroy, but on the contrary increases the water supply late in the season, which is upon the theory he states.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can my friend name an engineer of that kind?

Mr. TELLER. I can name a good many engineers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish my friend would.

Mr. TELLER. I am not proposing to answer the question in the Senate; and if the Senator proposes to inquire whether I am telling the truth or not, I will state—

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not proposing to inquire whether my friend is telling the truth, for I know he always does, according to the light he has, and therefore, if I may, I will ask him if he will privately kindly furnish me the names of those gentlemen, for I am only hungry for knowledge; I shall be very much obliged to him. I hope my friend will not think that I was implying any doubt as to his statement, but I only wish to get at all the facts.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] states that my grievance is known of all the world against Major Powell, and what I do here he attributes to some personal motives of mine.

Mr. INGALLS. Oh, no.

Mr. STEWART. To some personal influence. So far from that, my difference with Major Powell was a matter of extreme regret. I never regretted anything more in my whole public career than the necessity of differing with Major Powell. I have in the last year been brought in contact with his work; I have seen the workings of his bureau; I have seen the whole thing, and as a public man and as an honest representative of the people I have had to differ with him. I found that he was wrong in his theories.

It so happened that there was an appropriation of $100,000 in 1888 and $250,000 in 1889 for the purposes of irrigation. I invited Major Powell to go with me; we traveled over the country together, and I conversed with him daily for months. We came back here and on the very best of relations. I found on my arrival here that he had used more than half the money that was appropriated for irrigation for topography. I told him that topography was another branch; that we did not want agriculture loaded up with such expense; that all we wanted done for agriculture was to have the reservoir sites surveyed and the lines of the ditches to segregate the lands that were irrigable from the other lands; that that is all that agriculture wants, and it was in the line of our general surveys, involving very little expense, and that that was all we started out for.

Thereupon he became my enemy. Thereupon his bureau sent forth all sorts of criticisms, attributing my position to something personal. It was charged immediately that it was personal. When I could not agree with that expenditure of money I was charged with personal motives; and that has been the charge by which they have attempted to break down my influence in this matter.

I had no personal motives in the matter except to keep the expenditure within the bounds of decency, so that my conduct would be approved by my fellow Senators and by the community. I could not consent to his using the large millions of money in topography on the theory that it was an aid to irrigation; but I knew myself, being something of an engineer, having had great experience in this matter, that it was unnecessary; that more than 10,000,000 acres of land had already been reclaimed without any topography with ordinary engineering; and I knew that ordinary engineering was all that was necessary and topography could not be used for that purpose, and no topography has been used for that purpose up to this day.

I told him, I begged of him to consent in the future that the work might be separated. In the course of this I was also brought in connection with the Geological Survey. Although I am from the wild West there are some things that can be learned in the wild West about geology. It is in the wild West that the excavations have been made in the earth that have revealed the condition of the earth's crust to an extent that was not known before. The most important lessons in geology have been learned from the country where I have been in active operation. It so happened that I have had under my charge, as experts to examine the mines, to examine the deep shafts and testify in regard to them, nearly all the eminent geologists of this country. They have testified and they have given the result of their examinations and their opinions with regard to those excavations.

I have traveled with them by day and by night over that country and examined it. I have some little knowledge of it. I know how difficult it is for geologists to be accurate and to ascertain any information that shall be of general application. Geology is an inductive science. It can only be found little by little as excavations of the earth's surface and explorations are made. The deep shafts on the Comstock, and in California, and in Arizona, and in Montana, and in all the mining regions have done much to reveal the formations and to enable geologists to take notes.

But I do say this, to take a swarm of boys and send them over the valleys to collect geological information, you might as well have a drove of grasshoppers. I came in contact with one or two of those geologists and I examined them. The men who have traveled for the last forty years over the mountains and observed the geological formations with a view of finding mines simply laugh at the crude ideas of the swarm of geologists who are sent out by Major Powell.

It may be that Major Powell has done something for science, but the Government of the United States has done a great deal for Major Powell. It is true that he has made pretty books that people like to have and that there is a demand for. They are fine pictures, that are made at vast expense and distributed broadcast in the country, and of course there is demand for them. They cost a vast amount of money; they are ornaments to parlors; they are ornaments to gentlemen's drawing-rooms, and they are used very liberally among the influential. They are made at the expense of the Government, and I have no doubt there is a demand for those; but to say that there has been any adequate return for the vast outlay that Major Powell has expended, that there has been any return that is anything like commensurate with the expenditure, is false. It has not been the case. He superseded men as much superior to him as he is superior to the veriest clod-hopper in the country. He took the place of Captain Wheeler as a topographical surveyor and engineer. He took the place of Hayden, who was a real geologist, who died of grief by being crowded out. He has by his wily arts superseded many men who were his superiors. But there is no man in this country who is his superior as a lobbyist or who can better organize and control Congress. What other man could have built up such a bureau, costing now a million dollars and a half a year, by appropriations, without ever having the merits of it discussed in Congress, without having any law passed for it?

If we are to have a Geological Survey, let us define its limits and powers by law. It should be connected with the Smithsonian Institution. It might go on gradually and collect information as it is developed. But to say that you must have a complete topographic map all at once, as if there was any crying necessity for that; that we should be spending a million and a half a year for such a purpose, it seems to me unwise. At all events, before this is done I should think it would be the duty of Congress to pass a law upon the report of some committee, defining the duties of this officer, as is done with others.

Upon what meat doth this our Caesar feed,
That he is grown so great?

What does he feed on that he can create without legislation and be defended by men like my friend from Massachusetts, who says this must be a great good? I should like to have men tell me specifically what good it has performed. The people of my country, the people of the West, the people who have had their attention for the last forty years directed to these subjects, are not admirers of Major Powell. They would no more take his practical opinion as to a mine than they would take the opinion of one of the Indians who have traveled over the mountains. We have gentlemen who have spent the last forty years in traveling over the country to hunt mines, who know vastly more than he can ever learn. It takes some time to learn the mineral formation of the country. We have experts on that subject, and they would not trust Major Powell.

No professional expert, no person who has been employed by any government ever found a mine or ever indicated exactly where a mine could be. They have made predictions that no mines could be found in vast regions of a particular kind, and the miners went on and proved that their predictions were false.

Take these books that Major Powell is putting out; the practical operations of them in the next generation will be of no use. There will be stubborn facts that will be developed which will contradict them, and the pretty pictures will mislead. The real facts will be learned, although it may take a generation to get rid of the falsehoods that will be published in finely bound books, if this vast expenditure goes on.

But if you are to have a Geological Survey you want men devoted to it, but you do not want them highly paid because they are devoted to civic science. Pay their expenses, and let them collect the information and lodge it in the Smithsonian Institution, and let them take a reasonable time to collect it. Do it according to some regular system, and we shall be sufficiently advanced. But to pile in this vast expense and create a great leading department of the Government that overrides all others under the pretense that it is necessary to science, and that the world is going to be greatly benefited by it, is assuming too much, until some committee of this body has examined it and arrived at that conclusion.

I repudiate any feeling on this subject except the feeling for the public Treasury and the public weal. But I was brought in connection with this subject in such a way that if I should sanction this and did not proclaim that the money was being squandered, I myself would feel disgraced. I, as a truthful, honest representative, protested to him, I protest now, that this proceeding is wasteful, expensive, unnecessary, and not governed by any legitimate law.

It is no personal feeling. I have done my entire duty when I have brought it to the attention of the Senate. I have no more interest in it than any other Senator. I simply shall ask when the time comes that agriculture, that irrigation, shall not be made an excuse for any of these grand schemes. I want the agriculturists to be liberated from this incubus, or reproach, or from the charge that it is necessary to spend millions, perhaps hundreds of millions, I do not know how much, in these scientific schemes that branch out yearly, in order to carry on agriculture. I want them separated from it. Then the people will understand the pure magnificence of the thing, and if the Treasury can stand it I can.

That is all I have to say. I should not have said this much if my motives had not been questioned.

Mr. PLATT. If the Geological Survey or the Director of the Geological Survey has been guilty of any improprieties or mismanagement, it seems to me that a resolution charging him with those improprieties and that mismanagement should be introduced and referred to an appropriate committee and an investigation had. I do not think that upon an appropriation bill, this matter having been first brought to its attention in this way, the Senate should proceed to stigmatize the Geological Survey or to attempt to cripple it. I suppose that there is really no intention on the part of the Senator from Nevada to have the Senate so act.

Whether this office is necessary or not or whether the present incumbent of it is a proper incumbent of it or not is a matter which can be ascertained in a proper way. I do not think that a matter which has never been brought to the attention of the Appropriation Committee, about which there has been no discussion before the Appropriation Committee, about which there are no particular charges filed or made, ought longer to engage the attention of the Senate, and I hope we may have a vote on this question.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, since I have been in the Senate it has come within the range of my observation at different times to be informed somewhat in reference to the work that was being done by the Geological Bureau under Major Powell. The necessities of my own State have required, in my judgment, that there should be some geological examination there, and that has induced me from a period commencing very shortly after my first term in the Senate to give some attention and consideration to that subject and to the work of that bureau. I found that it had received and was receiving the most distinguished commendation from all the scientific schools of the world, from the most eminent scientists and investigators in geology and its kindred sciences.

I found, furthermore, that Major Powell himself had received and was receiving the commendation of the most eminent scientific men in the world, and that special attention was being called to the work that he was performing, and to its thoroughness and efficiency.

Mr. President, I do not feel myself capable, nor do I think that the judgment of any other person who is not a thorough scientist is sufficient to impeach a man who thus stands accredited by the encomium of the most distinguished and successful scientists in the world, and I think that there can be no fairness in indicting such a man before the country upon vague opinions formed from personal experience by non-scientific persons.

Geological research is of necessity confined to observers of facts, who are sent out as faithful observers to gather together the specific facts as observed by them in regard to geological formations and natural phenomena, and in regard to the survey of levels and the natural characteristics of the earth, and when gathered together they constitute the basis upon which scientific deductions and conclusions are made, evidently, oftentimes of slow progress, and oftentimes of mistake; but that the work performed by Major Powell has commended itself to the most distinguished scientific opinion of this day there can be and is no kind of question.

I am not competent, and I doubt very much if there be a Senator here who is competent, to form a reasonable judgment against the combined opinion of those men and those schools of men whose special business in life it has been to devote themselves to these investigations. But on behalf of Major Powell I desire to say here that upon an inquiry before a school of scientific men there would be no doubt that his work would receive their approval, and that he would stand, as he does, very high in the estimation of the world.

It is wise for us to consider that, in the presence, as we are to-day, of the wonderful results of a practical and useful kind of applied science, no one can speak intelligently with disparagement of scientific research. It was thought by the uninformed a few years ago that the men who devoted their lives to the study of the forces of electricity were wild and useless dreamers. To-day it stands as a great and useful motor, promising to be handmaid and servant in all the domestic uses of life. The geologic explorers may yet find in the recesses of the earth currents of subtle force and riches greater than the fountains of oil which nature pours out with lavish bounty for man's use.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I only desire to say a few words on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada. It is true that this office has grown up by small appropriations on annual appropriation bills and that it has continued to grow without any direct or proper supervision until the expenditures have exceeded anything that was anticipated by the gentlemen who introduced the original proposition, and have unquestionably gone beyond the control of the Committee on Appropriations.

In the act of July 7, 1884, I think, my friend from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, inserted a provision requiring a commission to be appointed to ascertain what was the proper organization of this among other bureaus of the Interior Department, and that endeavor was made on the part of Congress. That commission, as the Director of the Survey says himself in his last annual report, was incomplete, the presentation was partial, so that that office stands to-day, I have no question, as quite a number of others do possibly, with extravagant expenditures on account of the pay of officials, and, if it were properly taken hold of and looked into by some responsible head, I have no question that the expenditures could be largely reduced.

That I think is true of other branches of the Interior and other Departments. There is no hope, in all probability, of reaching the point when this examination shall be made in all the Departments, and the expenditures of the Government reduced on this account, within a reasonable limit until we shall have approached the time, which is now near at hand, when we shall necessarily be compelled to inquire from what source the money is to be derived by which these salaries and these expenditures can be paid; for, if we continue as we are now going on, in one year from this date it will be a question of raising the money by taxation, and not of merely continuing liberal expenditures.

But, Mr. President, this particular Department is surrounded by influences which Major Powell, whom I regard as an honest, an upright, and a capable man, can not resist until Congress shall have determined by an act precisely the number of employes who shall be under him. It is to-day the asylum of all the scientists of the country who have nothing else to do. It is the final step of the young men who are graduating at the colleges of the country. It is a power that he can not resist, and it is due to him, as well as to the interests of the Government, in my judgment, before this Congress adjourns, that a commission shall be appointed by an act of Congress, or that a committee of this branch or the other, or a joint committee of the two bodies, shall define the duties of this office and the number of employes and their compensation.

I do not believe, in the present condition and with the knowledge that we have now, that it would be wise or proper to adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada. After what that Senator has said himself it is perfectly proper and right that I should say that, but for the fact that a great controversy has arisen between Major Powell and those who take a different view upon the question of irrigating arid lands, I do not believe that this attack would have been made upon that gallant officer and soldier. I have never yet heard even his bitterest enemy charge him with being derelict in his duty, or incompetent, or dishonest. He has been, in my judgment, extravagant, for the reasons which have been given, incident to the office as it is organized, but his integrity and his desire to serve his Government I have never heard questioned.

When this question of the arid lands came up, impatient as the people of the West and the Northwest are, they desired the opportunity to make entries and to secure the water rights. The directions of Congress to Major Powell made it necessary in his judgment that the lands should be taken out, and not be subject to pre-emption or location during the progress of his survey, which, if it is to be complete, is necessarily to be slow. That has grown into an angry and a bitter controversy.

I have no word of excuse to offer for the head of this department, who, I think, has improperly and unwisely criticised gentlemen in the Senate and elsewhere because they have different views from his, but his honesty and, as I believe, the methods which he is pursuing in his work unquestionably are in the interest of the people of the country, and will tend if carried out to prevent, I will not use a harsh word, the taking of public lands without proper compensation to the Government. There is no excuse, in my judgment, for his criticisms of individuals and charging them with a desire to defraud and rob the Government.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. Has the Senator any information other than newspaper talk that he has criticised anybody in the Senate?

Mr. GORMAN. I have not, Mr. President.

Mr. CULLOM. I have not, and that is the reason why I made the inquiry.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Nevada had a statement read from a public newspaper.

Mr. CULLOM. From some newspaper, and nobody knows whether it is authentic or not.

Mr. GORMAN. We all understand how newspapers misrepresent everybody. The fact is that a large portion of the public press do not believe that there is any honest man in the executive or legislative branch of the Government. I pay no attention to what they say as to Major Powell or as to any Senator, but the Senator from Nevada saw proper to dignify these statements by making them a part of the record of this body.

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator deny that Major Powell put forth that interview? He never has denied it, and I think, if he did deny it, it could be proved on him by abundant witnesses. I refer to the interview in which he alleged that there are $500,000,000 of lobby money behind the opposition—those who were contending that the land offices in the West should be opened and people should continue to make homes on some conditions.

Mr. GORMAN. No, Mr. President, I do not deny that Major Powell made that statement. I am not his defender. I treat him only as a public officer. I scarcely know him. I have no interest in him except that I believe him to be an efficient, an able, and an honest public officer of the Government.

I am inclined to believe that these statements in the public press have some foundation on both sides. I know it has been charged that he is in the interest of somebody else and it is not the public interest that he serves in taking these lands (as he unquestionably secured the passage of the act) out of pre-emption and occupation until he should determine the question as to the water rights and the location of the surveys. Charges and countercharges have been made. I look at it impartially, and from all the information that I can gather I believe the policy that he is pursuing is in the interest of the whole people of this country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does the Senator mean by that policy? Will he define what that policy is?

Mr. GORMAN. The act of Congress withdraws all of these lands and all the water in the streams that may be necessary for the irrigation of them. At some time later on, when the sites for the reservoirs have been located, they can be used for the common purpose of all the people of that country, and the object is not to permit companies and organizations and individuals to get possession of the streams and the locations for the reservoirs, thereby controlling hundreds of millions of acres.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To that, if my friend will allow me, I yield my most hearty adherence, but my friend intimated that he thought Major Powell was right in his policy, if that be his policy, of cutting off all the forests; and, as I should wish to keep the land as stated, I should wish to enter my most decided dissent from the policy that is to cut off the forests of the mountains in order to get water.

Mr. GORMAN. The article to which the Senator from Vermont refers I think is a magazine article—

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me?

Mr. GORMAN. In one second. It is a magazine article, and has no reference whatever to the performance of Major Powell's public duties, nor does this question involve the question of forestry at all. The whole question involved, as I understand it, is whether he shall locate these streams and reserve them and the places for the reservoirs, so that under some arrangement hereafter to be made by Congress all the people may have an opportunity to use them, instead of being pre-empted by individuals.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To that I entirely agree.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me—

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. I would inquire of the Senator from Vermont where he learned and how he learned that Major Powell was in favor of cutting the forests away.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is in an article in The Century Magazine—I have forgotten the month, but a very recent one—which appears to advocate, and very clearly does, the idea that the best interest for the water is to cut off the forests on the top of the mountains and let the snow drift into the gullies, as I stated a little while ago, and thus preserve the water that falls in the form of snow, etc., to melt down gradually. Major Powell, apparently, in that article suggests that that is the best way to do it, and I wish for one, as Professor Sargent, who

I think is probably the best informed man in the United States in respect of all that sort of thing, in the other publication that I spoke of, of which he is the editor, makes a kindly comment, having nothing to gain or lose by it, and goes on to show that that will not do, and he finally adds that human experience in the Alps, for instance, which are snow mountains in Europe, where perpetual snow exists in a much larger degree than it does in any place in the Rocky Mountains—the experience in those countries has shown that, when the forests on the highest Alps up to the snow line were cut off, devastation and ruin followed; and it will certainly follow, in my opinion, as Professor Sargent thinks it will also, in which my opinion will not add anything to the value of his, I admit, although I am a ruralist and live in a mountain country.

If the forests on the Rocky Mountains were cut off on this idea of Major Powell's there would come devastation and ruin, instead of the benefit of storing water, as Major Powell thinks. That is no objection to Major Powell's going on with this work of saving these lands, but it is only a question of the future for administration. I only wished to say this now in order that it should not be taken that these views of Major Powell's in this particular respect should be considered as being agreed to be the wise thing to do, because, as I repeat, human experience has proven the reverse.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I confess to some surprise at the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, and if he will pardon me I will state the reason of it.

During the last summer and fall I traveled through the entire arid region with the Senator from Nevada and some others, and Major Powell in our company. I heard him make numbers of lectures, and we conversed upon that and all other subjects, I suppose, that came up in connection with irrigation. I know from what he there said and from his lectures delivered in this city, which I have listened to this winter, that he has urged the great importance, and that he continually urges the great importance, of preserving the timber on the mountains as a means of preserving the water supply—exactly the reverse of what the Senator supposes. I know this from his uniform statement in his lectures both here and in the arid regions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall be most glad if I find that I am mistaken—

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator certainly has been misled, beyond all doubt.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In my reading and in what Professor Sargent, of whom I have said enough, says in respect to this article in The Century Magazine, and I have sent for the article and we shall see how it is.

Mr. REAGAN. I have never seen the article, but I have seen Major Powell and I have heard him discuss this subject in public lectures, and heard him privately, and I know that he regards it as necessary to preserve the timber, and that he regards it as a great calamity that the timber shall be destroyed by fire on the mountains, because he fears that it will reduce the water supply.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland is still on the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I shall be most happy to learn that I have been misinformed about the nature of Major Powell's views.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me, I will make a suggestion to him pertinent to the subject of Major Powell and his efficiency or the contrary, that some three or four years ago there was a committee of investigation in the House of Representatives; I think Mr. Randall was the chairman of it, but of that I am not sure; certainly he was a member of it. That committee examined very thoroughly into the Coast Survey organization and that of the Geological Survey Bureau, its appointees, the work it had done, and the expenditures it had made. I am quite sure I do not err in saying that the result of that investigation was entirely favorable to Major Powell and to the manner in which he conducted that bureau.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator from Maryland give way for a motion to go into executive session?

Mr. GORMAN. I think the Senator in charge of the bill desires to finish it and I will conclude in one second.

Mr. ALLISON. Oh, yes, I want to finish the bill to-night.

Mr. GORMAN. I will conclude in one moment by simply saying that I believe the statement of the Senator from Florida is exactly correct, and that there is no question about the integrity of this officer. But the fact does remain, and it is admitted by himself in his last report, that the commission that was appointed under the act of 1884 did not complete that examination, and that the organization of that office is loose, disjointed, and extravagant, in my judgment. While I trust we shall vote down the amendment now offered by the Senator from Nevada, I hope before this session terminates the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will take some method, either by a joint committee of Congress or by a commission, to reorganize this entire department.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. President, I know that it is late and that the Senate is impatient, and I will not undertake to enter into a discussion of the question that is involved in the motion made by the Senator from Nevada this evening. The same proposition will arise when the sundry civil appropriation bill is reported to the Senate and the items which there are found come under consideration. But I can not, even though it is late, pass this without saying something upon a matter so thoroughly vital to the interests of the people whom I represent and of the great West.

I shall not dwell upon the question which is directly before the Senate, whether the appropriation for the payment of an executive officer of that bureau shall be stricken out; but it is curious, in looking over the appropriations, that there is not an executive officer in any other branch or any other bureau of the entire Government, so far as I have observed. This peculiar bureau possesses this peculiar officer, an executive officer.

Another curious thing appears by this discussion and by the record. The officers of this bureau are not alone provided for in the bill which is before the Senate, but the officers are either repeated again in the sundry civil appropriation bill or else additional officers of that bureau are there provided for. Why could not those officers be grouped in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill as well as the officers of other bureaus? Is it because the extravagance is apparent with reference to this bureau and is so great that it is wise not to put the matter into the record all in a body, so that the people may see what expenditures are being made?

Mr. President, the West has a wonderful interest in the question of the surveys of the public lands, and the money of this Government is being wasted in what is pretended to be a survey of the public lands, which is not. No results have yet come and in my judgment no results ever will come unless a thoroughly different course is taken from that which is provided in these bills.

I find that there is the sum of $1,328,740 appropriated in these two bills for the purpose of surveying, largely in the Western States and Territories. It involves the surveys relating to the irrigation of the arid lands as well as the surveys relating to the geological formation. Seven hundred and eighty-two thousand dollars of that relates to irrigation surveys, the rest to geological surveys.

Now, let us look up some of the items. In addition to the bill which is before the Senate, there is a provision for the expenditure of $37,500 for geologists in the other bill; for geological surveys, $100,000; for topographic surveys, $200,000 for pay of the scientists, providing for the salaries; and again in the general provision we find that $720,000 is given for the survey and making of the maps relating to irrigation surveys and $50,000 for engraving those maps. We turn to the bill and we find that for the surveys of the public land in all the public-land States there is the sum of $154,700 given for the surveys of all the public lands in all the public-land States—$1,328,740 in the wisdom of the Appropriation Committee is given for what? To enable this Geological Bureau to make maps and publish expensively bound books. That is the result of it.

Mr. ALLISON. If I may make a suggestion to my friend from South Dakota, I should like to say to him that the Appropriations Committee of the Senate has not yet considered one item of the appropriation that he is now discussing, and therefore I submit to him that when he uses the term "Appropriations Committee" he ought to use the singular, and not the plural.

Mr. MOODY. I am perfectly well aware that the Senate committee has but recently had the general civil bill before it, and I have not the slightest criticism in the world to express against either that committee or any individual member of it. If I used the term "committees" instead of the term "committee," where the singular was proper, then I ask the Senator's pardon for it. I have stated what is the record before us. The legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill has been reported and is under consideration. The other bill is in the hands of the committee of the Senate.

Mr. President, the range of this discussion has included both of these bills, and necessarily the appropriation which has been reported for this bureau and its officers includes the very subject-matter that is involved in the bill which comes from the other House and is known as the sundry civil bill; and we must, in order to determine the necessity of the appropriation in the bill now under consideration, also look at the bill which comes from the other House, because it involves the very subject-matter upon which this appropriation is based, and for which the appropriation is made, and the subject-matter which these officers appropriated for are to treat, and therefore properly the discussion has taken this wide range.

Now, what is the object and purpose of this Geological Bureau? Of course one branch of it, as I have said, is to promote knowledge of the geological formations of the United States. Whatever good that may do or whether it does any good or not, I certainly should not criticize any expenditure within reason for the purpose of promoting the researches in that direction. We all know, who have had any practical knowledge of the results of geological research, how totally futile it is for scientists to undertake to look into the ground where there is no hole in it; and the experience of every practical man has shown that in nine times out of ten the guesses which geologists make as to the formation of the earth have been proven to be not well founded; they have been shown to be mistaken.

But I certainly am in favor of pursuing this mystic science, because it is a mystery. I live among those who dig and delve in the formations of the earth, who go down hundreds and hundreds and thousands of feet, and they know what there is in the earth underneath them. They despise the opinion of your ordinary geologist. They are practical men.

But, Mr. President, there is another branch of the duties of this office recently put upon it that we have a deeper and a clearer interest in than we have in the researches of these geologists. That is the applying of the water of the earth to those regions of the country where it is needed to bring forth in plenty bountiful crops. That is a practical question for all of us who live in the West, and we can not await these years and years of scientific research, of picture-making. We want results. It is crops we ask for, and not pictures. You may go on with your picture-making, you may hang them in your halls and in your parlors, you may expend your thousands and hundreds of thousands for pictures, but, as you are the main proprietor, we ask that you assist us in the spreading of the waters over these lands, that they may be thereby enriched.

That, I say, is a practical question, and we shall resist—and when I say “we,” Mr. President, I mean those who represent the Western country, the country that is particularly interested in this question—we shall resist with all the strength we have the proposition to continue in that bureau the expenditure of the Government funds for that purpose, because we have found by these years of experience that it is wholly useless to expect results from that bureau.

Mr. President, from the ninety-seventh meridian of longitude west from Greenwich to the eastern foot-hills of the Rocky Mountains is an empire greater than was imagined, for twenty-five years after the Revolutionary war, existed to the west. It is peopled with its hundreds of thousands, it has its representatives in both branches of Congress. Nevertheless there are hundreds of thousands of acres there that are not utilized and can not be utilized to their full capacity until the waters of the earth are spread over them and they are given that which nature requires with a rich soil to bring forth the best results. There is beyond all question a sufficient water supply if it can be utilized, and it will be.

I am a member of the committee of which the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] is chairman. I know the zeal with which he has worked. I know how earnest he is in forwarding the interests of the Western people. I want to say to the Senate that every Senator and every member of the other House, so far as I know, is in sympathy with him in desiring to take from the Geological Bureau the pursuit of this branch of the governmental business and put it where it properly belongs, to wit, in the Agricultural Department of the Government.

We have reports from that bureau upon subjects arising where none of the members of it, not even these two-thousand-dollar geologists or the four-thousand-dollar geologists, have ever set their distinguished feet upon the soil.

We were told but a few moments ago of the vast benefit that has accrued to every State and every Territory by this Geological Survey. To my knowledge—and I think I am stating it accurately—there has never a soul of that bureau been in the State of South Dakota or when it was a Territory. We have every condition of soil, every condition of mineral wealth, everything that would delight the scientist and the geologist, and they have never been there. Still we find these reports pretending to tell what exists there.

In relation to this irrigation, the present Director of the bureau tells us in committee and tells me privately that it is impossible to utilize the waters of that great artesian basin there found; that we must depend upon the “storm waters,” as he calls them. Why, our State, with the exception of the little portion of it in the extreme west, is one great plain. The idea of utilizing the storm waters! We do not ask the Government to devise any means to retain the storm waters of our State. As the water falls from heaven or comes from the melted snow wherever it is not absorbed by the soil it goes into natural lakes and ponds. It needs no artificial help from the Geological Bureau or its Director; and the man who undertakes to urge such a theory is simply thoroughly and wholly mistaken, because he has never set his foot there and does not know anything about whether it is a plain or a mountain country. It is because he will not see before he forms his opinion, it is because he precludes the bureau from being useful to us, that we insist he shall not use such money as is appropriated by Congress and charge it to our people.

We want, as I have said, practical results. We do not want an agent employed for us who says at the outset that he can not accomplish the purposes of his agency. We say to him, then we will discharge you and get one who has some faith in this labor that we ask you to perform.

Mr. President, I do not think that I should ever be as a member of Congress in either branch niggardly in the appropriation of money from the Treasury for the benefit of the people. I certainly believe that a liberal policy of expenditure for the direct benefit of the people is far better for them and for the Government than to adopt a mean and niggardly and stingy policy. But at the same time I would say that not one dollar of extravagance should be incorporated into any appropriation, if I knew it, that I would vote for. When there are undertaken to be placed large sums, vast sums, it will seem to the people of this country, to be in the hands of one man, under his exclusive control, which he can absolutely without control distribute and disburse, it is wholly wrong and ought not under any circumstances to be approved.

I wish to say, as I am a member of the committee with him, that I wholly disagree with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] with reference to the plan proposed of reserving all the lands indiscriminately, as the Director has proposed to do, west of a certain meridian of longitude.

Mr. PADDOCK. That has been practically done.

Mr. MOODY. Yes, that has been practically done; and there is not a man from any of those States who agrees with it. Who knows best, he, the distinguished Senator from Maryland, or he, the distinguished officer in the Geological Bureau, who makes occasional summer pleasure jaunts into the West, or those of us who were born and bred and lived there? Whenever this order that was made under the recommendation of the head of the bureau is spoken of, you will find, as you witnessed, Mr. President, a few moments ago, every man from that country rise up in indignation and denounce it.

It is detrimental to our country. Ay, Mr. President, it is not merely detrimental, it is absolutely paralyzing. In the Western States and Territories the land offices are closed under it; not one acre of public land can be taken by the poor homesteader who has gone there. As they have decreed, every entry that has been made, every settlement that has been had by the pioneers who have preceded the great mass of population, is and has been void since the 2d of October, 1888, under that act which was passed. I am glad to say that in no possible sense, either directly or indirectly, am I responsible for the passage of such an act as that; and I believe that the construction which has been put upon it is neither logical nor equitable, neither legal, nor is it decent. Why, to say that under that act what has been attempted could be done, to wit, take from the market, from settlement and occupation, every acre of the public lands west of the one hundredth meridian of longitude clear to the borders of California, is putting a construction upon it which it seems to me would declare Congress to have been absolutely worthy of being as a body incarcerated in a lunatic asylum.

No; the purpose and intention of that act was this, that the reservoir sites should be reserved; that the lines of ditches and canals conveying water to and taking water from those reservoirs should be reserved; that such lands as by the surveys were ascertained to be within the limits of those water ways and water resources should be reserved, irrigable lands, lands capable of irrigation. What is land capable of irrigation? Is it the naked land? No; it is land upon which water can be brought and utilized. It is the land on which water can be brought and can be used. That is the land that was reserved, and that alone.

Mr. President, the one hundredth meridian, where it was proposed to make this dividing line between the arid belt and the eastern fertile soil, is very near the center of this great continent from ocean to ocean, and west of that line there is a country susceptible of maintaining a larger and a denser population than that east of it to the Atlantic Ocean. It abounds with greater richness, first, in all the precious metals; second, in all the useful metals; third, in the coal that will make the useful metals possible of production; and then in the soil.

So again west of that line are found hundreds and thousands of acres—millions of acres—as well watered as any county in the great State of Massachusetts. In my own State west of the one hundredth meridian is a large area of country that possesses more water to the square mile than the same area in the State of New York, in the State of Massachusetts, or any other of the Eastern States in the agricultural districts—a district of country at least 150 miles in length and 110 miles in width at its widest point. There is no better watered country anywhere; but it is put into this arid region, and an attempt was made to withdraw that whole country from market because it was irrigable country; in other words, because the presumption existed, according to these wise men of this Capitol, that the lands are arid simply from the fact they are west of the one hundredth meridian.

Mr. President, I have been tempted into talking much longer on this subject than I intended. I shall vote for this amendment because I can not conceive for what an executive officer is needed. Why, he must be a clerk of some kind, a $3,000 a year clerk. I have heard it said here that he was a horse-buyer. Now, wages are pretty strong in our country, but we will furnish the Government horse-buyers of better judgment than he—if I am to take the word of the Senator from Nevada at least in his judgment of him—for $35 a month, and they will board themselves and will not lobby about Congress, but will attend to the business of horse-buying or mule-buying, if that is the business in which the executive officer is employed.

I have looked through the disbursements reported to Congress by this Director of Geology and I find that it is horses and mules that are purchased, and we are told that upon every expedition that goes out horses and mules must be purchased. Yet I see the large item of transportation from the city of Washington. Why, they can buy as many horses and mules in the West as they can transport on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad from now until next April in one month's time. It is nonsense to talk about such an expenditure.

It is, perhaps, not altogether compatible with the extreme height of the dignity of this tribunal to stop a moment at the sum of $3,000 paid to an executive officer of the Geological Directory. We may sweep it aside and brush it away as we would a particle of dust. I might consent to that view of it, and say not a word if it was not followed by hundreds of thousands of dollars of equally useless expenditure.

Here is $3,000 for a general assistant. Now, an assistant to what, I can not tell. The bill does not disclose it; I mean the bill that recently came from the other House. Perhaps it is a general assistant to this horse-buyer or to some horse-doctor whom they must have along.

But, Mr. President, this bill with these expenditures ought never to pass until the investigation that has been asked for by the distinguished Senators has been had. That act should precede its passage and not follow it. What good will it do us, what good will it do this country, to examine into the necessity of this appropriation after it has been made and becomes a law, if, as has been the case in numerous instances since I have had the honor to be a member of this body, the object of your wonderful investigation will laugh in your face?

Mr. STEWART. I do not wish to delay this matter, and, with the leave of the Senate, I will withdraw the amendment and let this man have his $3,000 for another year, and if the Senate is of the opinion that he shall have it perpetually I shall say no more about it.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment having been withdrawn and the Senate having about concluded this bill, we shall have an opportunity again in a very few days to consider this whole question, when the matter will be pertinent and when the debate will be proper on the appropriations in the sundry civil bill, and I hope my friend from Texas will allow this bill to pass now.

Mr. CULLOM. So do I.

Mr. REAGAN. It seems to me that sheer justice requires that some reply should be made to what has been said this evening, but, as it is late in the day and as the question will arise hereafter on another bill, I shall defer what I wish to say until that other bill comes up.

Mr. ALLISON. I am much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. In 1887 I had occasion to investigate the methods of business in the Interior Department, and I confess frankly that I was very much prepossessed with the methods of this bureau under Major Powell, and I had a very full report from him, which is found in the report which the select committee made, in which he goes on to define the methods of business in his bureau, and, as far as I could see them, his methods of business were very accurate and quite complete. As a matter of course, I could make no investigation as to the expenditures actually made. This was as to the methods of transacting the business as reported upon paper, and it was a very fair method, I thought, and I believed the bureau was in good condition in that respect.

I desired to say that much, and I confess very frankly that I regret that it is so late now that I shall not have an opportunity of bringing to the attention of the Senate as fully as I would wish a matter in the last part of this bill, and that is the proviso on page 111, which reads:

Provided, That hereafter it shall be the duty of the heads of the several Executive Departments of the Government to report to Congress each year in the annual estimates the number of employees in each bureau and office and the salaries of each who are below a fair standard of efficiency.

I think that is a matter which should be brought to the attention of the Senate and the country, and the people of the country should know what is the tendency of the Executive branches of the Government to establish a civil pension-list.

Mr. President, before the Committee on Appropriations we had very strong pressure for an increase of the clerical force in the General Land Office and an increase of the clerical force in the Sixth Auditor's Office.

Now, I want to read what the Sixth Auditor says in regard to the efficiency of the force in his office:

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY
FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 31, 1890.

SIR: In reply to your telegram of the 29th instant, I have the honor to state that there are on the rolls of this office at this time sixteen clerks (nine at $1,600, two at $1,400, four at $1,200, and one at $1,000) who, by reason of age or physical infirmities, are unable to render such an equivalent in quality and quantity of work as their salaries reasonably demand. Many of them have been in the office for a long period of time and have been faithful and competent clerks when in the full enjoyment of health and before their usefulness became impaired by years or disease.

Respectfully,

T. B. COULTER, Auditor.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
House of Representatives.

I will next read from a communication of the Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 28, 1890.

SIR: Referring to a verbal inquiry made on the 27th instant by one of your committee as to the efficiency of the clerical force of the General Land Office, I have the honor to state that the clerical force of this office embraces about forty clerks and copyists whose efficiency may be said to be below the average of others in their respective grades. Four of these receive annual salaries of $600; seven $800; four, $1,000; five, $1,200; eleven, $1,400; eight, $1,600; and one, $1,800.

A few of these have been long in the service, and their partial lack of efficiency is due to infirmity and old age. None are entirely worthless. It may be proper to add that the office contains a still larger number of clerks who are above the average of their respective grades in efficiency and who merit increased compensation.

Very respectfully,

GEO. REDWAY, Acting Commissioner.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. President, the estimate in regard to the inefficiency of the force in the different Departments is very large. I have before me some of these estimates. I will not at this late hour consume the time of the Senate in reading them. There are probably at the very lowest estimate four hundred inefficient employees in the different branches of the public service who are not rendering an equivalent for the salaries they are receiving and who are partially or totally pensioned upon the taxpayers of this country.

I am not bringing this up against the existing Administration. I am not making it as a charge against the present Administration. The same thing existed under the preceding Democratic Administration. Many of these persons have been in office for a long period of years, and they were retained much to my dissatisfaction and discontent during the last Democratic Administration, and many of them are still retained, though quite a number were turned out. I know of an incident where the last Democratic Secretary of the Interior, on an investigation, found that one or two of his employees had not been to the Department for probably a year or more and that absolutely they did not pretend to go to the office or do a particle of work and yet they were borne on the rolls at high salaries.

This is not right. This Government was not instituted upon the theory that the civil officers of the Government were entitled to any pensions. The tendency for years has been to establish a civil pension-list in the Departments here in Washington. It is wrong, it is in violation of the principles of our Government, and I desire to say now, as this matter is before Congress, that if some steps are not taken by the Department officials I shall insist upon legislation, and shall make the issue directly and squarely whether we intend to pension these cormorants for place after they have obtained their places and are no longer able to perform their duties. We all know how anxious they are to get places.

You gentlemen on the opposite side of the Chamber know the pressure which has been brought to bear upon you during the present Administration to secure places, and when they get the places—and there are thousands of others more anxious or at least as anxious to get them as they were—then they turn around and say that the people of the United States have come under an obligation to them, because they have done their duty partially, it may be fully, to pension them during the remainder of their lives. They are under obligation to the taxpayers of the country for permitting them to occupy the positions so long and to draw the salaries they have, but the taxpayers are under no kind of obligation to pension them during the rest of their lives.

Go to any business establishment, and you will not find one that would not discharge such persons at once. These people are retained in the service, and we are beset year by year to increase the clerical force because they have got worthless and inefficient employees in the Departments. I say it is not right. We should not give them one solitary additional employee until they discharge these incompetent and inefficient ones, and they can get plenty of others from the outside, plenty of Republicans to fill the positions, plenty of efficient persons to fill the positions, and then bring the work up to date. It is a disgrace that today three-fourths of the work of Senators is imposed upon them because the Departments are in arrears in the transaction of their business.

If the Departments transacted all the business before them current and answered every letter that was received promptly, one-half of the labors imposed upon Senators and Representatives would be taken off them; and if the clerks were efficient and made to do their duty every Department of the Government could bring up all these arrears of business and attend to all current business without one additional clerk, and, in fact, could discharge at least one-fifth of the present force.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 401) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Alexandria, in the State of Louisiana;

A bill (S. 3571) to provide an American register for the barge Ottawa of Philadelphia, Pa.;

A bill (S. 3052) for the relief of the Michigan military academy;

A bill (S. 2403) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Beaver Falls, in the State of Pennsylvania; and

A bill (S. 595) for the erection of a public building at Salina, Kans.

ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICE OF THE SENATE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask leave to introduce a resolution to go over until to-morrow.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of seven be, and is hereby, constituted, whose duty it shall be to take into immediate consideration the state of the administrative service of the Senate and report to the Senate as early as may be what measures should be adopted in respect of the greatest efficiency and economy of the service.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be printed.

REPORT ON RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. FRYE. I ask for the printing of 300 more copies of the report of the Committee on Commerce upon the river and harbor bill. I understand of what were printed the edition has been practically exhausted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 17th instant, copies of reports relative to the improvement of the entrance to St. John's River, Florida, and the cost of improvement of Indian River, Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

NOTICES OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PLUMB. I give notice that to-morrow at the conclusion of the morning business I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill, which, I presume, will take but a short time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to state before I make a motion to adjourn that I shall ask the Senate to-morrow to again consider the bill about the undisposed-of fund in Utah, which I called attention to this morning, and which I think will not take five minutes.

Now I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL. With the permission of my colleague, I give notice that I shall call up the agricultural college bill to-morrow, if I can get the consent of the Senate.

ADMISSION OF WYOMING.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Before submitting the motion to adjourn, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 894) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes.

The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 1 minute p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, June 21, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 20, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

APPROVAL OF THE JOURNAL OF WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. The House will give its attention. The question before the House is the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] for the previous question upon the motion to approve the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday last.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER again stated the pending question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not understand that we ordered the yeas and nays on the previous question, but on the approval of the Journal as amended.

Mr. MCKINLEY. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no objection to the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moved the previous question, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered by the House.

Mr. MCKINLEY. The gentleman's motion—

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MILLS. One moment, Mr. Speaker; let us have no confusion about this matter. What is the question?

The SPEAKER. On ordering the previous question on the motion to approve the Journal.

Mr. MCKINLEY. The motion of the gentleman from Texas as shown by the RECORD of yesterday is:

I move the previous question on the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MILLS. It was my motion to approve the Journal as amended.

Mr. MCKINLEY. We both made the motion to approve the Journal.

Mr. MILLS. But I made the motion to approve the Journal as amended.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about that whatever.

Mr. MILLS. I only wanted the Journal to show that fact.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll. The question was taken; and there were—yeas 126, nays 122, not voting 79; as follows:

 Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania, with Mr. STONE, of Missouri, on this vote.

Mr. COOPER, of Ohio, with Mr. EDMUNDS, on this vote.

Mr. MCKINLEY (having voted in the negative). Mr. Speaker, I desire to change my vote from "no" to "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.
 Mr. MCKINLEY. I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. BLAND. I make the point of order that that is a dilatory motion.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER proceeded to submit the question.

Mr. MILLS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; we may as well have the yeas and nays at once, to save time.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are ordered on the motion of the gentleman from Texas, which is to lay upon the table the motion of the gentleman from Ohio for reconsideration of the vote last taken, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 131, nays 129, not voting 67; as follows:

Mr. DARGAN, having voted in the negative, changed his vote to the affirmative.

So the Journal as amended was approved.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Mr. NUTE with Mr. COVERT, on this vote.

Mr. McDUFFIE with Mr. MUTCHLER, on this vote.

Mr. HOUK with Mr. WASHINGTON, for the rest of the day.

Mr. WILSON, of Washington, with Mr. SKINNER, until further notice.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I voted inadvertently. I find that I am paired with my colleague [Mr. HOUK].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's vote will be withdrawn.

THE JOURNAL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

The Clerk began the reading of the Journal of Thursday, June 19, 1890.

During the reading of the Journal the following occurred:

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have order. It is impossible to hear the Journal read. I ask the Speaker to give us order.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker desires to ask the House to be in order. The business of the House can not go on unless the House maintains order. Will gentlemen please cease conversation? [A pause.] The Clerk will begin the reading of the Journal at the beginning of it.

The Clerk again read from the beginning of the Journal and completed the reading of the same.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will be considered as approved.

There was no objection.

SENATE BILL NO. 1, TO PROTECT TRADE, ETC.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit the following conference report.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to raise a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont presents a conference report.

Mr. BLAND. The question simply is, whether under the rules bills are now in order to be reported from the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The conference report takes precedence of even a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The conference report must first be read.

Mr. BLAND. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. Precisely, but the House must know what it is asked to consider.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Let me say to the gentleman from Missouri that it will take but a moment. I hope it will be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1) to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That both Houses recede from their respective amendments.

E. B. TAYLOR,

J. W. STEWART,

D. B. CULBERSON,

Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

GEO. F. EDMUNDS,

GEO. F. HOAR,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement submitted by the House conferees was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The committee of conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1) to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies submit the following statement:

The report recommends recession by the House from the House amendment and by the Senate from the Senate amendment to the House amendment.

The adoption of the report therefore leaves the bill as it passed the Senate.

J. W. STEWART, For House Conferees.

Mr. BLAND. Now, Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration, in order to go to the Speaker's table and take up the silver bill.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. On that question I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question is: Will the House now consider the conference report; and on that the gentleman from Vermont demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 144, nays 103, not voting 80; as follows:

So the House determined to consider the conference report.

The following additional pairs were announced until further notice:

Mr. NUTE with Mr. TURNER, of New York.

Mr. McDUFFIE with Mr. CLARKE, of Alabama.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR with Mr. YODER, for the rest of this day.

Mr. HEARD. I ask unanimous consent that the recapitulation of the vote be dispensed with.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object.

The vote was recapitulated.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, the statement submitted with the conference report is perhaps all that is necessary in order to give the information desired by the House, and as the conference report submits the question to the House it stands upon the Senate bill as it came originally to the House, which gentlemen perhaps will remember as a bill against trusts and combinations. Its provisions are very general and sweeping, and perhaps cover the whole ground. Inasmuch as the amendments made by the House to the Senate bill and the Senate amendment to that amendment are all withdrawn by the conference and inasmuch as these amendments were discussed at considerable length the other day, unless some gentleman desires further debate, I shall ask for a vote on the adoption of the report.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to make a statement?

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the House that I rise simply to state that we agree to this report because it is in compliance with the instructions of the House. Individually I thought the amendment originally made by the House was desirable, but, the House having instructed otherwise, I agree to this report in accordance with that instruction.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to make a statement.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I will yield the floor for a question.

Mr. BLAND. I only want a minute in which to make a statement.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Very well.

Mr. BLAND. I regret that the amendments that the House put upon the bill were stricken out; and while I fear the bill in its present shape is not what its friends expect of it I shall cheerfully vote for it. I raised the question of consideration simply for the purpose of going to the Speaker's table and taking up the silver bill. I am not opposed to the bill itself. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. As there seems to be no disposition, or at least I am not advised of any disposition, to discuss the bill, I will ask for a vote.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this bill, as it came from the Senate, as was stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]—

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Do I understand the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] desires to discuss this question?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Then I yield the floor to the gentleman if he desires to discuss the measure.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. When this bill was before the House recently the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], in discussing its provisions, made the statement that the power given in this bill was an exercise of the entire power of the General Government over the subject of trusts, and that its provisions presented the matter in a shape to obtain the decisions of the courts, out of which we might gather the full extent of the power of the Government on that subject. Now, as a great deal has been said in this Congress about trusts, it seems to me but justice to this side of the Chamber that a statement of the facts should be made to the House and the country in regard to the situation before this question is put to the House.

For four years during the last Administration we heard a great deal on the other side of this Chamber about trusts, and all over the country a great clamor has been raised about trusts. It was stated in this Chamber and to the people that the trusts were crushing the life-blood out of the people, and that everything that we bought was being enhanced in value by the trusts in various parts of the country, and so increasing the prices. While, perhaps, there was a great deal of misstatement about this proposition, there was, perhaps, also a great deal of truth in it; and we know that the sugar trust came before the last Congress and exacted from the Democratic side of the House, as was generally believed, some concession making it possible for that great monopoly to exact from the people of the United States a vast sum of money out of the products of their enriched business, and we know that many millions of dollars were obtained by them through the trust.

The stock of the sugar trust became a very profitable investment, and vast sums of money were made out of it. Now, this was true; but it is also true that, while so much was being said on the subject, not one single syllable of legislation came from that side of the House during the four years of the last Administration on the subject of trusts. The leading gentlemen on that side of the Chamber went so far as to say that the only method by which we could control the trusts of this country was by a change of the Constitution, granting additional power to the General Government over the subject of trusts, and the fact that no legislation was proposed by this House seemed to imply that that view was a generally accepted theory of the Democratic party, and that Congress could only control trusts after a change of the Constitution.

Mr. HEARD. Who said that?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. And the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE], in order to further that view of the case, took occasion to introduce a proposition for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, making a grant of power to the General Government over the subject.

Mr. ENLOE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] if he believes that when this bill is passed into a law it will be worth even the blank paper it is written on.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. We have a statement from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and other members of the committee who framed this bill—

Mr. ENLOE. I am asking your opinion.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. My opinion is that it will be the exercise of the entire power of the Government over the subject, except in so far as it applies to the Territories and the District of Columbia.

Mr. ENLOE. But will it accomplish anything?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I think it will accomplish a great deal. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] very truly said that this was an unexplored field, that this was new legislation, that it was a case which demanded that the Government should declare the law, and that out of that declaration of the law would be evolved the decisions of the court, which would settle the question and determine the extent of our control over the subject. When the gentleman from Texas made that statement he had the approval, I believe, of every gentleman on this side of the House, and also of a number of gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. ENLOE. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] says that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] stated that this bill was the complete exercise of the powers of the Federal Government, under the Constitution, to control trusts. If I remember the statement of the gentleman from Texas correctly it was that this bill was the exercise of all the constitutional power that Congress had except the power to repeal the duties which protect these trusts, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question on that point.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. So far as the question of duties is concerned, that entire question has been gone over fully in this House, and we know that some of the most injurious trusts, those from which the people of this country have suffered most, have been beyond our control, trusts existing in other countries. We know, further, that the only way in which we can control those foreign trusts and prevent their exactions upon our people is to establish or maintain industries in this country which will compete against the exactions of the trusts existing on the other side of the ocean, and the policy which is favored by some gentlemen, including the gentleman from Tennessee, would leave us entirely at the mercy of those monopolies on the other side of the ocean.

Mr. ENLOE. I would like the gentleman to name some of the trusts that exist on the other side of the ocean that interfere with business here.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Well, since we have had our tariff laws in operation they have not been so extensive in their effects, but we know that until our tariff laws were passed, protecting our American industries, the combinations among the foreign producers of articles that had no competition in this country compelled our people to pay very high prices. Steel rails, for example, cost three or four times what our people have to pay for them to-day.

Mr. ENLOE. That was twenty-five years ago.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. But when we got our American competition established against these foreign trusts, which were exacting such high prices from our people, prices began to fall, and the cost to the consumer has been steadily reduced.

Mr. ENLOE. I venture to say that the gentleman never heard of a "trust" twenty-five years ago.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. But everybody knows that they were in existence. As to hearing of them, we have only heard much about trusts since the Democratic party began to think that they could make political capital out of that question. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ENLOE. You heard of them when Mr. Cleveland said that they were all over this country and when Mr. Blaine responded that they were private affairs, with which the Government had nothing to do.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. And that England was "plastered with them."

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to call the attention of my friend from Iowa to the fact that steel rails cost $22.50 in England and $31.50 in this country.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Yes; and until we had American competition they used to cost about $150 a ton in England. Everybody knows that to be a fact.

Mr. SPRINGER. But they cost more here at the same time. They have always been cheaper there.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. By American competition we reduced the price until it was brought down to a reasonable figure, and the gentleman from Illinois knows that as well as any man in this country.

Mr. SPRINGER. What reduced the price of them over there? They have always been $10 or $15 or $20 cheaper there than here.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Our cutting into them.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. But, Mr. Speaker, I suppose I shall have to draw my remarks to a close, as the gentleman in charge of this bill seems to be in a hurry to have it disposed of. I only wanted to call attention to the fact that this is the first bill that has ever passed the American Congress undertaking or pretending to regulate trusts in this country, and also to the fact that this is a bill passed by a Republican Congress. For fourteen years the Democratic party had control of the legislation of this country, and until now no legislation has ever been carried through for the purpose of regulating trusts.

Mr. ENLOE. Where was your Republican Senate, that it did not pass such a bill?

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I had no idea that I was going to open such a Pandora's box. The tariff, Mr. Speaker, is a very amusing subject, and I think I have heard something about it during this session. [Laughter.] It is, however, so far as this question is concerned, a mere "local issue," as our Democratic friends used to say. At all events, it does not seem to me that it has any particular relation to the bill under consideration. The provisions of this trust bill are just as broad, sweeping, and explicit as the English language can make them to express the power of Congress over this subject under the Constitution of the United States. If the bill does not go far enough, then the proposition of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE], made some time ago, will be in order. When it is found that the power of Congress as it now exists has been exhausted in this legislation, then it will be time to look for some amendment to the Constitution. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HEARD. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 242, nay 0, not voting 85; as follows:

So the conference report was adopted.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. LANSING with Mr. PHELAN, until further notice.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, with Mr. OUTHWAITE, until further notice.

Mr. NUTE with Mr. WILEY, for the rest of this day.

Mr. MILLIKEN with Mr. BIGGS, for the rest of this day.

Mr. BLOUNT with Mr. STOCKBRIDGE, on this vote.

Mr. WADDILL with Mr. EDMUNDS, on this vote.

Mr. ENLOE. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. CONGER. I object.

The Clerk then recapitulated the names of those voting.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—CHALMERS VS. MORGAN.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I present, on behalf of the Committee on Elections, a report in the case of Chalmers vs. Morgan. My colleague on the committee [Mr. HOUK] desires to submit a minority report, and, as he is absent by reason of sickness, I present that also.

The SPEAKER. The report will be printed with the views of the minority, and properly referred.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—MILLER VS. ELLIOTT.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a privileged question in connection with the order of business in the House.

Mr. ROWELL. I also submit a privileged report from the Committee on Elections in the case of Miller vs. Elliott.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to submit a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois raises a question which has preference. The gentleman submits a report from the Committee on Elections, which will be printed and properly referred.

Mr. ROWELL. The minority desire to present their views also.

The SPEAKER. At some future time?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir. I believe they are not prepared.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the minority will have leave to file its views hereafter.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

THE SILVER BILL.

Mr. BLAND. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged resolution. I offer a resolution to take from the Speaker's table a Senate bill for immediate consideration in the House. Inasmuch as the Journal of the House was corrected and approved—

A MEMBER. What bill?

Mr. BLAND. The bill H. R. 5381 with Senate amendments, what is known as the silver bill.

It will be remembered that the House corrected and approved the Journal. This bill came over from the Senate with certain amendments to it, and by the vote of the House taken this morning it is shown that this bill is upon the Speaker's table, and under Rule XXIV should be laid before the House for consideration. I desire to offer a resolution to that effect.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I was going to suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that this is Friday, private-bill day, and, the appropriation bills all being out of the way, perhaps the gentleman from Tennessee had as well make the usual motion for the consideration of private business.

Mr. BLAND. Let this resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman raises a question upon the resolution which he sends to the desk. The Clerk will read the resolution, so that the House may understand the question presented.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker lay before the House the bill No. 5381, directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes therefor, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, for consideration.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I make the point of order that that is not now in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why not?

Mr. MCKINLEY. First, I make the point of order that the motion is not a privileged motion, and that under the rules of this House the only way to reach the Speaker's table is under the order of morning business.

Mr. BLAND. This is the morning business and is the regular order of business, which I am demanding.

Mr. BURROWS. Besides, it changes the rule.

Mr. MCKINLEY. And it changes the rule of the House, as suggested.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, under Rule XXIV—

Mr. CONGER. I make the additional point of order that the bill is not on the Speaker's table, but in the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. [Derisive laughter on Democratic side.]

Mr. BLAND. Under Rule XXIV it is provided that the order of business shall be, first, prayer by the Chaplain; second, reading and approval of the Journal; third, correction of reference of public bills; the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, and then unfinished business. Under the second subdivision of that rule—

Reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by members; but House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported by a committee of the House.

Now, that is the regular order of morning business. The privilege that we claim is that any member of the House has a right to demand the regular order, and the proceeding under the rules of the House, which is to lay before the House Senate bills or House bills with amendments of the Senate, for consideration. Hence I have offered that resolution.

I will state, Mr. Speaker, in this connection, that upon the vote of the House striking out that portion of the Journal referring to the matter of the reference of this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures—and this in answer to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER]—that the Journal of the House is required to be kept by the Constitution, and is like the records of a court. It must speak by the record, and you cannot go outside of it and bring in evidence alunde, to prove anything. Now, the Journal says that this bill is on the Speaker's table, as it came from the Senate with amendments, and there is no constitutional record of this bill to show that it is elsewhere, but under our constitutional record it is shown to be still on the Speaker's table, and no gentleman has any evidence to claim that it is elsewhere or to make any such point of order. It was on the Speaker's table, and necessarily it must be there still. The Journal shows it to be there, or at least there is nothing on the Journal to show that it has been referred elsewhere; and the vote of the House declares that that bill is still upon the Speaker's table, and the Journal of the House as corrected must stand in that relation.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Chair and the House to the fact that this bill is one of the bills referred to in the order of business as a House bill with a Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me a moment, I think I can save time by calling for the regular order. I suppose the gentleman is now asking unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAND. This is the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman call for the order of presenting bills of this class?

Mr. CANNON. I just called for the regular order.

Mr. BLAND. This is the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. We think this is the regular order. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] and of the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures [Mr. CONGER] to the fact that the bill now referred to by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is a House bill with a Senate amendment, and that the rule of the House provides that, if such amendment is not required to be considered by a Committee of the Whole House, it may be at once disposed of by the House or from the Speaker's table. Now, the question is as to whether the amendments of the Senate are such as require this bill to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BUCKALEW. We do not know what the amendments are.

Mr. SPRINGER. If gentlemen will turn to the rule of the House they will find that under Rule XXIII, clause 3—

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching the appropriations of money, * * * shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of the bill has commenced.

And also under the other rule that this point of order is good against a Senate amendment the same as against House amendments. Rule XX provides that—

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall be first considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

Now, mind, the reference is that it must first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House. This bill was in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and a resolution was reported to the House from the Committee on Rules which suspended that order of business and took this bill out of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered that it be considered in the House, so that the requirement of our rule that this bill should be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was dispensed with by the vote of the House, which brought it into the House and required it to be considered in the House, so that the requirement of the rule is complied with so far as the original bill is concerned.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Does the gentleman hold that that special order is still continuing?

Mr. SPRINGER. I hold that that special order is still continuing, as far as the original bill is concerned.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I simply wanted to know the length of the absurdity to which you would go.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hold that the special order dispenses with the necessity of considering that bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Now, the question comes up as to whether the amendment of the Senate was of such a nature as brought new matters into this bill which required the consideration of that new matter in the Committee of the Whole House. The original bill had this appropriation in it that went to the Senate:

And a sum sufficient to carry into effect the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That was the language of the bill that passed this House and as to the consideration of which the Committee of the Whole was dispensed with by the vote of the House, taking it out of the Committee of the Whole House and considering it in the House, so that it was not necessary that that proposition should be considered in the committee, because the House decided by vote, on a proposition coming from the Committee on Rules, to dispense with the rule of the House requiring that it should be considered in the Committee of the Whole House and ordered it to be considered in the House itself. Now, that was the bill that went to the Senate. What did the Senate do with that? The language of the Senate, so far as this appropriation is concerned in the Senate amendment, is as follows:

A sufficient sum to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Being precisely the same language in the Senate bill that was in the House bill with this exception, that the House bill said—

A sum sufficient—

And the Senate bill says—

A sufficient sum.

Mr. PETERS. But the language was used concerning an entirely different appropriation, was it not?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, the same exactly except this, that in the House an order had been made upon the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase $4,500,000 of bullion per month, and hold it in the Treasury, which was a monthly appropriation, during the existence of this act, of $4,500,000. And in order to carry out the provisions of this act as to that, and as to the printing of the certificates, this general clause of appropriation was put into the House bill. Now the Senate bill has taken out that part of the bill which required this appropriation to be made for purchasing bullion, so that the appropriation under the general clause as it stands in the Senate bill is not more than 2 per cent. of what that appropriation was in the House bill under the same general clause.

Mr. PETERS. But, if my friend from Illinois will allow me, what is the appropriation for in the Senate bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. In the Senate bill it was just exactly for the same as this. I will read it.

And a sum sufficient to carry into effect the provisions of this bill—

All the provisions that required expenditure— is hereby appropriated, etc.

Mr. PETERS. The provisions of the act referred to are the provisions relating to free coinage, while there was no such provision in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. BLAND. Now, the general appropriation bill appropriating for the expenses of the Mint covers that.

Mr. SPRINGER. That same thing is covered in the Senate proposition that was covered in the House bill, except that the House bill covered $4,500,000 to purchase bullion which the Senate does not. So that this proposition of the Senate is not a new matter, but contains the very identical words that the House has passed upon. Therefore this bill does not contain new matter which should take it to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CASWELL. This appropriation is for coinage, while the other is for the purchase of the bullion.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman states it is for coinage. Which appropriation?

Mr. CASWELL. That in the Senate bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; there is nothing for coinage in the Senate bill, because coinage is free.

Mr. CASWELL. Exactly; but the Government furnishes the money to carry that out.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is coined at the mints free.

Mr. BLAND. The general appropriation bills carry all that. We appropriate annually so much for carrying on the Mint.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think my friend from Missouri does not state the fact as strongly as it is. The appropriation for the coinage of silver, if I remember correctly, is a permanent appropriation.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is correct; that is the law.

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes; that was my memory of it.

Mr. SPRINGER. So that the Senate amendment places it under the general appropriation; and it is now exactly the same as it passed in the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, who has the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor, if he can manage to keep it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I know I have the floor, but it is a very difficult thing to keep it on an occasion like this. I desire to submit this question to the House: That this bill does not require its consideration in Committee of the Whole on account of the Senate amendments, for the Senate amendments leave the exact text, and the last section of the bill of the House is not disturbed at all. Hence, it is no new matter and does not take it to the Committee of the Whole, because the House has already agreed to it. So that the only new matter in this bill is the matter which reduces the appropriation so far as expenses are concerned, but leaves the general words precisely the same in one bill as they are in the other. So that there is nothing in the Senate amendments which requires this bill to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Then it comes within this second clause of Rule XXIV, which says that this may be disposed of as the House may determine.

Hence we are now at the point in the order of business of the House, at the business on the Speaker's table, when this bill may be disposed of as the House may determine, and therefore the motion of the gentleman from Missouri is in order, and the question before the House is, Will the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table? If it should do so and a motion be made and entertained by the Chair to concur in the Senate amendments to this bill, it will pass the bill if a majority of the House is in favor of it.

Now, all we ask is permission for the members of this House to vote upon the question of concurring in what the Senate of the United States has done; and if the friends of free silver will just vote in the direction of free silver we will soon offer them an opportunity to vote to concur in the Senate amendments to this bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, this question that the gentleman from Illinois has been discussing was very largely discussed yesterday, except possibly in one feature. He says that the amendments added to this bill by the Senate add no new features. Now, if any one will carefully read the bill that passed the House he will discover that the first section of the bill provided for the purchase of four and a half million dollars' worth of silver each month, and an appropriation was made for that. The amendment that the Senate adds provides for the coinage of all silver at the public expense that may be brought to the mints; and that is what the money is provided for in that bill. It is true the gentleman says that the House bill provides for the coinage of silver also. It does provide for so much as may be necessary to redeem the notes; but it provides that the profit that is made from the purchase of this silver at 75 cents on the dollar shall pay the coinage fee, and no appropriation is made in the House bill for the coinage of silver. Now, these two features of the bills are as wide apart as the north and south poles.

Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman will hardly claim—

Mr. CONGER. I do not yield. The gentleman has had his time.

But as to the point of order on the motion just made by the gentleman from Missouri. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the proceeding in this House on yesterday, which culminated this morning in the passage of the resolution approving the Journal with the amendment, simply amends the Journal by striking out the record of the reference which the Speaker had made of this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] had embodied in his original resolution a preamble which recited that that reference was wrong. That preamble was not sustained by this House, but a simple resolution was adopted erasing the record of the reference which had been made. How does that affect the fact of the reference? Did the Speaker refer this bill under the rules of the House to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures? He certainly did; and if gentlemen will follow the course of every bill which has been referred by the Speaker they will find a record of it duly made in the appropriate place, as they will find the record of this reference.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to ask the gentleman a pertinent question.

Mr. CONGER. I decline to be interrupted. I will answer the gentleman after I get done. I say if gentlemen will follow the course of this bill from the time it left the Speaker's hands, with the order that it be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, they will find the proper entries made in the various offices in this Capitol through which it should pass; they will find that it was sent to the Public Printer, was printed, and was yesterday morning placed with the printed amendments in the document-room of this House. They will find that the Journal Clerk, whose duty it is to convey these bills to the various committees to which they are referred, did deliver this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures and did take a proper receipt on his book for it.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. Right there I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CONGER. When I get through with my statement I will answer any questions that may be put. This bill, I say, was so referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. The Clerk receipted for it early yesterday morning, and it has been in possession of that committee from that time until this. Now what did the proceedings of this House yesterday do? They simply destroyed the record in the Journal of this House of the reference as made, but they did not change the fact that the Speaker had made such a reference. If gentlemen want to recall that bill from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, the rules provide how it shall be done, and when they proceed in that way they will certainly get the bill back before the House.

Mr. STRUBLE. If the House wishes it.

Mr. CONGER. If the House wishes it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures mean to be understood as saying that this bill is now actually, physically, in the possession of his committee?

Mr. CONGER. I do not wish to be interrupted, but I do say that the bill has been and is in the possession of the committee. Now, one other word, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CRISP. I want to ask my friend a question. I understood him to say that the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures had the bill, that the Speaker had referred it to that committee.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRISP. Where is the gentleman's evidence of that reference?

Mr. CONGER. I have just told you where you will find it. If you will step in and examine the records that are kept in the Journal Clerk's office you will find the evidence or if you will call on the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures they will show you the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. But the Journal of the House imports absolute verity and can not be controlled by any other subordinate records, and it contains no evidence of any such reference.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, suppose that my friend from Michigan [Mr. O'DONNELL] delivers to me the deed of a piece of property that I have purchased of him, and he not only delivers me the deed but I enter into possession of that property, and take my deed to the proper recording officer and have it recorded. Then, suppose that recording officer, or even the judge of a court, orders that the record of that fact shall be expunged or erased, does that dispossess me from the possession of the property the title to which the deed has conferred to me? Not by any means. So, Mr. Speaker, I claim that, because all of these subordinate records are part of the records of the House and because the Speaker has referred this bill as I have stated, and it has been put in the possession of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and also because no proper proceeding has been had, no attempt even has been made under the rules of the House to recall the bill from that committee, therefore it can not be at this moment on the Speaker's table for consideration.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, in determining the position of this bill at this time, it is not only necessary to refer to the rules of this House under which we have been acting, but also, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER], it is proper and necessary to refer to the record made by this House on yesterday and to-day, and by that record and by the rules we can determine where this bill now is.

The action of the House yesterday was exceedingly significant. It passed upon every phase of this question. We had the bill as it came from the Senate. We had a record, or a proposed record, upon the Journal as to the reference of the bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The House determined that the bill had not been referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. The preamble of the resolution as introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] recited that there had been a reference of the bill which was incorrect under the rules, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] appealed very strongly to the House on yesterday to vote against the resolution upon the ground that the recital of the Journal entry was merely the recital of a fact, and that the preamble and resolution were inconsistent in alleging a reference that was erroneous and because it was erroneous the bill was not referred.

The gentleman from Ohio, who is a good lawyer, saw the force of the point he made against the preamble and resolution when he claimed that an incorrect reference would not warrant the House in striking the order of reference from the Journal. But the fact was that there was no reference of the bill at all. The Speaker of this House, as declared in effect by the resolution adopted yesterday, had no jurisdiction to make the reference; and, the Speaker having no jurisdiction, what was the result? It was not that the reference as made was voidable, but that it was void; that it never took place. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Lawyers here know very well that when a court acts without jurisdiction its act is not voidable, but void. Take the case of the appointment of a receiver to take possession of property placed in his hands by a court.

If the court had jurisdiction to appoint the receiver, of course subsequent acts of failure on his part, for instance, to give bond, or something of that kind, might interfere with his right of possession and require that the goods or property should be restored; but, if the court had no jurisdiction to appoint the receiver, then in the eye of the law the court had no authority in the premises and its action was void. In such a case the receiver would never be in legal possession of the property. In a criminal case the trial of an accused by a court not having jurisdiction is void and the accused is not even placed in jeopardy by the proceedings.

Now, what is the position of the bill in view of what occurred on yesterday? The House determined then that this reference had not been made, and by striking out the preamble of the resolution it determined further that the Speaker had no jurisdiction to make the reference. There may possibly have been some personal considerations that entered into it, but that does not involve the legal question, the legal status being that under the order of the House, as taken on yesterday, that bill now lies on the Speaker's table and is subject to be considered at any time that the House proceeds to business on the Speaker's table. Why? Because the House has declared by the proceedings of yesterday that the reference of the bill was void ab initio, and by its vote the House restores the bill to its place on the table.

Mr. CONGER rose.

Mr. MORROW. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment.

Now, the mere physical fact that the bill is in the hands of the gentleman from Iowa, as chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, has nothing whatever to do with this question. Why, any member of this House may proceed to the desk and take therefrom any bill and take it to his desk and look it over to ascertain what motion or order shall be made in regard to it. But such a taking from the Speaker's table is not a reference by the Speaker. He may assent to such taking, but such action does not confer any jurisdiction over the bill in the hands of such a member. If the bill is therefore in the hands of any member or committee it is there without authority of law and should be returned at once.

Furthermore, the Speaker, in deciding the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], ruled that this bill should be disposed of in the House, which is of course a determination that the bill is properly on the Speaker's table. He said:

Now, here is a discretion to be exercised by the Speaker of the House in determining whether any House bill with a Senate amendment belongs to the one class or to the other of these bills. There is a discretion to be exercised by the Speaker in that matter, and in the exercise of that discretion the House has the right to review that decision. The Speaker may err as to whether or not a particular amendment to a Senate bill contains any appropriation. Suppose he should err about that, how would the House ever get consideration of it at all? Suppose some bill without any appropriation should be referred by the Speaker in the manner that House bills are referred; suppose he should do that; there would be no chance for the House to correct it.

There would be no opportunity for appeal from that decision, and it does seem to me that the true course is to give a reasonable construction to all portions of the rule, so that all may have their effect. There is some contradiction. There is a difficulty in reaching a conclusion, but the very fact that this House has the right to pass upon the ruling of the Speaker upon that question, if he makes a ruling distinguishing erroneously between these two, and that the House may have the right to correct it by appeal, it does seem to me the better construction is that where there is a House bill with Senate amendments it shall be disposed of in the House. I freely confess, sir, that this is not a matter free from doubt.

This morning the House reached a final vote on the question and left the bill upon the Speaker's table, and although the gentleman from Iowa may have it in his physical possession, it is his duty, on the suggestion of the Speaker, to restore that bill to its place on the table, where it belongs. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman yield for a question now?

Mr. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. I want the gentleman to tell us whether the resolution which we passed on yesterday said anything about the jurisdiction of the Speaker or the right of the Speaker to refer this bill.

Mr. MORROW. It was not necessary.

Mr. CONGER. Did it not simply wipe out the record that appeared in the Journal?

Mr. MORROW. Certainly, the House declared that there was no reference of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. Not at all.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Before the gentleman takes his seat let me ask him a question.

Mr. MORROW. Certainly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand the gentleman to have asserted that I made the point on yesterday that there was an inconsistency in the declaration of the preamble and the resolution which followed. I did so assert, and I maintain it now. But I wish to call his attention to the further fact, which he seems to have overlooked, that the preamble recites that the bill was incorrectly referred, and the House last night on a ye-and-nay vote directed that preamble to be stricken out.

Mr. MORROW. Oh, yes, it voted that there was no reference. [Cries of "Oh, no!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me read the preamble for the gentleman.

Mr. MORROW. I understand that the preamble was stricken out.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Then, I will read it so that the House may understand it. The preamble recites:

Whereas the order of reference made by the Speaker referring House bill 5381, which was returned to the House yesterday with a Senate amendment, to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, was incorrect under the rules of the House and without authority under said rules: Therefore.

Then follows the resolution. Now this preamble was by a ye-and-nay vote of the House stricken out; and what is the logic of that vote?

Mr. OATES. The gentleman from Ohio has read the preamble; now will he read the resolution itself?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will do so.

Mr. OATES. You have read the preamble; now let us have the resolution.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Exactly. But I read the preamble to show that inasmuch as the House struck it out with the recital that the reference was incorrect, and made without authority of the rules of the House, the House by that vote refused to assent to the proposition that the reference was incorrect, and logically adopted the contrary of that proposition, the negative—

Mr. MORROW. Now, right there—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me conclude this. Therefore the negative proposition was adopted, namely, that it was a correct reference. [Cries of "Oh no!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MORROW. Allow me to call the attention of the gentleman to the words of the preamble to which he can address himself in whatever reply he chooses to make. I read from the preamble itself:

Whereas the order of reference made by the Speaker referring House bill 5381—

"Whereas the order of reference."

Mr. BOUTELLE. That sounds just the same as when BUTTERWORTH read it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORROW. I understand; but when the House struck out the preamble it struck out the statement that there was an order of reference. The House declared that there was no order of reference, and that the bill, in the eye of the law and in the judgment of the House, was still on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I recognize the force of the resolution which was adopted, but the point was distinctly made yesterday, and I call the attention of the gentleman to it, and we talked about it yesterday considerably, that the recital in the preamble discloses the fact—discloses what was really done. Now, what are the facts as disclosed by the preamble? First, that a reference had been made; second, that it was incorrect and without authority. The House voted that down, the logic of which, I take it, is the assertion of the counter-proposition that the House did not regard the reference as incorrect. The point that the Speaker did not refer the bill at all, because he may have referred it improperly, is amusing. It hardly deserves to be treated seriously. He must know the cases he cites are not in point. To be satisfied he has only to carry the logic of those cases to the last analysis in the matter of the reference of a bill by the Speaker.

Mr. MORROW. The proceedings of yesterday might, as I said before, be compared to a proceeding in court. Where a court has jurisdiction, and the record contains an erroneous recital it may be properly amended by saying that it was incorrectly entered; but where the court has no jurisdiction it can make no record, and any pretended record must be stricken from the proceedings.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Unfortunately for the gentleman's argument, the Speaker has jurisdiction to refer bills. In fact, that jurisdiction is specifically conferred, and he is to determine, in the first instance, what reference shall be made. And the rules prescribe just how an error in judgment on the part of the Speaker in the matter of referring a bill can be corrected. That he has jurisdiction is clear. Whether he acted erroneously in the exercise of that jurisdiction was the precise question presented by the preamble, and the House voted "No." And now to escape from the dilemma in which that vote placed the gentleman from California he says, "Oh, no; I was voting that the Speaker had no jurisdiction at all to even attempt to refer the bill." The gentleman's argument is ingenious, but utterly unsound. Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Let me ask my friend from California a question.

Mr. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Suppose a bill comes over from the Senate and is by the Speaker under the rules referred to a committee, and the actual fact of transfer takes place, so that it goes to the committee, and the House of Representatives, under Democratic management and leadership for the time being, orders the record burnt up in toto, is the reference void ab initio?

Mr. MORROW. The question of jurisdiction does not obtain in a case of that kind.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. But the principle is the same.

Mr. MORROW. Oh, no.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You have destroyed your evidence, on your theory, because there is no record of it.

Mr. MORROW. The destruction of evidence does not destroy the jurisdiction of the court, if jurisdiction existed. The jurisdiction is derived from the law or is wanting by reason of the law.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I know it, because you can prove it some other way, and here by every testimony the bill is in the hands of the committee by a legal reference.

Mr. MORROW. The destruction of a record is a very different and distinct proceeding from a correction of it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Ah, but this is not a correction. The resolution might have gone far enough to meet the gentleman's views, but it did not, and the only other issue was presented in the preamble, which is against the gentleman's views.

Mr. MORROW. No, if the Speaker had no jurisdiction, there was nothing for the House to do but simply to erase the record, destroy the record so far as it purported to show a fact of which the Speaker had no jurisdiction.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. But the rules show that the Speaker had jurisdiction, and there is no action of the House to show that his act was an act without that jurisdiction, as I understand it.

Mr. MORROW. Now I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that yesterday's proceedings were a construction of the rule upon that point, and the House declared that the Speaker did not have jurisdiction to make the reference of the bill as set forth in the Journal.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Not at all, because you voted down the proposition involved in the preamble, and you yourself very wisely voted against the preamble. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORROW. Because we wanted it distinctly to appear that our vote in this matter was for the purpose of declaring that the Speaker had not jurisdiction to make that reference.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Yes; but you did not do it. You might have drawn a resolution to do that, but you did not do it, and the only element in issue was in your preamble, which was voted down, and you, like a sensible man, helped to do it. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. MORROW. That was because the preamble did not tell the truth, but the resolution did, and so we adopted the resolution and rejected the preamble.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friend will not deny that the resolution was predicated upon the facts recited in the preamble.

Mr. MORROW. Not at all.

Mr. GREENHALGE. You think it was entirely independent, do you?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I suppose the preamble was a mere exercise in chirography. But what folly to say, after reading the preamble and resolution, that the latter is not predicated solely upon the former. The resolution is nothing if it is not a conclusion drawn from the facts alleged in the preamble.

Mr. MORROW. The resolution was good without the preamble.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It gets its point from the preamble which recites the facts upon which the resolution is predicated. It must be obvious to all that without the preamble the resolution is, so far as the purpose sought by those who are trying to return the bill to the Speaker's table is concerned, pointless and is in effect a mere falsification of the record. The preamble and resolution together present to the House a distinct proposition that all can understand.

Mr. MORROW. Not necessarily. The resolution was sufficient without it and it conformed to our views.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The resolution does not present any views that can be understood in the absence of the recital of facts upon which it is predicated, i. e., a supposed improper reference of that bill. It was recited in the preamble that there had been such an erroneous or unauthorized action. This House said, not so; refusing flatly to agree to the recital that the reference had been made without authority; and so the resolution stood, like a conclusion without a premise.

I wish to call my friend's attention specially to another thing, to wit, that certain facts are recited in the preamble as the basis upon which the resolution rests, and which give it vitality; and my friend will observe that this preamble, after reciting the facts to which I have called his attention, says:

Therefore, Resolved, etc.

That is, the facts recited being so, it is resolved, etc. But if the facts are not as recited, then obviously the resolution would not follow. And this House, unwilling to stultify itself in the face of the record, refused to agree to that preamble. Why? Because this House knew the bill had been referred, and a majority believed that it had been correctly referred, and hence could not assent to the correctness of the recitals in the preamble. And I assert here my belief, Mr. Speaker, that there are not twenty-five men in this Hall who do not believe that bill was correctly referred. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I am one of the twenty-five who do not so believe.

Mr. MORROW. And several votes on this side declared otherwise.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I know we were voted down and the minority and the rules walked on as if they were a macadamized road. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. That was because you ought to be voted down.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But nevertheless it is true that the House, when standing face to face with the distinct proposition as to whether that bill had been correctly referred under the rules, refused to vote that it was not so referred. The distinct statement was made in the preamble that the silver bill was referred without authority under the rules. That it was referred everybody knew and knows, but, said the preamble, it was erroneously referred and without authority, and the House was distinctly asked to answer the question presented by that preamble, which was this and nothing more or less: Was that reference erroneous and without authority under the rules? And the House voted no. So that it occurs that the House in effect votes that the bill was properly referred, but for some reason desires to expunge the record of the fact.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio has declaimed with considerable emphasis and energy about the fact that he and his associates became a macadamized road yesterday, and they and the rules went down together. I want to say to him that this is a representative body, and that the majority rules. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] You went down because you were in the minority, and in the judgment of the House wrong in your position. It may be true that there were but few on this side who understood and insisted upon the fact that there had been no reference of this bill, but we did that conscientiously.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, certainly.

Mr. MORROW. Owing our allegiance to the people of this country, we do not propose either here or elsewhere to respond to anybody for our conduct as Representatives but to the people who sent us here. [General applause.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, my friend will recognize that that there is no tyranny like the tyranny of a majority that acts in disregard of law. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ENLOE. Except the tyranny of one man. [Renewed applause.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And in this case—[continued applause on the Democratic side]—gentlemen, if you acted in conformity with your applause you would hardly be attempting to place a bill before this House in violation of the plain letter of the law. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, so far as this reference is concerned, the RECORD, equally clear and of the same force as the Journal, declares that this bill has been referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. That they have it is certain.

And the RECORD also discloses that this House refused to vote that it was improperly in the hands of that committee. But it adopted a resolution which tends to show that a different reference was desired; and that is the beginning and the end of the effect of the resolution as adopted.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, I have simply one further word to say. The gentleman has declaimed very eloquently about the tyranny of a majority and all that sort of thing. Of course, the tyranny of a majority as expressed in this question has simply been that we might have under the rules of this House consideration of this bill. That is what we have asked from the beginning, and that is all we ask for now.

Now, with reference to the preamble to this resolution. The gentleman knows as well as any lawyer in this House, or any gentleman familiar with legislative proceedings, that this resolution does not depend for its existence upon the preamble. We have resolutions offered here every day, if you please, during the session without a preamble, and sometimes there are preambles that are amended by the House. The Speaker of the House disclosed the condition of the rules with reference to preambles last night when, after the adoption of the resolution, and perhaps to the surprise of many members, he informed the House that it was necessary to pass upon this preamble. Why? Because under the rules it is necessary that the House should consider its recitals separately.

Now, the House determined that so far as this preamble was concerned that it had not truly set forth the reasons why this resolution was adopted, and that it was not necessary in this instance, as generally it is not, to have the preamble in order to sustain the resolution.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me interrupt my friend right there. I want to be perfectly fair about the matter. He will admit that the soul of that preamble, upon which the resolution rests as a predicate, is the recital of the fact that a certain reference was erroneous and unauthorized. That was the distinct question, the vital point, the only point upon which the resolution turned; that is, whether that reference was unauthorized and erroneous, or not. This House decided that it was not erroneous, not unauthorized, and that was the end of it. The resolution without the preamble is a mere expression of opinion touching the reference.

Mr. MORROW. I concede that. The question in the preamble was as to whether this was an incorrect reference.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORROW. And the House affirmed that there was no reference, and that is the whole of it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will my friend from California permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like him to explain what difference there is in the reference of this bill from that of all bills that come up in the House, or that come to this House from the Senate and are referred to appropriate committees almost every day. If you will refer to your RECORD you will find every day that messages and bills are referred under clause 2 of Rule XXIV.

Mr. MORROW. I do not know that the point has been made in any case except in the case of the bill for the purchase of a site and the erection of a post-office in the city of Washington, alluded to by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the gentlemen will turn to his RECORD—

Mr. MORROW. The point of order was not raised in any of these cases that I know of, or that my attention has been called to, except the single instance I have spoken of.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to have the gentleman explain why this is an improper reference in view of the references to which I have referred.

Mr. MORROW. I am not discussing that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. BREWER. In connection with this first bill that the gentleman from California has been alluding to, did you not vote that it was not incorrectly referred at the very first time?

Mr. MORROW. I voted that it was not referred.

Mr. BREWER. You voted that it was not incorrectly referred. It stands that way on the record.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen must cease conversation.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, when this question first came up, the Journal of this House showed that the Speaker had referred this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. A resolution was offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to strike out of the Journal the words showing the making of such reference. That resolution was adopted by this House. A motion was made to reconsider the vote by which that resolution was adopted, and also a motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. While the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider was being voted upon, the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures happened to go to the Speaker's desk, and received there a bill, which appeared to me to be a bill with an amendment from the Senate. The clerk of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures happened to follow the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and the chairman of the committee, standing upon the step, turned and handed the bill to the clerk of the committee, who stuck it under his arm. I turned to him and said, "You have the silver bill?" and he made no reply.

This, I say, was after the resolution had been adopted striking from the Journal the words which showed that the bill had been referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is not for me to say positively that that was the silver bill, but I believe it was almost as firmly as I believe in my own existence. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Now, why that was done at that particular time and under those particular circumstances is something that can be explained by some one who understands the matter better than I do. Whether the Speaker—

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. I can not yield now.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. Not until I get through.

Mr. CANNON. I just wanted to know if the clerk walked fast. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] requests that he shall not be interrupted, and the Chair is quite sure that gentlemen on the other side will not interrupt him.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. When the clerk of the committee was asked whether that was the silver bill, he made no reply. Now, Mr. Speaker, at whose suggestion or just how the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures happened to go for that bill at that particular time, after the resolution had been adopted by this House declaring in substance that the bill had not been referred, and why it was taken off at that particular time I can not understand, unless it was for the purpose of basing an argument here upon the fact that the bill itself was physically in the possession of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

I refer to this matter for the reason that I believe it is right that the House should know it, and if it was done in good faith it can be properly explained, as it ought to be, for other members, perhaps, saw it as well as myself. The transaction, I say, calls for an explanation, for without an explanation it might lead members of this House to suppose that there was some kind of conspiracy or trick to get this bill away from the House and defeat the will of the majority of the House upon this question. I shall not undertake to say what the motives were, or anything of that kind, but will leave that for the explanation that may come from the other side.

Coming now to the question before the House, the inquiry is where is this bill? How are you going to find out where it is? That is the question.

A MEMBER. Tell us.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. I will tell you before I get through. [Laughter.] Where is the bill? What is the evidence of the action of this House? What does the Journal show? The Journal shows that that bill was brought in here from the Senate, and the Journal does not show, since the order was passed here, that that bill was referred to any committee. Where is your evidence?

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] says: "Suppose the Journal had been destroyed or burnt up?" Why, sir, in that case we might resort to the next best evidence; but as long as that Journal exists and is the Journal of this House, approved by this House, a Journal which, according to the vote of this House, should contain no entry showing any reference of this bill—as long as that Journal exists, it is the proper evidence and the controlling evidence upon this question. That Journal does not show that this bill has been referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. The distinguished chairman of that committee says that all the various offices and departments through which a bill goes when referred to a committee do show by their records that this reference has been made.

I do not care what those other offices and departments show. The question is, what is the order made here? That is what sends the bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures if it goes there. The question is, what is the order made here? And there is no order here. How does the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures get jurisdiction? Suppose that question should be raised, would you undertake to prove the bill had been referred to the committee by calling in the Speaker and putting him on the stand and having him sworn, or would you take as evidence the Journal of the House? You would take the Journal; and the Journal shows that that bill is still in this House, upon the Speaker's table, ready to be laid before the House for its consideration.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I want to make the explanation now which the gentleman refused to let me make when he asked for it.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Well, the reason he refused was that he never interrupts anybody himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. I desire to state to the House again that before 11 o'clock on yesterday this bill, with the proper indorsement on it, was brought to the room of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and was handed into the possession of the clerk of the committee and received for. During the discussion yesterday afternoon the Journal Clerk of the House came to me and said that he thought one or two words in the printed bill were incorrect, and desired to have the original bill so that he might compare the printed bill with the bill as it came from the Senate. I instructed my clerk to bring the bill into the House, which he did. The bill was not out of his sight at any time. After they got through with it at the desk the clerk of the committee asked me to get the bill for him in order that he might take it back to the room. I stepped up to the desk, took the bill and handed it to him, and he carried it back to the room, it having been in his sight the whole time.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was delivered to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced the approval of acts of the following titles:

- An act (H. R. 1832) granting a pension to Mary Ann Schirye;
- An act (H. R. 3511) granting a pension to James S. Ferrin;
- An act (H. R. 4134) granting a pension to Margaret Stewart;
- An act (H. R. 4247) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane Potts;
- An act (H. R. 4763) granting a pension to Annie E. Lambing;
- An act (H. R. 5205) granting a pension to Richard D. McKinney;
- An act (H. R. 5240) granting a pension to Alexander McCormick;
- An act (H. R. 5885) granting a pension to Daniel Sober;
- An act (H. R. 5452) granting a pension to Joseph K. Hamilton, dependent father of John E. Hamilton, late private Company D, One hundred and third Pennsylvania Volunteers;

THE SILVER BILL.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], which requests the Speaker to lay before the House the bill 5381 with the amendments of the Senate thereto. But before action can be had upon that resolution the point of order raised by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] must be decided.

Responding, in the beginning of my remarks, to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER], who says that this bill as early as 11 o'clock on yesterday was sent to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, of which he is chairman, and receipted for by him or by his clerk, I wish to say that under the Constitution of the United States, if we have proper respect for that instrument, that bill should not have been sent to that committee at that time. There was no warrant of authority to send it to that committee, and he had no right to receipt for it.

The Constitution of the United States provides, in section 5, Article I, that "each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings," and the Journal which contained the Speaker's order referring the bill in regard to "the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon" to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures had not been approved by the House at that time, and therefore it was not proper to send the bill then to that committee. The Journal containing the order referred to was not approved until to-day, and before it was approved the order of the Speaker referring the bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures was under a resolution adopted by this House ordered to be stricken out.

Mr. Speaker, if each House is required by the Constitution to keep a journal of its proceedings, it is clear that until the Journal was approved by the House the Clerk of this House had no right, and no person had authority to take House bill 5381 from the Speaker's table to the committee-room or elsewhere, and the gentleman from Iowa had no right to receipt for it, and if he did receipt for it, his action was absolutely void.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the bill with its amendments came over from the Senate. When the bill came here it was laid upon the Speaker's table. It would have been there now, and there would have been no contest about it, if the Speaker had not undertaken to send it to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. I hold, with all due respect to the Speaker, that his act in sending that bill to that committee, or attempting to send it, was an illegal act; it was not an erroneous act and not voidable, but it was illegal and absolutely void. The Speaker may have thought that he had that power, but the Speaker, as well as judges of our courts, is sometimes mistaken. Yesterday when the House adopted the resolution of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] it adopted a resolution that was conclusive that the House denied the right of the Speaker to send that bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

It matters not if the bill has been taken away by mistake; it matters not where it is now. According to the rules of the House and according to the rights of this House under the Constitution it belongs upon the Speaker's table, and I believe the Speaker of the House in the discharge of his duty will see that it is properly disposed of as if lying on the table. Reference has been made to the action of the House yesterday. Let us see exactly what was done. The RECORD shows that the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the Journal of yesterday, Wednesday, June 18, be corrected by striking therefrom this entry, to wit:

"Under clause 3 of Rule XXIV, a House bill of the following title, with Senate amendments, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows: 'A bill (H. R. 5381) directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.'"

That resolution having been adopted, the entry made in the Journal is void—not voidable, not erroneous, but void—and this case does not turn, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] intimates, upon the preamble. It does not hinge upon the preamble which was not adopted, but upon the resolution which was adopted. It has been repeatedly held by the courts that where a conflict existed between a preamble and a resolution or bill and the resolution or bill should be paramount, I believe, the resolution should be paramount to the preamble. The resolution is the gist of the business that was transacted, and must be regarded as what was desired to be done by the House. The House adopted the resolution, not the preamble. Now, if the resolution controls, Mr. Speaker, it leaves the bill upon your table. Then, if the bill is on the table, I hold that, under Rule XXIV, it is the duty of the Speaker to lay it before the House. Why? Rule XXIV defines the authority of the Speaker in connection with the order of business of the House—

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Kentucky believes it to be the duty of the Speaker to lay the bill before the House, how is the resolution in order which requires it to be presented for consideration? Should it not be taken up under the regular order of business under the rules?

Mr. MCCREARY. I will endeavor, Mr. Speaker, to answer that question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair quite agrees with the gentleman that if the bill is on the table it would come up in the regular order of business.

Mr. MCCREARY. Does the Chair state that the bill is on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair makes no statement in regard to the matter, but has listened to the gentleman and to other gentlemen who have spoken upon the matter for the purpose of determining what was to be done in regard to the question.

Mr. MCCREARY. I have asserted, Mr. Speaker, and I again assert, that the bill and amendments came from the Senate to the House and were laid on the Speaker's table, and that you had no authority to refer the bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures; and if that authority did not exist, the bill must be on the Speaker's table still.

The SPEAKER. Then, if so, it would come up in the regular way; would it not?

Mr. MCCREARY. I hold that this bill (No. 5381) is now on the Speaker's table by right, and I believe that under the rules of the House it is the duty of the Speaker to lay it before the House.

The SPEAKER. In its order.

Mr. MCCREARY. To support my position I refer to Rule XXIV, which declares that the daily order of business in the House shall be as follows: First, prayer by the Chaplain; second, reading and approval of the Journal; third, correction of reference of public bills; fourth, the disposition of business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. That business to be taken up in its regular order.

Mr. MCCREARY. The rule does not say in what order the business shall be taken up. The second clause of the rule provides that—

Reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by members; but House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole, may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported by a committee of the House, and not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole, may also be disposed of in the same manner on motion directed to be made by such committee.

Bill No. 5381 is not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole. There is a provision in the bill which requires an appropriation of money, but the amount appropriated was not increased by the Senate after the bill passed the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to have the judgment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] upon the question of order. Supposing that the question as to where the bill is is disposed of, and if it be found to be upon the Speaker's table, does it not then come up in regular order?

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] will allow me—

The SPEAKER. I should like to have the opinion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] upon that point.

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] will allow me, I will give him the information that I demanded the regular order when I introduced the resolution. I read what the regular order was, and when in the regular order the resolution is reached I desire to have it voted on. I demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. But the resolution was presented for immediate action, was it not?

Mr. BLAND. I read the rule, to show what the regular order was, and I demanded the regular order, and I sent that resolution to be voted upon in its regular order; that is, that the Speaker proceed to the business on the Speaker's table in the regular order, and when Senate bills were reached in their regular order, that that bill be taken up. That was the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand the motion at the time.

Mr. BLAND. If the Speaker please, I have read the rule in the hearing of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Precisely.

Mr. BLAND. And I stated that I demanded the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. And sent up this resolution as the regular order.

Mr. BLAND. Certainly, as a part of the regular order.

The SPEAKER. That is that whenever this bill came up in its order, if it is on the Speaker's table, it should be considered.

Mr. BLAND. It being on the Speaker's table, I demanded the regular order of business, which is, under this rule, to lay before the House whatever is on the Speaker's table, and whenever that resolution is reached I demand that it be voted upon.

The SPEAKER. It will be impossible for this resolution to go to the Speaker's table.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a single statement in regard to the question asked me. Rule XXIV, to which I have referred, does not prescribe the manner in which you shall lay the bills on the Speaker's table before the House. It does not give precedence to any bill, and therefore I hold that the silver bill with the Senate amendments may be laid before the House by the Speaker, or, in accordance with the resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], the House has the right under the rule to call it up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that that was not the practice under a former rule of similar wording, in that regard, and the Chair desires to say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY], with regard to one suggestion which he made, namely, that it was not the duty of the Clerk to send this resolution to the committee at the time of its reference, but that the Clerk should have waited until the approval of the Journal by the House, the Chair is informed it has always been the custom for the Clerk to send a bill at once upon action by the House, even before the Journal has been approved.

Mr. McCREARY. But, Mr. Speaker, it matters not what the Clerk may have done heretofore. Under the Constitution of the United States, which requires the House to keep a journal of its proceedings, I hold that the Clerk has no right to send bills to the committee until the Journal is approved.

The SPEAKER. Bills have often been passed, have gone to the Committee on Enrolled Bills, and have been signed and have become a part of the archives before the Journal was approved.

Mr. McCREARY. Responding to the suggestion of the honorable Speaker with regard to precedents, I have this to say: As the Speaker has made his own precedents upon several previous occasions, I think he might make now a precedent that would be in accordance with the Constitution and in accordance with the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. But if it be objectionable to violate a precedent it must be praiseworthy to follow it.

Mr. MORROW addressed the Chair.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a ruling upon the point of order that was made to the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that resolution is in order now.

Mr. McMILLIN addressed the Chair.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to have an appeal when the decision is made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee desires to address the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I should not trespass upon the time of the House but for an utterance that fell from the lips of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER], chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. If I understand him, he conceives that his committee now has charge of the silver bill, or the bill at present under consideration, and may proceed to act thereon. Against that idea I desire to enter my protest. That alone do I wish to discuss. I will not take the time of the House to recite the transactions in detail that have occurred here for the last two days, further than to say that the Speaker, following what he conceived to be his duty, referred this bill under the second section of the twenty-fourth rule to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The rule has this exception to the bills that must be referred by the Speaker:

But House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole, may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported, etc.

The Speaker construed that exception not to embrace the bill now under consideration, and referred it; but the House, when it came to ratify the entry made in the Journal in pursuance of the Speaker's action, held that the bill did come within the exception, and was to be laid before and referred or acted on by the House, which is the thing to be done when that class of business is reached.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee, that at least one gentleman in the observations he has made based his action upon the idea that such a bill as this should be presented to the House for the purpose of discovering in the presence of the House whether it was subject to the point of order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the correct interpretation of what has occurred is, that the House differed from the Speaker as to the construction of that rule—that the House did not conceive this to be a bill which required its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole, and hence held that it was not the duty of the Speaker to refer it under the rule.

Now, it was very fully discussed yesterday. It was very deliberately considered. It was as dispassionately considered as any measure has ever been that involved such great interest, and on which so much of feeling exists as on this bill. The House did not simply take one vote; but over, and over, and over again, in different forms, and in different hours, and then to-day as yesterday (on different days), it has placed that construction upon this rule; and when the House of Representatives speaks every member of the House must obey. And this is what I want to impress on the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER].

So far as his claim is concerned, that it is in the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and may be acted on by that committee, it is my deliberate opinion, and upon that I would act if I were in his place, that he would have as much right to take charge of a bill which he seized from that table and take it into his room, call his committee together, and consider it as he has to take charge and act upon this bill, which the House has said was not referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. That is what I conceive to be the status.

Now, I am not proposing to question the motives of the gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, in his declaration of their rights over the bill; but I am proposing to stand by the rights of this House. There may have been doubts yesterday, there may have been doubts to-day as to what was the correct thing to do. This was a new rule. It had never been construed by the House. There were doubts on the part of members on both sides of this House as to the proper construction; but a construction has been given, and but one thing can characterize that construction, and that is, action under it and obedience to it.

Now, much has been said by the gentleman from Ohio as to the fact that the resolution adopted yesterday did not negative the action of the Speaker; and he argues that it does not, because the preamble to the resolution was stricken out.

But the preamble to the resolution, Mr. Speaker, was merely a recitation of the facts which called for action; the action was the same whether the preamble was there or not. So thoroughly was that felt to be so, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] himself, after the resolution had been adopted, got up and proposed to withdraw the preamble; but gentlemen on the other side objected to the withdrawal, and in that way—they laying no stress upon it—they got the votes of the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] and others who had voted against ratifying the action of the Speaker in referring this bill.

Mr. OATES. I would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee the fact that wherever a law has come before the courts of last resort for construction it has uniformly been held that the preamble is no part of the act.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is true. It is no part of it. The Journal recited that the Speaker had referred this bill under the second section of Rule XXIV. The House struck it out of the Journal, holding that there had been no reference of the bill; and hence, whether the preamble was adopted or not, the effect of the resolution is the same. It could have no significance whatever. No importance was attached to it. There was not a man on this side of the House who was not willing to have it withdrawn; and if it had been known or thought that gentlemen were going to make the use of it which has been made to-day, I believe it could not have been rejected.

I do not wish to detain the House with any further suggestions.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to modify the resolution in the manner that I stated in the beginning with reference to this rule. I demanded the regular order, and do now in the manner indicated in that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the modification proposed by the gentleman from Missouri.

THE SILVER BILL.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], which requests the Speaker to lay before the House the bill 5381 with the amendments of the Senate thereto. But before action can be had upon that resolution the point of order raised by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] must be decided.

Responding, in the beginning of my remarks, to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER], who says that this bill as early as 11 o'clock on yesterday was sent to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, of which he is chairman, and receipted for by him or by his clerk, I wish to say that under the Constitution of the United States, if we have proper respect for that instrument, that bill should not have been sent to that committee at that time. There was no warrant of authority to send it to that committee, and he had no right to receipt for it.

The Constitution of the United States provides, in section 5, Article I, that "each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings," and the Journal which contained the Speaker's order referring the bill in regard to "the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon" to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures had not been approved by the House at that time, and therefore it was not proper to send the bill then to that committee. The Journal containing the order referred to was not approved until to-day, and before it was approved the order of the Speaker referring the bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures was under a resolution adopted by this House ordered to be stricken out.

Mr. Speaker, if each House is required by the Constitution to keep a journal of its proceedings, it is clear that until the Journal was approved by the House the Clerk of this House had no right, and no person had authority to take House bill 5381 from the Speaker's table to the committee-room or elsewhere, and the gentleman from Iowa had no right to receipt for it, and if he did receipt for it, his action was absolutely void.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the bill with its amendments came over from the Senate. When the bill came here it was laid upon the Speaker's table. It would have been there now, and there would have been no contest about it, if the Speaker had not undertaken to send it to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. I hold, with all due respect to the Speaker, that his act in sending that bill to that committee, or attempting to send it, was an illegal act; it was not an erroneous act and not voidable, but it was illegal and absolutely void. The Speaker may have thought that he had that power, but the Speaker, as well as judges of our courts, is sometimes mistaken. Yesterday when the House adopted the resolution of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] it adopted a resolution that was conclusive that the House denied the right of the Speaker to send that bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

It matters not if the bill has been taken away by mistake; it matters not where it is now. According to the rules of the House and according to the rights of this House under the Constitution it belongs upon the Speaker's table, and I believe the Speaker of the House in the discharge of his duty will see that it is properly disposed of as if lying on the table. Reference has been made to the action of the House yesterday. Let us see exactly what was done. The RECORD shows that the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the Journal of yesterday, Wednesday, June 18, be corrected by striking therefrom this entry, to wit:

"Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a House bill of the following title, with Senate amendments, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:
 "A bill (H. R. 5381) directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures."

That resolution having been adopted, the entry made in the Journal is void—not voidable, not erroneous, but void—and this case does not turn, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] intimates, upon the preamble. It does not hinge upon the preamble which was not adopted, but upon the resolution which was adopted. It has been repeatedly held by the courts that where a conflict existed between a preamble and a resolution or bill and the resolution or bill should be paramount, I believe, the resolution should be paramount to the preamble. The resolution is the gist of the business that was transacted, and must be regarded as what was desired to be done by the House. The House adopted the resolution, not the preamble. Now, if the resolution controls, Mr. Speaker, it leaves the bill upon your table. Then, if the bill is on the table, I hold that, under Rule XXIV, it is the duty of the Speaker to lay it before the House. Why? Rule XXIV defines the authority of the Speaker in connection with the order of business of the House—

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Kentucky believes it to be the duty of the Speaker to lay the bill before the House, how is the resolution in order which requires it to be presented for consideration? Should it not be taken up under the regular order of business under the rules?

Mr. McCREARY. I will endeavor, Mr. Speaker, to answer that question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair quite agrees with the gentleman that if the bill is on the table it would come up in the regular order of business.

Mr. McCREARY. Does the Chair state that the bill is on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair makes no statement in regard to the matter, but has listened to the gentleman and to other gentlemen who have spoken upon the matter for the purpose of determining what was to be done in regard to the question.

Mr. McCREARY. I have asserted, Mr. Speaker, and I again assert, that the bill and amendments came from the Senate to the House and were laid on the Speaker's table, and that you had no authority to refer the bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures; and if that authority did not exist, the bill must be on the Speaker's table still.

The SPEAKER. Then, if so, it would come up in the regular way; would it not?

Mr. McCREARY. I hold that this bill (No. 5381) is now on the Speaker's table by right, and I believe that under the rules of the House it is the duty of the Speaker to lay it before the House.

The SPEAKER. In its order.

Mr. McCREARY. To support my position I refer to Rule XXIV, which declares that the daily order of business in the House shall be as follows: First, prayer by the Chaplain; second, reading and approval of the Journal; third, correction of reference of public bills; fourth, the disposition of business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. That business to be taken up in its regular order.

Mr. McCREARY. The rule does not say in what order the business shall be taken up. The second clause of the rule provides that—

Reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by members; but House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole, may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported by a committee of the House, and not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole, may also be disposed of in the same manner on motion directed to be made by such committee.

Bill No. 5381 is not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole. There is a provision in the bill which requires an appropriation of money, but the amount appropriated was not increased by the Senate after the bill passed the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to have the judgment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] upon the question of order. Supposing that the question as to where the bill is is disposed of, and if it be found to be upon the Speaker's table, does it not then come up in regular order?

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] will allow me—

The SPEAKER. I should like to have the opinion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] upon that point.

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] will allow me, I will give him the information that I demanded the regular order when I introduced the resolution. I read what the regular order was, and when in the regular order the resolution is reached I desire to have it voted on. I demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. But the resolution was presented for immediate action, was it not?

Mr. BLAND. I read the rule, to show what the regular order was, and I demanded the regular order, and I sent that resolution to be voted upon in its regular order; that is, that the Speaker proceed to the business on the Speaker's table in the regular order, and when Senate bills were reached in their regular order, that that bill be taken up. That was the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand the motion at the time.

Mr. BLAND. If the Speaker please, I have read the rule in the hearing of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Precisely.

Mr. BLAND. And I stated that I demanded the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. And sent up this resolution as the regular order.

Mr. BLAND. Certainly, as a part of the regular order.

The SPEAKER. That is that whenever this bill came up in its order, if it is on the Speaker's table, it should be considered.

Mr. BLAND. It being on the Speaker's table, I demanded the regular order of business, which is, under this rule, to lay before the House whatever is on the Speaker's table, and whenever that resolution is reached I demand that it be voted upon.

The SPEAKER. It will be impossible for this resolution to go to the Speaker's table.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a single statement in regard to the question asked me. Rule XXIV, to which I have referred, does not prescribe the manner in which you shall lay the bills on the Speaker's table before the House. It does not give precedence to any bill, and therefore I hold that the silver bill with the Senate amendments may be laid before the House by the Speaker, or, in accordance with the resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], the House has the right under the rule to call it up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that that was not the practice under a former rule of similar wording, in that regard, and the Chair desires to say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY], with regard to one suggestion which he made, namely, that it was not the duty of the Clerk to send this resolution to the committee at the time of its reference, but that the Clerk should have waited until the approval of the Journal by the House, the Chair is informed it has always been the custom for the Clerk to send a bill at once upon action by the House, even before the Journal has been approved.

Mr. McCREARY. But, Mr. Speaker, it matters not what the Clerk may have done heretofore. Under the Constitution of the United States, which requires the House to keep a journal of its proceedings, I hold that the Clerk has no right to send bills to the committee until the Journal is approved.

The SPEAKER. Bills have often been passed, have gone to the Committee on Enrolled Bills, and have been signed and have become a part of the archives before the Journal was approved.

Mr. McCREARY. Responding to the suggestion of the honorable Speaker with regard to precedents, I have this to say: As the Speaker has made his own precedents upon several previous occasions, I think he might make now a precedent that would be in accordance with the Constitution and in accordance with the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. But if it be objectionable to violate a precedent it must be praiseworthy to follow it.

Mr. MORROW addressed the Chair.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a ruling upon the point of order that was made to the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that resolution is in order now.

Mr. McMILLIN addressed the Chair.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to have an appeal when the decision is made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee desires to address the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I should not trespass upon the time of the House but for an utterance that fell from the lips of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER], chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. If I understand him, he conceives that his committee now has charge of the silver bill, or the bill at present under consideration, and may proceed to act thereon. Against that idea I desire to enter my protest. That alone do I wish to discuss. I will not take the time of the House to recite the transactions in detail that have occurred here for the last two days, further than to say that the Speaker, following what he conceived to be his duty, referred this bill under the second section of the twenty-fourth rule to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The rule has this exception to the bills that must be referred by the Speaker:

But House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole, may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported, etc.

The Speaker construed that exception not to embrace the bill now under consideration, and referred it; but the House, when it came to ratify the entry made in the Journal in pursuance of the Speaker's action, held that the bill did come within the exception, and was to be laid before and referred or acted on by the House, which is the thing to be done when that class of business is reached.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee, that at least one gentleman in the observations he has made based his action upon the idea that such a bill as this should be presented to the House for the purpose of discovering in the presence of the House whether it was subject to the point of order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the correct interpretation of what has occurred is, that the House differed from the Speaker as to the construction of that rule—that the House did not conceive this to be a bill which required its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole, and hence held that it was not the duty of the Speaker to refer it under the rule.

Now, it was very fully discussed yesterday. It was very deliberately considered. It was as dispassionately considered as any measure has ever been that involved such great interest, and on which so much of feeling exists as on this bill. The House did not simply take one vote; but over, and over, and over again, in different forms, and in different hours, and then to-day as yesterday (on different days), it has placed that construction upon this rule; and when the House of Representatives speaks every member of the House must obey. And this is what I want to impress on the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER].

So far as his claim is concerned, that it is in the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and may be acted on by that committee, it is my deliberate opinion, and upon that I would act if I were in his place, that he would have as much right to take charge of a bill which he seized from that table and take it into his room, call his committee together, and consider it as he has to take charge and act upon this bill, which the House has said was not referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. That is what I conceive to be the status.

Now, I am not proposing to question the motives of the gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, in his declaration of their rights over the bill; but I am proposing to stand by the rights of this House. There may have been doubts yesterday, there may have been doubts to-day as to what was the correct thing to do. This was a new rule. It had never been construed by the House. There were doubts on the part of members on both sides of this House as to the proper construction; but a construction has been given, and but one thing can characterize that construction, and that is, action under it and obedience to it.

Now, much has been said by the gentleman from Ohio as to the fact that the resolution adopted yesterday did not negative the action of the Speaker; and he argues that it does not, because the preamble to the resolution was stricken out.

But the preamble to the resolution, Mr. Speaker, was merely a recitation of the facts which called for action; the action was the same whether the preamble was there or not. So thoroughly was that felt to be so, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] himself, after the resolution had been adopted, got up and proposed to withdraw the preamble; but gentlemen on the other side objected to the withdrawal, and in that way—they laying no stress upon it—they got the votes of the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] and others who had voted against ratifying the action of the Speaker in referring this bill.

Mr. OATES. I would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee the fact that wherever a law has come before the courts of last resort for construction it has uniformly been held that the preamble is no part of the act.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is true. It is no part of it. The Journal recited that the Speaker had referred this bill under the second section of Rule XXIV. The House struck it out of the Journal, holding that there had been no reference of the bill; and hence, whether the preamble was adopted or not, the effect of the resolution is the same. It could have no significance whatever. No importance was attached to it. There was not a man on this side of the House who was not willing to have it withdrawn; and if it had been known or thought that gentlemen were going to make the use of it which has been made to-day, I believe it could not have been rejected.

I do not wish to detain the House with any further suggestions.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to modify the resolution in the manner that I stated in the beginning with reference to this rule. I demanded the regular order, and do now in the manner indicated in that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the modification proposed by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Speaker proceed under Rule XXIV to lay matters on the Speaker's table under said rule, and House bill 5381, directing the purchase of silver bullion and issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, be laid before the House for its action.

Mr. MCKINLEY. On that I make the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a single word. The point of order that the gentleman from Ohio has made I am satisfied is well taken, for the reason that we have not yet reached the second order of business under Rule XXIV. I suppose if private-bill day is successfully antagonized we can reach this order before a great while, and when the order of business is reached, and when the messages from the President, of which I believe several were presented yesterday and to-day, are first laid before the House, then whatever else may be upon the Speaker's table will be in order to be laid by the Speaker before the House on his resolution, and then when laid before the House under the rules it will be competent for action to be had.

So that the resolution is not in order at this time, or at any other time for that matter, because from step to step as these different orders are reached it is in order to consider matters under the different clauses. Now, having said that much, it seems to me that I have covered the whole situation. In due and proper time, when the matter is presented for action, I may or may not be called upon to answer the observations that have fallen from the lips of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN]. It is not necessary to do so now. I am perfectly willing to proceed with the public business in order.

Mr. BLAND. On that question, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The Chair perhaps can simplify the matter by a suggestion to the gentleman from Missouri. The Chair understands the wish of the gentleman to be simply to get at this matter when it would naturally come up, supposing it was on the Speaker's table, without having that question passed upon at present.

Mr. BLAND. No; that is the very question that I want passed upon.

The SPEAKER. Precisely; but that question must be passed upon in its regular order, like every other question, and what the Chair purposed to do with regard to the matter was this: When that bill, or its hiatus—whatever there may be there [laughter]—was reached, to bring the matter to the attention of the House, and then the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] can offer his resolution if he deems it necessary. But there is one difficulty which the gentleman does not seem to consider, and that is that this is private-bill day and that the business now in order is private bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call the attention of the Chair on that point to the sixth clause of Rule XXIV, which provides that "Friday of each week, after the unfinished business has been disposed of," is set apart for business on the Private Calendar, and the unfinished business has not been taken up. Now, private business is not to be taken up until after the business on the Speaker's table is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. "Unfinished business" is the third order of business. The first order of business, the Chair supposes, would be private bills on the Speaker's table.

Mr. SPRINGER. But clause 3 of this rule provides that "the consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may be engaged at an adjournment, except business in the morning hour, shall be resumed as soon as the business on the Speaker's table is finished, and at the same time each day thereafter until disposed of." So that the unfinished business is not in order until after the business on the Speaker's table is finished, so it is not in order now.

The SPEAKER. But the rule is that Friday in each week shall be set apart for private business.

Mr. SPRINGER. After the unfinished business is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Not at all. After the unfinished business is disposed of the House can go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, that is the only way we can consider private business. That is the place where the private business is.

Mr. BLAND. If I properly understand the position of the Speaker, we may come to some agreement about this matter. I suppose that in the morning the Speaker will proceed, under this rule, to lay matters on the Speaker's table before the House, and that this bill will be reached, and that the resolution can then be offered and voted upon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not decide that.

Mr. BLAND. In what manner, then, can that question come up?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that whatever matter would be in order at that time can then be entertained. There is no difficulty, the Chair thinks, in making the matter very clear to the gentleman from Missouri. The gentleman proposes a certain resolution, but he does not propose to have it acted upon until the proper time. Of course he can not propose that resolution until the proper time in any parliamentary assembly, and when the proper time comes for action upon the subject, if he deems it necessary he can take that action, and of course no effort will be made to prevent the gentleman from taking that action.

Mr. BLAND. What I wanted to understand from the Chair was whether—

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the regular order is the following bill—

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND. I have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. No one has the floor when the regular order is demanded.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I raise a question of order. That resolution which I offered has been pending here for over an hour, and has been under consideration. The Chair held that the resolution was not in order, and I immediately said that I desired to appeal from that decision.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made no decision whatever with regard to it.

Mr. BLAND. I did not understand the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made no decision with regard to it, whatever.

Mr. BLAND. But we were proceeding to consider it, and while it is under consideration nothing else can be entered upon.

Mr. McCOMAS. I call for the regular order, which is the omnibus bill containing the war claims reported from the Court of Claims.

Mr. BLAND. The regular order is the matter we have been proceeding with. There has been no objection made to it.

Mr. McCOMAS. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. There is not the slightest occasion for confusion about this matter. The Chair will endeavor to arrange it if gentleman will not make it a matter of feeling.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair please state to the House, for its information, when it will be in order to lay this before the House?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order, the Chair will state, whenever the bill would have been in order, provided the views which gentlemen on the other side entertained on that subject were correct, upon which the Chair does not now express an opinion, because the Chair does not think now is the proper time. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair is very lucid, indeed. I compliment him on the adroitness of his language.

The SPEAKER. There need not be any misunderstanding whatever about this thing. The Chair desires to accommodate itself to the wishes of the House, and does not purpose to avoid by any technicality the wishes of the House. That ought to go without saying.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have not questioned the Chair's good faith, but I simply desired the Chair to state to those who are not so well versed in parliamentary law as the Chair is, the particular time when we can have this matter before the House for consideration.

Mr. McCOMAS. The gentleman has so many desires. Now, I desire simply the regular order. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Under the rules of the House when will it be in order?

Mr. BLAND. I trust the Chair will allow every member of this House who desires information to know when this question may come up.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have been trying to get that information.

Mr. BLAND. I want to know when is the proper time if it is not now.

Mr. STRUBLE. Let them be here every day and they will find out.

Mr. BLAND. Will this not come up to-morrow morning immediately after the reading of the Journal? Will it not then be in order under the rules to proceed to business on the Speaker's table?

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that when the regular order is demanded no procedure of this character can be had. I have insisted on the regular order, I now demand it again.

Mr. BLAND. Well, this has been going on for over an hour on the resolution presented by myself, and you can not cut it off.

Mr. McCOMAS. Well, I insist upon the regular order.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, allow me a moment. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] offered a resolution this morning upon which the gentleman from Iowa made the point of order. As I understand it, that is the regular order of business before the House, and I desire to ask the Speaker if it is not in order at this time to decide the point of order made on the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri—the second resolution—on which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] made the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a question of order, or rather a question of information.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONGER. I want to inquire if this is not the situation—

[Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. McCREARY. I have submitted a parliamentary question—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will request the House to be in order. The Chair will endeavor to answer all questions. It seems really necessary that the Chair should hear the observations of gentlemen in order to pass upon them.

Mr. McCOMAS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. There is a parliamentary inquiry now pending. There can not be two at the same instant of time.

Mr. McCOMAS. Then I will make mine later.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must request gentlemen to be in order. Will gentlemen please take their seats? The Chair will suspend all public business until the House is in order.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I made a parliamentary inquiry to ascertain what was before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa was recognized for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CONGER. My inquiry is this, if this is not the proper parliamentary status of the question: The gentleman from Missouri offered a resolution, a point of order was made upon it, after which the gentleman withdrew his resolution which was being considered, and offered another; and immediately, before any discussion was entered upon, the gentleman from Ohio made a point of order upon it.

Mr. BLAND. Another point of order was made.

The SPEAKER. The original resolution was withdrawn, and the other resolution has been offered by the gentleman from Missouri, and it is for the Chair first, and then the House, to pass upon it.

Mr. McCOMAS. Fridays are devoted, by the rules, to private bills. I make a parliamentary inquiry now whether or not the bill known as the "Omnibus bill," the Court of Claims bill, is not the unfinished business, and now in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that that bill is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCOMAS. Then, Mr. Speaker, if it be in order, I will move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER. That is not yet in order.

The Chair will state that this matter is entirely within the control of the House under the rules of the House.

Mr. BLAND. Then, Mr. Speaker, I resume the floor. I was on the floor and the gentleman from Illinois made a point of order against the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Precisely; and the gentleman from Missouri will be heard on the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. I was on the floor addressing myself to the point of order when the Chair made the suggestion.

Now, I want simply to state that the gentleman from Illinois raised the question of order against this resolution and said that it was out of order because it directed, or gave as a direction, what the House itself by its rules has done; that is to say, for the Speaker to proceed under the regular order, under Rule XXIV, to lay the business on the Speaker's table under the rule before the House. The gentleman now states that that can be accomplished without any resolution by calling for the regular order.

That, Mr. Speaker, is very true, with this important exception: The resolution directs among other things that this matter in controversy is one of the things on the Speaker's table to lay before the House. So that it covers that point, a point that is in controversy between the gentleman and myself, and between those who hold to the opinion in regard to this bill which I do, and those who hold to the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois. Thus, the passage of this resolution would settle that question, whether the House will determine that the bill shall be placed before the House. And the mere calling for the regular order would not necessarily settle that point at all; for it is clear from the statement of the Speaker that the bill would not come up in regular order if it is not on the Speaker's table. This resolution declares where the bill is, and settles that question beyond controversy.

This resolution directs that the bill shall be laid before the House. And that is the only way we can reach this question and settle it; and I want to say to my friends who favor silver: and especially free coinage, that when a mere technicality stands in the way, rules about which, so far as this House is concerned, there is great divergence of opinion, great doubt concerning them—I ask you now to resolve that doubt in favor of your convictions, and take this bill up and consider it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Now, Mr. Speaker, that is all I have to say about this matter. I ask the Chair to rule whether the resolution is in order or not.

Mr. CANNON. Rule XXVI provides that Friday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business.

A MEMBER. Is that done?

Mr. CANNON. "That Friday of every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business, unless otherwise determined by the House." The House has not otherwise determined this Friday. It might or might not, if it had a chance. Second, the regular order was called for, which would be to proceed with business on the Speaker's table, and Friday's business is to take from the Speaker's table the private bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. That never was the instruction. It never was done under that.

Mr. BLAND. That is an afterconsideration.

Mr. CANNON. It has happened before, and that is the rule; and private bills, House bills with Senate amendments that do not make appropriations, or Senate bills where there are similar House bills with favorable reports, may be taken from the Speaker's table and passed. Now, that being the order, and the House not having dispensed with the order, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], out of order, gets up and offers this resolution and hangs on to it, and when we point out the rule and call his attention to the fact that it is Friday he proceeds to orate about free coinage, and resolves that coinage is great, and that BLAND is the only creature on God Almighty's foot-stool that has charge of it. [Laughter.] Now, there is the whole situation.

Mr. BLAND. No, you seem to think that the only one who has charge of it is the Speaker. I want the House to take charge of it.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly the House will take charge of it, but I am curious to see how far the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and his colleague [Mr. BLOUNT] and how far other gentlemen upon that side that think they see Speakerships looming up will follow the eminent parliamentary example and leadership of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]. If it is the desire of the House to dispense with the order of Friday for private business, let us go to work and do it.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] allow me to tell him what I am trying to arrive at? I am trying to arrive at what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McKINLEY] has stated is the business of this session, which is to obtain practical results, and the practical result we are after is the free coinage of silver. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. That is an impracticable result. Mr. CANNON. And the gentleman, as some people think, with his eyes wide open and the rules of the House before him, fully discussed when they were adopted, as I had the honor to show yesterday by putting him in the RECORD upon the subject, under those circumstances proceeds in spite of the rules to nullify that rule which he criticised from an opposite standpoint when it was adopted.

Mr. CRISP. Do you not believe the doctrine of stare decisis covers it? Has not the Speaker the right to construe the rules, and have not I the right to follow his construction while he is there? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. And now I am curious to see how my friend with the judicial mind, who knows a great deal about parliamentary usage—

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And with the Presbyterian antecedents—

Mr. CANNON. I am curious to see now whether, without Friday's business being disposed of, he will follow the lead of the eminent gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The financier—

Mr. CANNON. And who, in spite of the rules, expects on an appeal from the decision of the Chair to sustain the eminent gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]. God knows how far my friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] would go. God does not know how far my colleague from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] would go. [Prolonged laughter.]

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I make the motion, under clause 6 of Rule XXIV, that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole, to consider the business on the Private Calendar. I make that motion in good faith and I hope it will be considered.

The SPEAKER. There is another proposition pending, which is the resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri. The Chair rules that that resolution is not in order under the rules of the House.

Mr. BLAND. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. McKINLEY. I move to lay that appeal on the table, and on that question I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUCKALEW. If it is in order I move that this House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McKINLEY. I understood the Speaker to decide that this resolution is not now in order.

The SPEAKER. That is the ruling, that the resolution is not in order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is it not necessary that the Speaker shall state the question? It has not yet been stated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that the gentleman from Missouri appealed, and thereupon the gentleman from Ohio moved to lay that appeal upon the table.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Without stating what the appeal was.

The SPEAKER. An appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The Chair has not stated what is the question decided by the Chair, from which the appeal was taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided that the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is not now in order, and from that decision the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] appeals.

Mr. FITCH. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be read to the House.

The resolution of Mr. BLAND was again read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that that resolution is not in order on account of its being a change of the rule on the question of the order of business. From that decision the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] appeals, and the gentleman from Ohio moves to lay the appeal on the table. On that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CRISP. Pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CANNON. Do not filibuster.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do not let that Cannon go off any more.

Mr. MCKINLEY. If the House adjourns now it means to do away with the Friday evening session.

A MEMBER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. No name had been called. The gentleman interrupted and another gentleman asked that the resolution be read.

Mr. CANNON. If the House adjourns it cuts off pension night.

Mr. CRISP. I move that the House do now adjourn, and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 13, nays 228, not voting 86; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

The following additional pairs were announced:

For the rest of the day:

Mr. FLICK with Mr. TURNER, of New York.

Mr. BOWDEN with Mr. LESTER, of Virginia.

Mr. MASON with Mr. HEARD.

Mr. DE LANO with Mr. LEE, from 4 p. m. to 5 p. m.

Mr. RAY with Mr. HOOKER, until further notice.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. COVERT, until Monday.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, with Mr. OATES, until Tuesday.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I have been paired with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] for the last month. This afternoon I received a telegram from him giving me permission to transfer the pair, and therefore I voted upon this proposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the vote be recapitulated, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk proceeded with the recapitulation.

Mr. McMILLIN (interrupting the reading). I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw my demand for the recapitulation.

Mr. MORROW. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is a message which the Chair desires to lay before the House. That is the reason why I withdraw the demand.

The SPEAKER. It does not matter. The Chair will venture to lay the message before the House.

The recapitulation of the vote was resumed and concluded.

Pending the announcement of the result,

RECIPROCITY TREATIES WITH THE LATIN-AMERICAN STATES.

The Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed:

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for your information, a letter from the Secretary of State, enclosing a report of the International American Conference, which recommends that reciprocal commercial treaties be entered into between the United States and the several other republics of this hemisphere.

It has been so often and so persistently stated that our tariff laws offered an insurmountable barrier to a large exchange of products with the Latin-American nations, that I deem it proper to call especial attention to the fact that more than 87 per cent. of the products of these nations sent to our ports are now admitted free. If sugar is placed upon the free-list, practically every important article exported from those states will be given untaxed access to our markets except wool. The real difficulty in the way of negotiating profitable reciprocity treaties is that we have given freely so much that would have had value in the mutual concessions which such treaties imply. I can not doubt, however, that the present advantages which the products of these near and friendly states enjoy in our markets, though they are not by law exclusive, will, with other considerations, favorably dispose them to adopt such measures, by treaty or otherwise, as will tend to equalize and greatly enlarge our mutual exchanges.

It will certainly be time enough for us to consider whether we must cheapen the cost of production by cheapening labor, in order to gain access to the South American markets, when we have fairly tried the effect of established and reliable steam communication and of convenient methods of money exchanges. There can be no doubt, I think, that with these facilities well established, and with a rebate of duties upon imported raw materials used in the manufacture of goods for export, our merchants will be able to compete in the ports of the Latin-American nations with those of any other country.

If, after the Congress shall have acted upon pending tariff legislation, it shall appear that under the general treaty-making power or under any special powers given by law, or trade with the states represented in the conference can be enlarged, upon a basis of mutual advantage, it will be promptly done.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 19, 1890.

MARICOPA COUNTY BONDS, ARIZONA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President:

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without my approval the bill (H. R. No. 3984) to authorize the board of supervisors of Maricopa County, Arizona, to issue certain bonds in aid of the construction of a certain railroad.

This bill proposes to confer authority upon the supervisors of the county of Maricopa to issue county bonds at the rate of $4,000 per mile, in aid of a railroad to be constructed from Phoenix northwardly to the county line, a distance estimated at 50 miles, but probably somewhat longer. The bill seems to have passed the House of Representatives under an entire misapprehension of its true scope and effect. In the brief report submitted by the Committee on Territories, it is said that "by the terms of the bill the county receives bonds in payment of the money proposed to be advanced," and in the course of the debate the Delegate from Arizona mistakenly stated in response to a request for information that the bill proposed a loan by the county, in exchange for which it was to receive the bonds of the railroad company. In fact, the bill does not provide for a loan to be secured by bonds, but for a subscription of stock. How far this mistake may have affected the passage of the bill can not, of course, be known.

The bill does not submit the question of granting this aid to a vote of the people of the county, but confers direct authority upon the supervisors to issue the bonds. It is said, however, that in April, 1889, an election was held to obtain the views of the people upon the question. It does not appear from any papers submitted to me who were the managers of this so-called election, what notice, if any, was given, what qualifications on the part of voters were insisted upon, if any, or in what form the question was presented. There was no law providing for such an election. Being wholly voluntary, the election was, of course, under the management of those who favored the subsidy, and was conducted without any legal restraints as to the voting or certification. I have asked for a statement of the vote by precincts, and have been given what purports to be the vote at twelve points. The total affirmative vote given was 1,975 and the negative 134. But of the affirmative vote 1,543 were given at Phoenix and 168 at Tempe, a town very near to Phoenix. If there were no other objections to this bill, I should deem this alone sufficient, that no provision is made for submitting to a vote of the people, at an election after due notice and under the sanction of law, the question whether this subscription shall be made.

But again the bill proposes to suspend for this case two provisions of the act of Congress of July 30, 1886: First, that provision which forbids municipal corporations from subscribing to the stock of other corporations or loaning their credit to such corporations; and second, that provision which forbids any municipal corporation from creating a debt in excess of 4 per cent. of its taxable property as fixed by the last assessment. The condition of things then existing in Arizona had not a little to do with the enactment by Congress of this law, intended to give to the people of the Territories that protection against oppressive municipal debts which was secured to the people of most of the States by constitutional limitations. The wisdom of this legislation is not contested by the friends of this bill, but they claim that the circumstances here are so peculiar as to justify this exception. I do not think so. In the States the limitation upon municipal indebtedness is usually placed in the constitution, in order that it may be inflexible. If a showing of need, gain, or advantage is to overcome the barrier, then it is scarcely worth while to declare a limitation. Only a belief that the limit is inflexible will promote care and economy in administration. If this bill becomes a law how can Congress refuse to any county in any of the Territories the right to subscribe to the stock of a railroad company—especially where the subscription would not exceed the debt limit—upon a showing of the advantages of better and cheaper communications?

Maricopa County is one of great extent. Its northern boundary is 95 miles long, its southern boundary 65, its eastern 45, and its western 102. This great area is to be taxed to construct a road which can in the nature of things be of advantage to but a fraction of it. There is no unity of interest or equality of advantage. It may very well be that a section of these lands along the line of the road, and especially town lots in Phoenix, would have an added value much greater than the increased burden imposed, but it is equally clear that much property in the county will receive no appreciable benefit.

The existing bonded indebtedness of Maricopa County is $272,000; the tax assessment of the county is about $5,000,000; and the population is, estimated by multiplying the vote cast in 1888 by six, about 12,000. It will be seen that the bonded debt—to say nothing of a floating debt, which is said to be small—is already largely in excess of the legal limit, and it is proposed to increase it by a subscription that will certainly involve $200,000, and possibly $250,000. If the bill becomes a law the bonded indebtedness will very closely approximate 10 per cent. of the assessed valuation of the property of the county.

The condition of things in the county of Yavapai, lying immediately north of Maricopa, and through which this road is also to run, though not directly affected by this legislation, is very instructive in this connection.

By an act of the Legislature of Arizona, passed the year before the act of Congress to which I have referred, Yavapai County was authorized to subscribe $4,000 per mile to this line of road. The total length of the road in the county was 147 miles, and 74 miles to Prescott have been constructed. The secretary of the Territory, in response to an inquiry, states the debt of Yavapai County at $563,000, and the assessment for taxation at "between six and seven millions." There are 73 miles of road yet to be built from the present terminus, Prescott, to the south line of the county, for which Yavapai County must make a further issue of bonds of $292,000, making a total county debt of $855,000, or above 13 per cent. upon the taxable assessment (taking that at $5,500,000), and a per capita county debt of nearly $85, taking the population at about 10,600, as stated in the report of the Senate committee. Surely no one will insist that the true and permanent prosperity of these communities will be promoted by loading their energies and their industries with these great debts.

I feel the force of the suggestion that the freight charges now imposed upon the farm and orchard products of Maricopa County by the railroads now in operation are oppressive. But this bill does not afford much relief even in that direction. There would be but one competing point, namely, Phoenix. At all other points on the proposed road the people would be subject to the exaction of just such rates as are demanded by the other lines. If this bill contained some effective provision to secure reasonable freight rates to the people who are to be taxed to build the road it would go far to secure my favorable consideration for it.

I have carefully examined the reports of the committees and every argument that has been submitted to me by the friends of the bill, but I can not bring myself to believe that the permanent welfare of the communities affected by it will be promoted by its passage.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 20, 1890.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and accompanying bill be referred to the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. PAYSON. A parliamentary inquiry. Will this bill, if thus referred, retain its privileged character?

The SPEAKER. Without question. Without objection the message and bill will be referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, until Tuesday, the 24th instant, on account of important business.

To Mr. BARWIG, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. WATSON, for five days.

To Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania, on account of important business.

To Mr. PRICE, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. McDUFFIE, for ten days from the 18th instant, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. CANDLER, of Georgia, for five days.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent that the titles be printed in the RECORD, and that the reading be omitted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

A bill (H. R. 401) to provide for the purchase of a site, and the erection of a public building thereon, at Alexandria, in the State of Louisiana.

A bill (S. 595) for the erection of a public building at Salina, Kans.

A bill (S. 2403) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Beaver Falls, in the State of Pennsylvania.

A bill (S. 3052) for the relief of the Michigan military academy.

A bill (S. 3571) to provide an American register for the barge Ottawa, of Philadelphia, Pa.

The SPEAKER. On the motion to adjourn the yeas are 13 and the nays 228, and accordingly the House refuses to adjourn; but under the rule of the House, the hour of 5 o'clock having passed, the House is declared in recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by Mr. PERKINS as Speaker pro tempore, who directed the reading of the following communication:

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 20, 1890.

I hereby appoint Mr. PERKINS, of Kansas, as Speaker pro tempore for this evening's session.

T. B. REED, Speaker.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the rule regulating Friday evening sessions.

The question was put: and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. ENLOE. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The question was put; and there were—ayes 24, no 1.

Mr. ENLOE. I make the point that no quorum is present and none voted.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WILSON, of Missouri. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will reconsider his action. If the House does adjourn and such adjournment is to be extended to the record of those who compose it, in matters of this kind, I want it to go upon record that it is done at the instance of the gentleman from Tennessee, and that he does it because he wishes to punish certain members of this House or all of us for some imaginary trouble of his own.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no power in the premises. The Chair would be very glad to permit members to do business, but without a constitutional quorum the gentleman has a right to make the point, and if he insists it will be the duty of the Chair to respect it. There are but two motions in order under these circumstances: one for a call of the House and the other to adjourn.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Is it not in order to move for a call of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has just stated that there are but two motions in order, a call of the House and a motion to adjourn, if the point of order is insisted upon.

Mr. ENLOE. I want to say in reply to the statement of the gentleman from Missouri—

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. A parliamentary inquiry. A motion to adjourn having been made, can a motion for a call of the House be made?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to adjourn is not debatable, but the Chair has allowed the matter to proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I understood that my colleague [Mr. O'DONNELL] had moved a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not considering that motion as having been made.

Mr. CHEADLE. Regular order.

Mr. MORRILL. I made the motion to adjourn; it is the only question before the House, and not debatable.

The question was put; and the Chair announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. SHIVELY. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 10.

So the motion to adjourn was agreed to; and accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

COMPENSATION OF UNITED STATES MARSHALS FOR SERVICES IN OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Letter from the Attorney-General, inclosing copy of a letter from W. P. Hackney, of Guthrie, Oklahoma Territory, and copies of various other letters and petitions; also certificates of United States Marshals Jones and Walker, of Kansas, to the services performed by their deputies as police officers for the people of the Territory, and asking that suitable remuneration be made them by Congress—to the Committee on Appropriations.

RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following resolution was introduced and referred as follows:

By Mr. SPINOLA:

Resolved, That when the House adjourns on July 3, it will be until Saturday, July 5, at 12 o'clock noon;
to the Committee on Rules.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk and disposed of as follows:

R. 878) to open and build a roadway to the Federal cemetery at Winchester, Va., and for other purposes, accompanied by a report (No. 2505)—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 933) to grant the right of way to the Tacoma and Olympic Railway and Navigation Company across certain military reservations, accompanied by a report (No. 2506)—to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, reported with amendment the joint resolution of the House (H. Res. 169) authorizing the use of a portion of United States military reservation at Chattanooga for a public park by the city of Chattanooga, Tenn., accompanied by a report (No. 2507)—to the House Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably the following bills of the House; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole House:

A bill (H. R. 2542) pensioning Joseph A. Blair. (Report No. 2508.)

A bill (H. R. 5265) granting a pension to Emma Chapman. (Report No. 2509.)

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills of the following titles were introduced, severally read twice, and referred as follows:

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A bill (H. R. 11061) to incorporate the District of Columbia Suburban Railway Company—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. FUNSTON (by request): A bill (H. R. 11071) to amend section 4714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the following changes of reference were made:

A bill (H. R. 1257) to remove the charge of desertion against Richard Weller, and authorize his honorable discharge—Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (H. R. 11053) for the relief of Dieterick Glander—Committee on Indian Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 10840) to provide an American register for the bark Campanero, of Baltimore, Md.—Committee on Commerce discharged, and referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 11063) granting a pension to J. G. Flournoy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BELKNAP: A bill (H. R. 11064) granting a pension to Mrs. Amanda E. Parkis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FITCH: A bill (H. R. 11065) to increase the pension of Susan N. Mulford, widow of Surgeon Joseph L. Mulford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE: A bill (H. R. 11066) granting a pension to Peter Zimmerman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PERRY: A bill (H. R. 11067) for the relief of the Mount Zion Society—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STIVERS: A bill (H. R. 11068) to relieve Nathaniel H. Williams of the charge of desertion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of B. A. Burton, W. W. Neal, G. W. Daniel, and 15 others, citizens of Pittsylvania County, Virginia, for same purpose—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of L. L. Brandon, of Halifax County, Virginia, for same purpose—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of C. L. Pleasant, M. L. Jones, W. H. Lowry and 11 others, citizens of Hanover County, Virginia, for same purpose—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of Isaac Rainey, secretary Farmers' Alliance, Greenville County, Virginia, for same purpose—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of C. M. Hardy, J. A. Love, J. B. Wilson, and 19 others, citizens of Lunenburg County, for same purpose—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. WILSON, of Missouri: Petition of John T. Murray, S. G. Daily, and many others, railway postal clerks, for increase of salaries—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 21, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the passage of House bill 6449, limiting the hours of labor for clerks in post-offices of the first, second, and third classes; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of Grange No. 530, Patrons of Husbandry, of Dauphin County, Pennsylvania, praying for the free coinage of silver; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the W. L. Rodman Post, No. 1, Grand Army of the Republic, of New Bedford, Mass., praying for the transfer of the revenue marine to the naval establishment; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I present sundry petitions, signed by over 1,200 citizens of South Dakota, praying for the passage of a law prohibiting the transportation of intoxicating liquors from any State or Territory of the United States into any other State or Territory contrary to the laws thereof. I move that the petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK presented a petition of Laurel Hill Alliance, No. 889, of Nebraska, praying for the passage of the so-called Butterworth option bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Laurel Hill Alliance, No. 889, of Nebraska, urging the speedy passage by Congress of the bill known as the Conger lard bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MORRILL. I present a petition very numerous signed in favor of $2 per pound tariff duty upon tobacco. It does not state where it is from. I present another one of a like character, which does not state where it comes from. I present another petition in favor of a duty of $2 per pound on tobacco, which does not state where it is from; another of like character, without any reference to the part of the country from where it comes; and still another.

I move that all these petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I present a memorial remonstrating against an increased tax on tin-plate. It does not state where it is from. I present a memorial from citizens of Clinton County, Indiana, remonstrating against the tax upon tin-plate, and one from somewhere else, it is not stated where, for the same purpose; another one from citizens of Allegan County, Michigan, for the same purpose, all printed memorials, and all emanating from one firm in Ohio, sent out for signatures.

I move that these memorials lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Grand Army of the Republic Post No. 199, of Englewood, Kans., praying that the remainder of the Fort Dodge military reservation may be donated for use as a soldiers' home; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of Grand Army of the Republic Post No. 180, of Garnett, Kans., praying for the passage of what is known as the Ingalls-Cheadle pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of David C. McGee, late a private in Company I, Fifth Illinois Infantry, praying for the correction of his military record; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FADDOCK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4071) construing so much of the act approved October 2, 1888, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," as relates to the reservation of sites for reservoirs, ditches, and canals, and of irrigable lands in the arid regions of the United States, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also from the same committee to whom the subject was referred reported a bill (S. 4137) to restore the irrigable lands of the United States to settlement, with certain limitations; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Commerce, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8947) to pay the administratrix of the estate of Bluford West, deceased, for the Bluford West Saline, in Cherokee nation, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments:

A bill (S. 3798) to authorize the Mobile, Jackson and Kansas City Railroad Company to cross certain rivers in the State of Mississippi;

A bill (S. 3929) authorizing the city of Albany, in the county of Linn, State of Oregon, to construct a bridge across the Willamette River, in the said State; and

A bill (S. 3952) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Alabama River at or near Selma, Ala., by the Selma and Cahawba Valley Railroad Company.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 4130) for the relief of Jeremiah Sullivan; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ALLEN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4131) granting to the county of Clallam, State of Washington, certain public lands in trust, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4132) for the relief of Henry L. Tilton and Isaac S. Kaufman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 4133) for the relief of Lester Noble; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4134) for the relief of the Cherokee Shawnees, authorizing investigation and report of funds and lands in severalty allotments; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. POWER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4135) to regulate the sale of lands unfit for cultivation, but valuable because of the stone thereon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 4136) to provide for the disposal of the Pagosa Springs military reservation, in the State of Colorado, to actual settlers under the provisions of the homestead laws; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present two amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill, the first to provide for giving the widow of the late Chief-Justice Morrison R. Waite the balance of the year's pay of her husband, to be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. And the other is an amendment referring to the Washington Monument, and which I ask may be printed and referred to the Committee on the Library.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be so referred and printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask for the adoption of an order authorizing a petitioner for a pension to withdraw papers to be used before the Pension Bureau.

The order was read, as follows:

Ordered, That Mrs. T. W. Lion, wife of Maj. T. W. Lion, have leave, and it is hereby given her, to withdraw from the files the petition of Maj. T. W. Lion for a pension, and the papers filed therewith.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That ought to be granted only subject to the rule of the Senate about adverse reports, leaving copies if there be an adverse report. There is a standing rule of the Senate that no papers are to be withdrawn where there is an adverse report without leaving copies, and so these orders are ordinarily made subject to the rule.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand that no report has been made on the subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Just say "subject to the rule," which is the ordinary course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order will be made, subject to the rule.

Mr. DANIEL. Very well.

ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICE OF THE SENATE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. EDMUNDS was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of seven be, and is hereby, constituted, whose duty it shall be to take into immediate consideration the state of the administrative service of the Senate and report to the Senate as early as may be what measures should be adopted in respect to the greatest efficiency and economy of the service.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the Chair appoint the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent, the Chair will be authorized to appoint the committee, and will make the appointment in due time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say also that I am so pressed as the chairman of another committee and a working member of still another that it will be practically impossible for me to serve upon the committee to be appointed by the Chair.

DISPOSITION OF ESCHEATED MORMON CHURCH FUNDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business?

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the morning business is closed, I wish to ask the Senate to take up the bill that I called attention to yesterday morning, being Senate bill 4047.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no further morning business, that order is closed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4047) supplemental to the act of Congress passed in March, 1887, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes,' approved March 23, 1882."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill was read as in Committee of the Whole and reported to the Senate and the amendments concurred in. I have no further amendment to propose. The bill is now in the Senate, and still open to amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment. The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole have been concurred in in the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out in line 12, beginning with the word "be" and ending with the word "expedient," in the seventeenth line, and insert:

Be devoted to the use and benefit of the schools of the unincorporated sect known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints and to the endowment of institutions of learning in said Territory of Utah; and for that purpose the same shall be turned over to the general board of education of said church by the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and under such rules, regulations, and restrictions, framed with the approval of the President, as shall prevent the said property and proceeds arising therefrom from being in any manner used or applied in the disseminating, teaching, or in any other form or manner upholding or propagating the doctrine and practices of polygamy or plural marriages.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, unless I am misinformed (the Senator from Vermont can tell me if I am misinformed) the present status of the case is about this: The Supreme Court rendered a decision, and subsequently not only withdrew the mandate issued in pursuance of that decision, but practically withdrew the decree until the next term of the court. The Senator from Vermont stated yesterday that this property, which was confiscated by the court, belonging to the Mormon Church, was without an owner, and this bill provides that it shall be disposed of as the bill indicates. The amendment that I have offered simply directs that the money arising from the sale of this property shall be turned over to the Mormon schools instead of to the common-school fund of the Territory of Utah. This property, as I understand, belongs to the Mormons—there is no question about that—and having been taken from them in this way, it seems to me entirely fair and proper that the fund arising from it should be devoted to their schools and to their schools alone. Hence the amendment that I have offered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, in an ordinary case there would be much force in what the Senator from South Carolina states. If an ordinary eleemosynary corporation is dissolved and its funds had before been devoted to charity, for instance, then under the English law of the rights of the Crown in such a case as parens patrie it would be the duty of the Crown, through the lord chancellor, to find the charity nearest in its nature to the one to which the fund had before been devoted, and to come as near to it as he could for the general objects and purposes in view.

In this case, as we all know, the Church of the Latter Day Saints, whose dissolution has left this personal fund, the real-estate funds having been declared by act of Congress to go to common schools before. This personal fund consists of money that came from nobody knows whom, for so far as anybody can know who were the donors it is given back to them; but where it is purely the money of that corporation in respect of whom no private owner or donor can be found in the State that the thing now is, the court of the Territory, subject to the Supreme Court here, would have to decide one of two things, either that the property would lapse into the Treasury of the United States as being the parens patrie, waiting for some future act of Congress to determine what should be the nearest just purpose to which the money could be devoted that the donors may be supposed to have contributed it for, or the court might hold possibly (I think it lawfully might hold, and I think it will if we do not provide for this probably, but it is a nice and technical and very interesting question in equity and in public law whether they can without an act of Congress) that the nearest substantial purpose that this money can be devoted to that is lawful and moral is to teach all the children of that Territory, where the largest part of them are Mormons yet, that sort of instruction which well-regulated communities give to all their children everywhere else; that is, the instruction of the common school.

The only thing, as I have reason to know, and particularly to know, because it appears in the printed opinion of the court, the last paragraph of it—after they had affirmed the judgment of the supreme court of the Territory, and the end of the term coming, an application was made for a rehearing or something of that kind, asking that the case should go over for an application for a rehearing at the next term, which was denied. Then the court on consideration, on account of this difficulty which I have stated of mere fine law, whether the courts of equity of the United States succeed to the same powers that the King of England had through his lord chancellor as parens patrie to take this fund out of the hand of the receiver and apply it to the use of common schools, or whether they do not, as I say, I think they do; but it is one of those nice and doubtful questions that ought to be left, and not to have the fund eaten up by lawyers disputing over a question which is not at all practical.

In the last clause of the opinion it is stated that the reason why the decree is vacated and the case continued is that the detail of some modifications of the decree below, which did turn it over, as I believe, to common schools, might be further considered. So there is no opinion in the judgment of the court as to the propriety of the statute we passed to abolish that corporation in the way we did, or any other difficulty except what is stated at the bottom of this opinion of the detail in the form of the decree which the mandate shall direct to be entered, and, as I say, I have reason to know that that rests upon this fine question of the ethics of jurisprudence, whether the courts of equity of the United States succeed to represent the parens patrie of the old English law.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I understand the practical effect of this bill if it shall become a law will be somewhat in the nature of a supplemental decree to the decree of the Supreme Court, directing how the fund shall be applied. It seems to me, if the honorable Senator from Vermont will permit me one moment, that it would be very much more in accordance with the principles of justice and equity and the observance of the rights of all people, to permit this matter to go over until the Supreme Court have finally disposed of it, and then if they find themselves in the dilemma in which the Senator says they are, Congress may come in and by appropriate legislation dispose of the fund; and that was the object I had in introducing the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That leaves it to the very evil of having funds in the hands of a receiver and a court to be disputed about, for there are no disputes about funds in court, even if the receiver keeps them safely, which do not cost money; and unless we step in and save further contention about this mere theoretical difficulty of detail this fund is going to be gradually frittered away by the expenses of counsel to be paid out of the fund, and it has been considerably assailed already in the same way and left in the hands of the receiver. Now, there is not a member of the Supreme Court of the United States—I feel pretty safe in saying—nor a member of the bar anywhere in the United States who doubts the power of Congress to stand in the place of the king under the English equity law and declare what shall be done with the property of the dissolved corporation to which there is no private claimant and for which no private donor can be found. Nobody doubts that.

Now, to get this fund out of the hands of the receiver and to save it being eaten up by discussing a perfectly immaterial and theoretical question, I have thought it right and the committee have thought it right and I think it is not improper to say that the court thinks it right that Congress should say what its devotion shall be.

Now, the amendment of my friend from South Carolina, to which I wish to speak a moment, is simply declaring in the present state of the construction of the Mormon Church in Utah just as much that this fund shall go to this corporation established by a law which is now repealed and dissolved, as before, though its fundamental theory is—and it is upon the ground that that is their theory, that opposition is being made to the bill pending in the Committee on Territories, which requires a certain oath about voting—is that polygamy is a part of the religious and moral practice and duty of the members of that church. Therefore it is impossible to apply this money to the instruction of Mormon children under the Mormon Church organization, incorporated or not incorporated, for the reason that it is impossible for them to use it teaching against polygamy, which their church articles hold to be one of their fundamental church institutions.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, it is due to truth to state that the Mormons deny that proposition. They deny it, and it has been denied over and over again before the Committee on Territories, of which I happen to be a member, and we heard a most interesting, I might say an extremely able presentation of the view of one branch of the Mormons, the younger men of that church, which I think it would behoove the honorable Senator to read. The Mormons deny emphatically that they are practicing polygamy or bigamy at all. They have abandoned it or are abandoning it, and taking all the steps that respectable people can be expected to take to get rid of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think I have seen the young gentleman to whom my friend refers. I think I have read the paper to which my friend refers. I think the paper was shown to me before it went to the Committee on Territories, and it made an impression upon me, and if I understood that gentleman—if we are speaking now about the same gentleman and the same paper (and I think we are)—the very point was to have the House bill, or a similar bill, changed in one particular phraseology. He admitted that polygamy was the written and standing doctrine of that church organization, and while he did not believe in it himself, he was a member of that church and he could not therefore honestly take an oath that he was not a member of a sect that taught a belief in the ordinance of polygamy.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose the Senator from South Carolina refers to a gentleman who came before the Committee on Territories and addressed the committee without any prepared paper.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Cannon is the young man to whom I refer.

Mr. VORHEES. When this bill was called up for consideration yesterday morning I objected to it for the reason that I thought there were some matters which did not entitle it to a hearing and to action at this time. The trouble with the Senator from Vermont is that he is in too great a hurry to get at the results of litigation which is not yet concluded. I stand here and say in the hearing of Senators that there is no decision of the Supreme Court on this question. I stand here and say that the question is as open in the Supreme Court to future consideration as if it had not been considered there at all. There was a decision made and a mandate ordered and an application for a rehearing was filed, and instead of acting upon that application for a rehearing the Supreme Court, for reasons satisfactory to itself, vacated its own decree, and by virtue of that vacation of the decree the mandate fell and everything else fell, and the case goes over to be considered at the next term. The Senator from Vermont volunteered to give us the reasons why the Supreme Court did this thing. It is immaterial to me what their reasons were. That is the fact; that is the matter which stands in the way of legislation upon this subject now.

This money that is said to be in the hands of a receiver is one of the results of this case, whenever it comes to a finality. I care not what becomes of it any more than I care for the general good and welfare of the human race. I care nothing for the affairs of the Mormon people, except that they should regulate their conduct upon principles of sound morality; and if under the Constitution and laws of their country they have forfeited certain moneys, I do not know but what it would be as well to apply these moneys to common-school purposes as to any other, nor indeed do I know that that would be the correct destination for them. But this I do know, that with the question undetermined in the Supreme Court of the United States, this is not the proper time for legislation to fix and determine where certain fruits of this litigation shall go. That is the point I make.

There is no need of any great hurry about this matter. Whatever may be the reasons of the Supreme Court's action, and I know them not, nor do I accept those reasons at second hand even from the Senator from Vermont—whatever those reasons may be, is a matter of little consequence to me. The fact is that the case is not decided in the Supreme Court of the United States at this hour. It will take any Senator but a moment to go to the Clerk's office of the Supreme Court to see whether my statement is correct or not. If it is not, I will stand corrected with a great deal of pleasure. I know, however, whereof I speak, and this bill ought to go over.

I am not objecting. I told the Senator from Vermont yesterday after I had made the objection then that I should not object again to the consideration of this bill to-day, but I would look into the status of the case and see what its condition was. I have done so, and I have stated the result of my investigation. If Senators want to vote to dispose of the proceeds of this litigation before it is determined in the Supreme Court of the United States, while the case is yet upon the docket and continued to the next term, it is a matter for them to consider upon their own responsibility and not upon mine.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator, if I can be pardoned for a moment, is mistaken in supposing that this bill goes solely or chiefly upon the notion that we are trying to regulate the affairs of the Supreme Court; and the fact that the case is not yet decided (and in a technical and legal sense, as I said before, it is not) does not affect the necessity of this bill. The court in pronouncing its decision, at the foot of the opinion state why the case went over to modify some details of the decree of the court below which they had before affirmed. That is in the print; I have read it this morning.

This clause should have been in the bill of 1884 that passed, just as it was as to the real estate, before any litigation at all, so that if the court should hold that this corporation should be dissolved and if it should appear that there was some of this money to which there was no private donor to be found and no private claimant having any moral or equitable right to it, it should not stay in the hands of the receiver for his use forever or go into the Treasury of the United States, but should be devoted to schools. As to the real estate, specific provision was made in the original bill. Perhaps by my fault and carelessness, or somebody's, that particular phrase was not repeated in this section with respect of any residue of the personal estate. It should properly have been in the original bill; and the fact that the case is not decided has nothing to do with it in the sense that the bill should not go on now.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it not the fact that a petition for a rehearing of the case upon its merits has been filed?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Application was made.

Mr. BUTLER. Application was made to file a petition to rehear the case upon its merits.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And I understand the court denied it.

Mr. VOORHEES. The court denied it because they vacated their decree, and of course there was then no decree to have a rehearing upon.

Mr. BUTLER. So it seems to me, even with the statement of the Senator from Vermont, that this legislation is somewhat premature. I think we had better defer any action until the court has finally disposed of the case upon its merits in all of its details, and I can scarcely think that a receiver would squander the funds. I presume that he has given the usual security for the protection of the funds that is generally required of receivers, and it is therefore under reasonable protection.

I can not for the life of me see what great harm can befall anybody if this matter should go over until the Supreme Court meets and finally passes upon this case. The amendment that I offered was, as I thought, in the interest of common justice to these people, and nothing more.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. TELLER. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina seems to me an important amendment, and we have had no opportunity to examine it. Nobody knows very much about it. I just saw it a moment, when the Senator showed it to me. I think the Senator from Vermont should let this matter go over until such time as that amendment can be printed and we have an opportunity to see what there is in it.

This certainly is not a case about which there is any hurry. The Senator says it will be expensive to keep the money in the hands of the court. It does not cost a cent, as I understand, to keep it unless the court should think there was some reason why some of it should be expended; none will ever be paid out to attorneys, and certainly it is not at all probable that a dollar of it will be paid out to attorneys between this and the time of the final determination by the court of what the law is.

I do not see any reason why we should make haste in this matter now. It strikes me if this money can be applied for a purpose that is admitted by all to be strictly legal and in the line which it was intended in the first instance, nobody can object. That is the principle upon which these distributions are made. The Mormon Church contributed this money, and the Mormon Church can take it and use it in such a way that nobody can find any fault with it. So, it is perfectly proper, and the Mormon Church is in equity and right entitled to this money. Whether it be popular or not, that is the ethics of this case, the equity of it.

I suppose the Supreme Court of the United States might, in the absence of any statute, designate how it should be used. The Senator himself says he thinks that is so. I should be quite as willing to leave it to the Supreme Court to say whether it should be devoted to some purpose in harmony and in consonance with the ideas of the people who contributed it, as to have Congress take hold of this matter. There is certainly no hurry about it, and I think the bill ought to go over until we can have an opportunity to examine it. My attention was never called to it until yesterday. I did not know there was such a proposition before Congress. I myself should like an opportunity to look into the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays. This is the old story.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the yeas and nays as far as I am concerned. I should like to put myself on record on this amendment.

Mr. PADDOCK. What is the pending question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. HOAR. What is that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I demand the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 13, after the word "shall," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "expedient," in line 18, as follows:

Be devoted to the use and benefit of public common schools in the Territory of Utah; and the Secretary of the Interior shall take and receive the same and dispose thereof to the uses aforesaid in such manner as shall seem to him, with the approval of the President, to be most expedient.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Be devoted to the use and benefit of the schools of the unincorporated sect known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, to the endowment of institutions of learning in said Territory of Utah, and for that purpose the same shall be turned over to the general board of education of said church by the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and under such rules, regulations, and restrictions, framed with the approval of the President, as shall prevent the said property and proceeds arising therefrom from being in any manner used or applied in the disseminating, teaching, or in any other form or manner upholding and propagating the doctrine or practices of polygamy or plural marriages.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. In his absence I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH], and I shall vote "nay."

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. I think I shall withhold my vote on this question as I do not know the position of that Senator on legislation upon this subject.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I refrain from voting, because I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I inquire if the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. TURPIE. Then I withhold my vote.

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], so that Mr. McMILLAN and Mr. EUSTIS stand paired. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. PADDOCK. Under the arrangement for the transfer of pairs announced by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] I desire myself to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. While I am on the floor I announce that my colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BATE. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] is necessarily absent to-day. He has been called home. He is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR], who is detained from the Senate on account of illness, and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. I think I understand my pair well enough to know that he would allow me to vote under the circumstances, there being no quorum so far as is determined now, and I cast my vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—9.
Bate, Berry, Butler,	Call, Coke,	Harris, Ransom,	Teller, Vance.
NAYS—24.
Allen, Allison, Casey, Chandler, Cullom, Dixon,	Edmunds, Evarts, Frye, Hale, Hawley, Hoar,	Ingalls, Moody, Morgan, Morrill, Paddock, Payne,	Pettigrew, Pierce, Power, Sanders, Stewart, Washburn.
ABSENT—31.
Aldrich, Barbour, Blackburn, Blair, Blodgett, Brown, Cameron, Carlisle, Cockrell, Colquitt, Daniel, Davis, Dawes,	Dolph, Eustis, Farwell, Faulkner, George, Gibson, Gorman, Gray, Hampton, Hearst, Higgins, Hiscock, Jones of Arkansas,	Jones of Nevada, Kenna, McMillan, McPherson, Manderson, Mitchell, Payson, Platt, Plumb, Pugh, Quay, Reagan, Sawyer,	Sherman, Spooner, Squire, Stanford, Stockbridge, Turpie, Vest, Voorhees, Walthall, Wilson of Iowa, Wilson of Md., Wolcott.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No quorum being present, the roll of the Senate will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen, Allison, Bate, Berry, Blair, Butler, Call, Cameron, Casey, Chandler, Cockrell, Coke,	Cullom, Daniel, Dawes, Dixon, Dolph, Edmunds, Evarts, Hale, Harris, Hawley, Higgins, Hiscock, Hoar,	Ingalls, Manderson, Moody, Morgan, Morrill, Paddock, Payson, Payne, Pierce, Platt, Power, Ransom,	Sanders, Sawyer, Stewart, Teller, Turpie, Vance, Voorhees, Walthall, Washburn.
--	---	--	--

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators having responded to their names a quorum is present, and the roll will be again called on the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. As the Senate has indicated very clearly that it is not in favor of this amendment, I withdraw it.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I desire to make a motion in which I think all fair-minded men will concur. I move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until the second Tuesday in December next. By that time the Supreme Court will have found a termination of the litigation now pending in that tribunal. In the mean time I can see no public or private interest endangered. I do not know whether I am correct, but it occurred to me that the tone of the Senator from Vermont was something of distrust as to what a receiver might do with this money meantime. I do not share that distrust. The courts in Utah are in the hands of the party to which the Senator from Vermont belongs—all of them. The receiver is appointed by a court of that character. Doubtless the receiver is of the same political persuasion, and I will say doubtless an honest man. I have no reason to say otherwise. Certainly if I can trust him, the Senator from Vermont ought to trust him, and ought to trust the machinery of justice in that much-litigated region of the United States.

It is a fact which the Senator from Vermont finally admitted upon the floor distinctly and specifically, that there was no decision made on this question at this time by the Supreme Court of the United States. Now, I call upon lawyers and laymen to answer whether they think it safe to legislate in regard to one of the properties touched and affected by the pending suit before that suit is decided? That is the whole question. I have neither sympathy nor concern on this question one way or the other, but it is illegitimate, hurried, and, it seems to me, wholly improper legislation to pass a bill affecting property that is in controversy before the court which has been charged with it and has not come to a final conclusion. I can see no reason for this hurried action; on the contrary, every reason that appeals to a judicial, legal, or fair mind why this legislation should be postponed until after the action of the Supreme Court of the United States. Hence I move that the bill be postponed until the second Tuesday of next December.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, it is sufficient to say, in one minute by the clock, that this bill does not touch or affect the property at all until the supreme court of the Territory and the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal shall have finally disposed of everybody's private and public right, any more than the original bill did, and, therefore, if the Senator will pardon me for saying so, there is no more reason for postponing this until December than there was for postponing the original bill dissolving the corporation until December.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let me ask the Senator from Vermont a question. In less than one minute by the clock, I will ask the Senator from Vermont, suppose the Supreme Court should decide the other way, what have we been doing here except making spectacles of ourselves in legislating inconsequently, passing a bill that will be void by the very decision of the Supreme Court?

I believe I have not occupied a half minute by the clock, and I have put a question which can not be answered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the second Tuesday in December. On this question the yeas and nays are asked for.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have transferred, by consent of the Senator of South Carolina, the pair that I have with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] to my colleague [Mr. FARWELL], so that the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] and myself can vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. I will vote if it be necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President, I announce my pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). Under the arrangement announced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN], and as we generally differ in opinion I do not feel at liberty to vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). Under the arrangement for the transfer of pairs which I announced on the previous vote, I take the liberty of voting, and vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR]. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. By an arrangement of the pair between the Senator from Virginia and myself, he is transferred to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], so that the Senator from Mississippi and myself can vote.

Mr. WALTHALL. Under the arrangement just announced by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] I vote "nay."

Mr. DIXON. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. EVARTS. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. HISCOCK] is called away from the city by a domestic occasion.

Mr. BLAIR. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DOLPH. I vote "nay" to make a quorum.

Mr. SAWYER. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT], but I reserved the right to vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—20.
Bate, Berry, Butler, Call, Carlisle,	Coke, Daniel, Harris, Hawley, Morgan,	Pasco, Plumb, Ransom, Reagan, Teller,	Turpie, Vance, Voorhees, Walthall, Wilson of Md.
NAYS—25.
Allen, Allison, Casey, Chandler, Cullom, Davis, Dawes,	Dixon, Dolph, Edmunds, Evarts, Frye, Hale, Hoar,	Ingalls, Moody, Morrill, Paddock, Pierce, Platt, Power,	Sanders, Sawyer, Stewart, Washburn.
ABSENT—30.
Aldrich, Barbour, Blackburn, Blair, Blodgett, Brown, Cameron, Cockrell, Colquitt, Eustis,	Farwell, Faulkner, George, Gibson, Gorman, Gray, Hampton, Hearst, Higgins, Hiscock,	Jones of Arkansas, Jones of Nevada, Kenna, McMillan, McPherson, Manderson, Mitchell, Payne, Pettigrew, Pugh,	Quay, Sherman, Spooner, Squire, Stanford, Stockbridge, Vest, Wilson of Iowa, Wolcott.

So the motion to postpone was not agreed to.

Mr. BERRY. I should have been very glad if the Senator from Vermont would have consented that this matter might be postponed. I confess that I have some doubts as to what the proper disposition of this money should be. I do not know whether it can be disposed of in this way or not. I have thought probably it could be donated to the sixteen surviving children of the Mountain Meadow massacre, and that would be about as good disposition of it as could be made. But nevertheless it seems to me this matter ought not to be hurried through at this time, and I wish to make the point of order now that by agreement made before, Saturday has been set apart for unobjected cases on the Calendar. I object under that agreement, which has been in existence for several weeks, to the further consideration of this bill to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been taken up on motion and is before the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. It is subject to objection at any time, however, under the agreement, if the agreement exists at all. It has always been held by the Presiding Officer that an objection made at any time is tenable. It seems to me that the matter ought not to be hurried through at this time, nor do I think the bill was taken up by the vote of the Senate, with all due respect to the Chair. I think it was simply called up. I am told by Senators around me that it was taken up on motion, and I withdraw the remark I have just made. I had supposed it was merely called up; but I am told it was taken up regularly on motion by a vote of the Senate.

Where an objection would lie it has always been held that it would lie at any time before the final vote was taken. As I said before, of course the Senate can violate the agreement, but the understanding has been for weeks that Saturday should be devoted to unobjected cases on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand that when a bill is taken up by a vote of the Senate a single objection will carry it over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is so. The question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill be engrossed and read the third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDUSTRIAL AND SCIENTIFIC EDUCATION.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3714.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3714) to establish an educational fund and apply the proceeds of the public lands and the receipts from certain land-grant railroad companies to the more complete endowment and support of colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education.

Mr. MORGAN. My colleague [Mr. PUGH] has an amendment to that bill.

Mr. MORRILL. The amendment is here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question first is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. What has become of the general-consent rule as to Saturdays if motions are to be pressed in this way to take up this or that bill?

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that this bill was made the special order for last Thursday, immediately after the morning hour.

Mr. MORGAN. That is very true.

Mr. MORRILL. I expected to have gotten it through before this time. I am very anxious to have action upon the bill, for the reason that I am desirous of leaving the city for four or five days on account of my health.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the motion is in order. The Chair has no power to enforce general understandings.

Mr. MORGAN. If that motion is in order and is pressed by the Senator from Vermont, then I give notice that I shall object to the consideration of any case that is not taken up by vote of the Senate. The rule has been established, we have been acting under it by common consent, and I am informed by the gentlemen around me—I do not know about that—that this bill is going to take all day.

Mr. MORRILL. Oh, no; I think not.

Mr. MORGAN. That is what they tell me. I do not know.

Mr. MORRILL. I think it will not take over an hour.

Mr. MORGAN. That is what gentlemen tell me; I do not know about it, but I do not think the Senator from Vermont ought to come in on Saturday morning and break up a rule that the Senate have been relying upon and acting upon for weeks to get rid of this enormous Calendar we have here of unobjected cases. The bill of the Senator from Vermont can just as well be taken up on Monday as to-day.

Mr. MORRILL. I would not press the bill now except for the peculiar circumstances in which I am placed. I do not expect to be here on Monday, and therefore I desire the bill to be taken up to-day.

Mr. MORGAN. Of course, under the rules of the Senate I can not resist the Senator's right to make a motion to take this bill up, but I just give notice that there will not be any other business taken up to-day after this is disposed of except by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not think the Senator from Alabama caught the import of the last remark made by the Senator from Vermont. He stated that he called up the bill to-day because he expected to be absent next week, and because of his proposed absence he asked that it be now taken up.

Mr. MORGAN. I object, Mr. President, to the Senators from the same State occupying this Senate with all of their business on the same Saturday and nobody else getting a chance under a rule agreed upon to bring forward anything for the consideration of this body except by a vote. The rule is violated, and so far as I am concerned, I intend to take what remedy I can to avoid the consequences, and I shall demand a vote on every bill that comes before the Senate hereafter on Saturdays.

Mr. BUTLER. If it is in order, I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont has moved its consideration, and that is the question pending. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to take up for consideration the bill the title of which has been read.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Vermont has been notified by gentlemen, who I have no doubt are thoroughly in earnest about it, that this bill will occupy the entire day, and I must submit to him that it is not fair when other Senators have bills on the Calendars of unobjected cases which they would like to have considered, to precipitate a debate that is going to occupy the entire day. I shall call for the yeas and nays on the motion to take up the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I am aware that this question is not debatable—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Except by unanimous consent.

Mr. INGALLS. Under ordinary circumstances I should be inclined to oppose the motion, but the Senator from Vermont has stated that it is imperatively necessary that at an early day he shall leave the city for reasons and considerations personal to himself. I am sure that the Senator from Vermont would make no appeal personally to any member of this body to which the response would not be instantaneous and affirmative. It seems to me under the circumstances attending this matter, in view of our relations to the Senator from Vermont, his relations to the body, his great and often-expressed interest in this subject, that he is entitled to ask us to waive our personal considerations and grant him this favor which he asks. Reluctant as I should be under ordinary circumstances to depart from the rule of the body, setting aside Saturday for the consideration of the Calendar, in this instance I shall do so with pleasure, and sincerely hope that the desire of the Senator from Vermont will be acceded to by the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. Knowing the very heavy labors the Senator from Vermont has undergone as chairman of the Finance Committee, and knowing how he is situated and surrounded, while I regret extremely that this bill comes forward on Saturday, I wish to say that I have not the heart to object to his having this privilege, knowing as I do he desires to go away and rest.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, before the Senate proceeds with the consideration of this bill, I ask permission to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Finance Committee. As I understand, he is to leave the city on Monday. We adopted on May 26, 1890, the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Finance Committee be directed to report to the Senate, in connection with House bill No. 9416, commonly known as the tariff bill, a statement showing the duties levied by the present law, the duties as they would be according to said House bill, and the duties as proposed by said committee, all said duties to be stated in parallel columns or otherwise, as may be most convenient for examination and comparison.

The resolution was offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that the tables were prepared and sent to the Printing Office last evening.

INDUSTRIAL AND SCIENTIFIC EDUCATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3714) to establish an educational fund and apply the proceeds of the public lands and the receipts from certain land-grant railroad companies to the more complete endowment and support of colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education.

Mr. PLUMB. Has the bill been read?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been read, and the question is on an amendment to an amendment reported by the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MORRILL. I will suggest to the Senator from Kansas—I know the motion he desires to make—that the bill has been half read through and part of the amendments of the committee have already been agreed to. Let the amendments that are pending be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Education and Labor, which will be stated.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the amendment of the committee be read, and then the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, on page 4, line 16, after the word "disbursement," the Committee on Education and Labor reported to insert:

Showing specifically its application to instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts and the facilities for such instruction. The grants of moneys authorized by this act are made subject to the legislative assent of the several States and Territories to the purpose of said grants: Provided, That payments of such installments of the appropriation herein made as shall become due to any State before the adjournment of the regular session of the Legislature meeting next after the passage of this act shall be made upon the assent of the governor thereof, duly certified to the Secretary of the Treasury.

It is proposed to amend this amendment by inserting, in line 18, after the word "instruction:"

Including the various branches of mathematical, physical, natural, and economic science, with special reference to their applications in the industries of life, and in a thorough training in the English language.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee as amended.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont why he desires to depart in this amended bill from the entire principle of the act of 1862. That honorable Senator, as I understand, was the author of that great and beneficent plan of education which has built up the forty or forty-two agricultural colleges in the United States. He devised a plan in the act of 1862 which has gone without amendment and without the necessity of amendment to this day. Nobody has objected to it, nobody has found fault with it, and the colleges have had the liberty of exercising their discretion in the particular branches of science connected with mechanics and other cognate sciences, and in the exercise of their discretion they have broadened the field of education, they have brought high education within the reach of a great many young men who could not obtain it at the ordinary colleges in the States, and the system has had an admirable effect in every part of the United States where it has been tried.

Here is a fund of $25,000 a year ultimately, $15,000 now, to be applied to the agricultural schools in the nature of a subvention, an additional fund to the endowment fund provided under the act of 1862. I do not know whether it is the purpose to change the law in respect of this fifteen to twenty-five thousand dollar amendment, so as to have that apply to the particular sciences which are required to be taught, or whether it is to go back and take the law of 1862 from the foundation and amend that also, so as to require that act and all the endowments under which it has been shaped by the States and by the boards of trustees organized in the States under a certain direction in the education of the youth of the country.

If the Senator from Vermont wants to undertake the education of the people in the different States, because we are voting money out of the public lands for that purpose, and wants to bring that subject within the jurisdiction of Congress to control the studies they shall pursue in these schools, then I am opposed to toto to his plan. I do not believe in the Congress of the United States undertaking the scheme of educating the young men of this country; but I do believe, and I believe heartily and earnestly, in complying with the great trust under which the public lands are held under the deeds of conveyance to the Government of the United States for the benefit of the States by placing these funds in the control of the States and letting them regulate education according to their best judgment.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the Senator from Vermont is lending himself to a scheme here for the purpose of introducing into the act of 1862 certain new features which imply that the Congress of the United States shall take the control of education in the States where these colleges are situated, and that the schools shall be regulated by a law passed here and by administrative measures enacted here. I wish to say to the Senator from Vermont that if that is his purpose he will have several days' work here in trying to get that thing stuffed into this bill—several days' work, and pretty hard at that.

After that Senator has built a monument to himself that the future historian of the United States will be proud to refer to, there is no reason why in endeavoring to broaden its foundations or raise the height of the structure he should bring into it stained or imperfect or improper material. The system which he projected in 1862 has worked admirably; but now to take it out and for the sake of getting this allowance from the Congress of the United States when it is not necessary to make the concession, the plan to put the whole subject of the education in these colleges directly under the supervision of the Congress of the United States, is something that violates the ground upon which he stood in 1862. It ignores all the experience of this admirable system since that time, and brings in here a brand of difficulty and contention and strife in regard to these schools which have so long been happily free from any interference on the part of the Congress of the United States.

If any one thing has ever occurred in the history of the legislation of the United States to prove that the States are the proper guardians of public education, the history of the act of 1862 establishing the agricultural colleges is the best proof that could be adduced. At a proper time, and now is the proper time, I shall ask those gentlemen in this body who have committed themselves against the propositions of the interference of Congress in the administration of public schools in the States to strike out of this bill what is proposed to be inserted here and which is entirely unnecessary.

The curriculum of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Alabama is as high as that of the University of Alabama, with the exception perhaps of the teaching of Greek. I believe that is the only language which is omitted. The modern languages are taught there, and all branches of science that have any practical connection with the life of an American citizen are taught there, and taught by a board of professors who, I think it is not an exaggeration to say, for talent, ability, zeal, industry, capacity to teach, and all that, are perhaps the equals of any board of professors in the United States. I do not know a man in the United States whose ability is of higher range, whose education, scientific and literary, is more complete and more exact, and the experiences and works of whose life have better demonstrated his ability than Leroy Brown, the president of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Alabama. He, supported by a very able faculty, has brought that institution up into very high rank, and it includes hundreds—I have the last circular of that school before me, and here are lists of hundreds of young men in that State who are being educated, and educated very thoroughly in that school. It has been the boast of our people, and it is a just source of congratulation. The young men of that school, many of them, as soon as they get their diplomas from this able faculty, are employed in institutions of different kinds, as railroad engineers, civil engineers, in various capacities, as the managers of iron furnaces, as builders, and architects, and all that.

I see no occasion now, Mr. President, for undertaking to prescribe to that college what the Congress of the United States ought not to undertake to prescribe to any college. The fact is that the curriculum of that college and its management is better in every particular than if it was controlled by a board of five or ten Senators of this body. There are no five or ten Senators of this body to-day who are able to go into the faculty of that college and manage it as well as President Brown and the able men who support him. They have not only an interest in the college, but they have an affectionate zeal for it.

I can see no necessity why we should undertake to interfere with the course of study there unless it is merely to get a precedent here of the actual control of the agricultural colleges, which for a great number of years we have entirely refused to participate in beyond that scheme which was presented in the act of 1862, just for the purpose of having this matter of the education of the children of the United States declared to be within the jurisdiction of the Congress of the United States.

This body, Mr. President, has voted against that proposition. The people of the United States, after they have come to look the field over and to consider it, have ascertained that we have enough to do here to take care of the Government as a government. We need not be spreading our powers about so as to get hold of the children and youth of the land and undertake the plan of educating them under our laws and our regulations.

I hope this amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, on a former occasion I called attention briefly to some objections to this bill, which I desire to repeat substantially. If the bill had been framed upon the theory and terms of the law of 1862 I should have supported it very cheerfully.

Before I proceed with the criticism I desire to make upon the bill, I will say that it seems to me the purpose of the bill is to fix upon our legislation the principle that Congress is to go into the States, take charge of educational institutions, and regulate what is to be done with them. That was a principal argument made against an educational bill which has been urged with great ability and persistency here. It seems to me now, if we consent to adopt this bill in the form in which it is presented by the committee amendments, it takes away all argument in the future that Congress has no right to control the schools of the States.

I wish to add here that it seems to be upon the theory of a great many leading men in New England, almost a New England idea, that the Constitution of the United States is to be overthrown by the enlargement of the powers of the Federal Government and by the abridgment of the powers of the States, and this is one of the means of doing it.

I call attention to section 3 as it has been amended. I will read the section as it is, and then point out the part of it to which I object:

That the sums hereby appropriated to the States and Territories for the further endowment and support of colleges shall be annually paid on or before the 31st day of July of each year, by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the warrant of the Commissioner of Education, countersigned by the Secretary of the Interior, out of the Treasury of the United States, to the State or Territorial treasurer, or to such officer as shall be designated by the laws of such State or Territory to receive the same, who shall, upon the order of the trustees of the college, immediately pay over said sums to the treasurers of the respective colleges entitled to receive the same, and such treasurers shall be required to report to the Secretary of Agriculture and to the Commissioner of Education, on or before the 1st day of September of each year, a detailed statement of the amount so received and of its disbursement—

That far I have no objection to the section—I believe it is all right—but I do object to what follows—

showing specifically its application to instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts and the facilities for such instruction, including the various branches of mathematical, physical, natural, and economic science, with special reference to their applications in the industries of life, and in a thorough training in the English language. The grants of moneys authorized by this act are made subject to the legislative assent of the several States and Territories to the purpose of said grants.

It will be seen that it first proposes that the money shall go down to the schools, and then to have the legislative assent to that. Now, I call attention to part of the language of section 4, on page 5 of the bill; and I will first read the last sentence of that part of it that I do not object to:

An annual report by the president of each of said colleges shall be made to the Secretary of Agriculture, as well as the Secretary of the Interior—

That seems to be a repetition of what is required in the preceding section—regarding the condition and progress of each college—

I do not know that that can do any special harm, but I do not see the need of it. Then I object to what follows—

Including statistical information in relation to its receipts and expenditures, its library, the number of its students and professors, and also as to any improvements and experiments made under the direction of any experiment stations attached to said colleges, with their cost and results, and such other industrial and economical statistics as may be regarded as useful, one copy of which shall be transmitted by mail free to all other colleges further endowed under this act.

A portion of that is part of the old act, but a portion of it is not, and it is so interwoven as to make it, to my mind, objectionable.

Now I call attention to the last sentence in section 5 of this proposed act:

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby charged with the proper administration of this law, through the Commissioner of Education; and they are authorized and directed, under the approval of the President, to make all needful rules and regulations not inconsistent with its provisions, to carry this law into effect.

So we go by this act into the States and take charge of their schools, prescribing their curriculum, prescribing what shall be done, and how it shall be done, and require legislative assent to it, and then make provisions that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Education shall prescribe a system of rules under which this policy shall be carried out.

It seems to me that the Senator from Vermont might have contented himself by letting this appropriation be made under the terms of the original law making appropriations for the benefit of agricultural colleges, but it appears that that does not satisfy him; that he must go further, extend the powers of the Federal Government, require the consent of the States to do it, and give supervision over this branch of schools to the officers of the Federal Government under rules which they may adopt.

Mr. President, I do not think it is worth while to prolong the discussion on such a measure. To my mind it evidently means to shut out one of the leading arguments used against the educational bill, that of the Federal Government going into the States and taking charge of education, and to enable parties when that bill comes up again to say, "You can not oppose this bill, because you voted for one giving the Federal Government authority over this class of your schools."

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I was glad to hear the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] give praise to the institutions that are already established, and I wish to assure him and others that so far as this bill is concerned it will not change the character of the institutions that have been already established.

Under the original act Congress provided for the maintenance in each State of "at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the Legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life."

Mr. MORGAN. That is the law of 1862.

Mr. MORRILL. That was the original law. This amendment is but a mere amplification of the original law, providing that instruction shall be given "including the various branches of mathematical, physical, natural, and economic science, with special reference to their applications in the industries of life, and in a thorough training in the English language," etc. Mr. President, I do not think that there should be any unnecessary alarm in relation to that method.

Then, in relation to the reports which are to be made to the Government, they are also to be made and sent to every other college. It will be advantageous to the colleges in every State to see what has been done in any other.

I can not see that the objection of the Senator from Texas or the Senator from Alabama ought to have any weight here. Of course, if we make this appropriation, the Government ought to be assured that it is to be applied and spent in the manner expected and provided.

I do not intend myself to debate this question to-day. I have already given it all the attention that I think is necessary.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Vermont point out what advantage there is in the proposed amendment to the agricultural college system above that found in the act of 1862?

Mr. MORRILL. I will say that some of the institutions are represented as not giving sufficient attention to the agricultural and mechanical parts of their studies; that they do not give them the lead; and this provision has been inserted in order to insure that they shall be so devoted.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I am very sorry that the Senator from Vermont did not think it best to confine this bill to the precise terms of the grant of 1862. I concur with the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] in saying that if he had done so I should with pleasure have voted for it. That act gave specific grants, 30,000 acres of land for each Congressman, I believe for each Senator also, to the States, to be dedicated to a well-defined purpose, and affixed only the simple conditions practically of faithfully reporting every year the progress made in science, and the condition of such institutions. It did say, of course, that no portion of it should be applied to buildings, etc., but these specifications were to be accepted by the several States, and when they were accepted the whole business was closed, excepting the annual report. There was no inspection except by the reports. There was no saying "If this fund be not wisely and honestly expended we will stop it," as there is said here. This desires to say, or does say, that if any part of this fund, this new grant, "be applied to any purpose or object other than for instruction in agricultural and the mechanic arts and facilities for such instruction, it shall be replaced by the State or Territory to which it belongs, and until so replaced no subsequent appropriation shall be apportioned or paid to such State or Territory; and no portion of said moneys shall be applied, directly or indirectly, under any pretense whatever," no, that is beyond; that if anything shall "be applied to any purpose or object other than for instruction in agricultural and the mechanic arts and facilities for such instruction, it shall be replaced."

Mr. MORRILL. There is an amendment pending that is to come in there.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will come to that. The original act said "the maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts."

This bill, with its various specifications, does not add anything really to that except to say that if in the expenditure they trespass in the least beyond the lines of instruction in the mechanic arts, then the Government will cease to pay them. That absolutely forbids, if not in the original grant, if it does not change the terms of the original trust, it does nevertheless forbid that any portion of this new grant shall go a hair beyond agriculture and the mechanic arts. If it does, the appropriation shall be stopped.

Now, it is going to be a little difficult for a college to keep up the line of distinction between the expenditures. If one of the boys who are studying agriculture and at the same time, if you please, studying with a view to becoming a civil engineer, should think it best to take a little something of a liberal course of English literature and in the classics, you will have to keep a separate account for that boy. You will have to tell us what share and how, whether he got his education from the old fund or from the new fund. It is introducing a possible subject of dispute over the construction.

Mr. HOAR. Or whether it was from the other funds of the institution.

Mr. HAWLEY. Or whether from the other funds. There may be other funds. Now, that would make three separate accounts to be kept, and you have got to educate a boy according to the fund that he wants to take advantage of.

I would be very glad indeed (for I do not think the Senator from Vermont has helped himself by the new specification) if he would just leave it to the old specification, for the schools have been in general very well administered; and after the money has been given, as it has been, to Connecticut, where it has been honestly kept and honestly administered, while I hunger for the addition because I love that school, I know how good it has been—while I hunger for the addition to its resources I do not desire, I very much oppose, any new dedication or any plan of administration which is coming down there to inspect us, and say, "You taught this boy in Latin while you were teaching him engineering and therefore we are going to dock part of your allowance next year." For Connecticut—and I can not speak for that school, for it is so hungry to take it, I would rather say we do not want your money unless you will just trust this State of Connecticut, which has honestly administered since 1862 its old grant, and proposing to take more funds under that same dedication it will accept the trust and close the bargain and make its annual report, but do not come around exercising a guardianship over us as if we were wards in chancery and could not be trusted with these schools.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I think there is a great deal of force in what the Senator from Connecticut has said about the proposition to enlarge the scope of the original law, or perhaps to contract it, but at all events to change it. But leaving that matter out of account, I want to say that while I have no objection to the passage of a bill which shall make an addition out of the Treasury of the United States to the endowment fund or to the fund for the current expenses of the agricultural colleges of the United States, I do most seriously object to this bill in its present form, and in saying that I say it with great reluctance.

The Senator from Vermont had honorable identification with the original measure, a measure of very great importance, and one which he is entitled to view in its operations with a very pardonable pride; and I do not wonder that at this later period, a generation after the passage of the first act, he should now seek to supplement that act by appropriations out of the Treasury. I want to say to him that I think if in the beginning the bill which was passed under his auspices had provided for an appropriation out of the Treasury for agricultural colleges it would have been very much better than the plan finally adopted. The endowment consisted of land. It was based upon the status of representation in the lower House of Congress. It was unequal, in the first place, in its allowance of lands, and very unequal in the results by which those lands were commuted into money. Some of them were disposed of properly and others were disposed of improperly. Some were disposed of wisely and some unwisely. Some of the colleges got a large endowment, and others got a very small endowment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator from Kansas will please suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 894) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to that bill being laid aside informally in order that the measure which has been under consideration may be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the unfinished business be informally laid aside? The Chair hears no objection. The Senator from Kansas will proceed.

Mr. PLUMB. And worse than all, perhaps, Mr. President, the issue of the scrip representing the amounts of land to which the colleges were entitled resulted in a very vicious disposition of large areas of the public lands in many cases. Immense fortunes were built up by dealing in that scrip. I have been told, on what I conceive to be perfectly good authority, that from one of the institutions in the Northern States their certificates for the location of lands were bought for the price of a dollar and a quarter an acre, while the lands on which the scrip was located were worth from $25 to $100 per acre.

Mr. PADDOCK. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

Mr. PADDOCK. A great deal of that scrip was sold at 60 cents an acre.

Mr. PLUMB. Some of it was sold, as the Senator from Nebraska says, as low as 60 cents an acre. That I refer to incidentally in speaking of the inequality of endowment which resulted from the original act.

Now, we have these agricultural colleges. I know very little about their operation except as I get it in a general way, save as it relates to the college in my own State. If the work they have done generally compares favorably with the work of that institution, the result has been beneficial.

I do not know of any educational institution anywhere, in the East or in the West, in this country or abroad, that does not need, for the purpose which it feels to be important to its maintenance and the spread of its power and influence, more money. Therefore I have no doubt that these colleges would make use of this extra sum of money if we should give it to them, and I have no doubt that use would be on the whole in the right direction; I should hope also that it might be in the direction of the giving of a more thorough agricultural education than has heretofore been the case. In other words, I should hope it would more and more conform to the terms of the original act of endowment and to the idea which was in the mind of Congress and of the distinguished Senator from Vermont who originated the plan.

Now, if we are to give anything in the shape of money, it must come out of the Treasury in one way or another. We can not make this appropriation out of the proceeds of the public lands and of the sums that we may get from different railroads, and deceive anybody into the belief that it does not cost the people of the United States anything. If these institutions are worthy objects of support why not give them the money directly out of the Treasury, unembarrassed by any other consideration? Is it fair to the colleges to say, "We have got a lot of old accounts that we can not collect, or that we do not know whether we shall collect or not, but if we do collect anything you shall have it?" It may create an appetite which we shall never be able to satisfy except by making a direct appropriation finally. It is not assuming the proper relation to them as the subjects of national support.

But, Mr. President, I object to this first section, not alone on the ground I have stated, but on much more important ground. We are to give to these colleges this money out of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands. The first section is practically a dedication of all the moneys that we shall receive from public-land sales to the purposes of scholastic agricultural education. Whatever that fund may be, upon the equities of the case as it will be construed by the colleges, the colleges will be entitled to it. We shall have a new element, therefore, entering into the management of our public-land system.

We ought to have a definite policy in regard to the public lands which shall not be modified by any considerations of local expediency. There is a great area of land which ought to be held in trust for beneficial uses for the people of the United States, for the occupancy of men who make upon them their homes, and for no other purpose, and we never ought to subject ourselves to the temptation that we shall make any use of them except that, nor put any person, or any corporation, or any institution, in the attitude of becoming a solicitor at the doors of Congress to have that done in regard to the public-land system which otherwise would not be done. We can not afford to have our public-land system embarrassed in its administration by considerations of this sort.

Then, Mr. President, we have here a provision that all the funds which are received from railroads shall be likewise a part of this educational fund upon the books of the Treasury and in the vaults of the Treasury. There are, so far as my memory now serves me, two classes of revenues derived from railroads. One, and much the smaller, is what is called the surveying fund. The Pacific railroads, by the twenty-first section of the act of 1864, were required to pay into the Treasury of the United States the cost of the survey of their lands. By the act chartering the Northern Pacific Railroad, giving to it its land grant, it was required to pay the cost of surveying the land, the Government in both cases incurring the expense and the companies undertaking before the patents were received to reimburse the Government. That is one fund. How much it amounts to I do not know; but probably several million dollars before it is concluded.

The other fund arises, of course, out of the loan of the credit of the United States to these railroads in the shape of the bonds of 1865, 1866, and succeeding years during the construction of the Pacific roads. The debt represented by those bonds is to-day in round numbers $100,000,000. We have presented to us already through the medium of the Pacific Railroad Committee a proposition for a settlement with those companies, about which I will not say anything now except that when we come to consider what we shall do with those railroads we ought to be under no constraint that will not permit us to deal with them from the highest standpoint of the public policy which is involved. We ought not to have colleges in different portions of the United States here, at any stage of the proceedings by which we settle the obligations of those railroads to the Government, saying, "settle this way," or "settle that way, in order that we may have a swift realization of the promise you have made that we shall have this fund for the benefit of the colleges."

It is unwise legislation. If we are going to give these colleges money let us give it to them directly out of the Treasury. That is the only frank, manly, honest way to act.

But, Mr. President, there are hundreds of embarrassments that will arise in the administration of this first section. Suppose, for instance, that the payment for any one year from the public lands and from the railroads both combined does not equal the $25,000 a year each which we limit these institutions to by a subsequent section.

Mr. BLAIR. Fifteen thousand dollars, to begin with, until it comes to $25,000, and they are limited to that.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, the maximum is $25,000 under this bill. Suppose we do get that, what then? Does any one doubt that the colleges will come here and say: "We have got our appetites prepared for this entire sum. We have our professors employed. We have these instrumentalities of education engaged; and you must give us this money out of the Treasury?" Does any one doubt that we would do it? Then, why not do it in the first instance?

But suppose more than $25,000 per annum for each institution is realized, as will probably be the case. We have dedicated by this first section all this fund to the purposes of scholastic agricultural education. We have become the trustees by an act of Congress of this fund for the benefit of the agricultural colleges of the United States. The entire fund, first and last, will probably be $200,000,000. They will come here and insist that as we have dedicated this fund to them, the limitation of the preceding Congress ought to be removed, and they will have great claim upon us on that score. They will say that this limitation here was not conclusive; that "if you had intended only to limit it to $25,000 per annum why did you provide for these vast sums aggregating $200,000,000? If you intended only to give us the pittance of $25,000 a year each out of it, what was the necessity of putting in this great dedication?"

Who does not realize that that limitation is a mere temporary expedient, practically the sugar-coating of this bill? The public will so regard it; and Congress by passing the bill practically says, this is the educational fund, and this limitation is only for temporary purposes.

Then, Mr. President, we shall have an unequal annual dividend to these institutions. Some years there will be $50,000 apiece, perhaps; some years there will be $100,000, and some years probably $200,000 apiece, and we shall have endowed them more munificently than any institutions of the kind were ever endowed in the history of the world. I do not mean to say that is not right, but I want the Senator who says we ought to give $200,000,000 to these agricultural colleges to put that into black and white in order that the people may understand it, and that Congress may know what it is to pay and make the appropriation direct out of the Treasury.

I do not mean to say that the question of this amount of money is one that ought to concern us very much; and yet in my judgment, within two years of this time, whoever proposes on this floor or in the other branch of Congress to make an appropriation which shall perceptibly add to the annual supply bill will of necessity be required to put with it a provision to raise the revenue to pay it.

Mr. COCKRELL. In less time than that.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Missouri says in less time than that. I agree with him. In eighteen months from now whoever proposes the addition of a million of dollars to the annual budget will have to provide with it the means of raising the revenue to pay it.

On the threshold of this condition of things it is proposed to take these enormous revenues, segregate them from the funds of the Treasury, put them out of circulation in a place where there is already $150,000,000 more of the people's money than there ought to be, to the great harm of the country, and to put it there as a fund either to be withdrawn wholly from circulation and remain there to accumulate or else to be there the prey of solicitation by these institutions that we shall give it to them according to the dedication contained in this first section.

Mr. President, whatever is necessary from a public standpoint I am willing to vote. If this section and a succeeding one which is in the same line shall be eliminated, I will vote for the bill, granting a maximum of $25,000 a year, or about a million three or four hundred thousand dollars, to be continued until the end of time. But I will not vote for any bill which, under the pretense of voting $1,300,000 a year, opens the door inevitably and necessarily to the donation out of the Treasury of the United States of as vast a sum as that of which I have spoken, and which at the same time puts us in embarrassing relations with these institutions concerning important questions of public policy.

Mr. President, it seems to me at this time, with a bill on our table about which there are various opinions as to its effect upon the revenues, with legislation that is pending on the table of the Presiding Officer which will add to the annual expenses of the Government not less than fifty and probably equal to sixty million dollars per annum, it seems to me that this is an unwise time to enter upon an indefinite expense of this character, and that if there ever was a time when we ought to determine carefully and prudently what we shall do with the public funds it is now. We may need, as we clearly shall within a very brief period of time, much of the Pacific Railroad fund to piece out the expenses of the Government, which are going to overrun the revenues, and we shall need similarly to take from the funds derived from the sales of public lands.

And yet, sir, we are going ahead with expenditures and with propositions for additional burdens upon the people just as though we were in the heyday of that surplus about which we have heard so much in the last few years, but which has been vanishing like a snow bank under the rays of the summer sun, until now it practically has no longer any existence.

I shall move at the proper time to strike out the first section, and if that should prevail, also the seventh and eighth sections. Looking at the eighth section now reminds me that it contains a provision that this shall not be construed to affect or limit the power of Congress over the public-land system or any future law in regard to railroads, as though one Congress could bind another—the merest pretense, totally unnecessary, and to be utterly ineffective, in view of the pressure of which I have spoken.

If this bill passes one of two things we shall be under the necessity of doing, as I said, in a very brief period of time—either to yield wholly to the demands of these institutions up to the full amount provided for in the first section, which, as I said, will amount to a total of at least $200,000,000 before this act will cease to operate, or we shall be obliged to withdraw it altogether, to the very great hurt of the institutions. We ought either to go forward cautiously now with our feet upon solid ground, incurring obligations only of a character which we know we can fairly meet, or we ought not to go at all.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I am aware of the great ability of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] whenever he tackles any bill, and I regret that he is not of the same hearty opinion in favor of this bill as his predecessors were in 1862, both of whom here exerted a very strong influence in favor of the passage of the act of that year.

The Senator from Kansas expresses a willingness to appropriate this money out of the Treasury, but he objects to it in consequence of the dedication of all the proceeds of the public lands and all the debts due to the Government from the Pacific endowed railroads being pledged to these institutions. Any one who will read the bill will see that it is utterly without the slightest foundation. All that it proposes is that the appropriations which are to be made to the several States and Territories under the act for the benefit of colleges shall be made from funds arising from receipts and credits thereon on account of public lands and the railroads.

Then there is this magnificent display of what these colleges are going to call for. He says one Congress can not bind the next. Even if this first section did bind Congress, it could be repealed. But there is no such phraseology here that allows the meaning put upon it by the Senator from Kansas. The amount is very pitiable. In the first instance there will be but about $750,000 appropriated so long as there is $15,000 a year paid to each institution; and when the whole sum of $25,000 shall be reached, ten years hence, it will only amount to $1,250,000, or a little less, perhaps.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator please explain why not just make an appropriation right out of the Treasury instead of complicating it with this kind of a system of book-keeping?

Mr. MORRILL. For the reason that it has always been regarded that the Congress of the United States has a right to dispose of the public lands for any purpose that it may see fit, provided the object shall be one of national import and equally applicable to all the States; and these debts that are due to us are as much a part of the public lands as the lands themselves.

Mr. PLUMB. How does that apply to the provisions in regard to the railroad funds?

Mr. MORRILL. I say that the debt due to us from the railroads was derived from the public lands.

Mr. PLUMB. Not at all; not a dollar of it.

Mr. MORRILL. We recouped them. Nearly all the companies got—

Mr. PLUMB. The debt is represented by bonds of the United States outstanding, by virtue of which the Government has a statutory lien upon the railroads. It has no more relation to the lands than if the roads were built upon the water.

Mr. MORRILL. Nearly all the actual debt the companies owe of their own right has been derived from the public lands.

Mr. President, the power of Congress is reserved at the end of the bill to repeal or amend, or do anything in relation to the public lands or these railroads that they may see fit and proper to do.

I will say, while on my feet, that the amendments which are now pending were inserted by the Committee on Education and Labor, and I suppose that they had a proper consideration of the subject. I did not see fit to make any opposition to them except to amend them and make them a little more broad. I should have no sort of objection to those amendments going out, but I do not desire to change the bill from what it was reported by the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLAIR obtained the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator from New Hampshire begins—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BLAIR. He only desires to ask a question, I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; relating to the first section.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator from Vermont now to state that this appropriation of the funds derived from the railroads is not the entire indebtedness of these railroads and does not include the sinking fund provided for by the act of May 7, 1878. If it is not intended to dedicate that fund, I think the phraseology here is rather unfortunate, and without interfering with the bill more than I think I ought, I hope some suggestion will be made to exclude that idea.

Mr. BLAIR. In what part of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I allude to the first section, because under this first section, if the interpretation of the Senator from Kansas is the correct interpretation, there will be two or three million dollars of this money flowing annually into this fund, and there will be at once a fund of over $10,000,000 that will be transferred to it without a single moment's delay, because there is now in that sinking fund a large amount. I do not remember the exact sum, but I think it is certainly over $10,000,000, and it may be over $12,000,000.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator will look at the last part of section 1 he will see that only so much of that as may be necessary is appropriated. It only provides that the appropriations made under the bill shall be taken from funds arising from this source, so far as may be necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand, but of course when that is done this fund is dedicated to this particular purpose, it seems to me. If that is not the intention, I hope it will be excluded. If the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me just one word more, I should like to call his attention to another point. I notice by referring to section 8 of the act—

Mr. DOLPH. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to call his attention—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Iowa or to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ALLISON. In a moment I will yield. I want to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to section 8 of the act of 1878, wherein this fund is set apart already for another purpose, and it is for sometime to come.

Mr. MORRILL. That is, the experiment-station fund is set apart so far as $15,000 a year is concerned.

Mr. PLUMB. No, that has always been paid out of the Treasury, every dollar of it.

Mr. ALLISON. We appropriate annually in the agricultural appropriation bill five hundred and some odd thousand dollars for that purpose.

Mr. DOLPH. What I desire to suggest is that the second section makes this appropriation out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated:

That there shall be, and hereby is, annually appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Is not that a contradiction of the provisions of the first section and a repeal of that?

Mr. ALLISON. I think it is, and for that reason I made the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas, and asked him if the appropriation by the second section was not an addition to the dedication in the first section.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, but that is a mere question of phraseology. Of course, if the policy provided for in the second section prevails, a change of phraseology would undoubtedly follow, because that is the kernel of the whole thing. There is to be a segregation of this large sum of money in the Treasury as an educational fund for the benefit of the agricultural colleges of the United States. The balance of it is mere "leather and prunello." It is only the step by which we propose now to gradually approach the subtraction of that fund for the benefit of these institutions.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say, for one, if that is the purpose of this section I can not give it my support, because I do not want to dedicate now $100,000,000 for this special purpose. Of course I am in entire sympathy with the object of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the last amendment of the bill as reported is to amend the title so as to read, "A bill to apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands and the receipts from certain land-grant railroad companies to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts established under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862," which modification of the title of the bill is designed so that the title may indicate what the bill will be if passed as reported from the committee and proposed to be amended.

I want to say in regard to this bill and the amendments to it that there are no amendments made to the bill which have not been designed to effectuate the purpose of the bill itself as revealed in its original form. There had to be some modifications in order that it might meet the concurrence of the committee to such an extent as to be reported, and as it now stands it was reported unanimously.

The idea of the bill is, as the Senate will of course understand, rooted in the original measure introduced in the Senate some ten or twelve years ago by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], which proposed a dedication of the fund to be derived from the public lands and from the railroads, or rather the interest to be derived from those funds as the annual payments came into the Treasury, and provided for the annual application of that interest, one part of it to the support of the agricultural colleges and another part of it the support of the common schools. That bill passed the Senate, I think, twice; I do not know but more. The amount involved, being the annual interest upon a very small sum, was thought by many not to be tangible or of consequence to the existing condition of illiteracy in the country; and about 1881 there was a bill reported proposing to make a specific appropriation for the benefit of the common schools of the country. That was discussed from time to time and passed through the Senate, until finally at the present session it met with a repulse, and is now upon the table on a motion to reconsider.

When that action had been taken at the present session the Senator from Vermont introduced his original bill, but changing it in such a way as to give not the interest upon the proceeds, but a portion of the proceeds outright for the use of schools annually and also making provision for the agricultural colleges. That bill was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and the committee, mindful of the opposition which the idea of an appropriation for common schools had received, informed the Senator that there was great difficulty in securing the passage of the bill through the committee in that form, there being a strong anxiety felt by the committee in some way make provision for the agricultural colleges.

I may say that the representatives of the agricultural colleges came before the committee and were heard, and heard thoroughly and fully, and they made such investigation as to the condition of sentiment in Congress as satisfied them that they would do better not to burden themselves in the effort to secure an appropriation for their colleges or entangle themselves, I should say, with the other idea with reference to the common schools of the country.

This condition of things being made known to the Senator from Vermont, and the strong impression of the committee upon the matter being made known also, a second bill was introduced by the Senator, which is this bill, drawn with the idea of making provision for the agricultural colleges alone, and entirely excluding the idea of the common schools or any interference with or connection with the common schools of the country.

The first section of this bill is there because the Senator from Vermont deemed it to be of great consequence. The idea of the committee was to make a direct appropriation, according to the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas, of the necessary amounts, but for reasons which the Senator has stated, and with great force, this section was included and remains in the bill, and is reported favorably by the committee. The committee have made in the first section a change by the addition of these words:

So long as such receipts and credits shall be sufficient therefor.

As this was designed to be a perpetual appropriation, the time of course must be contemplated when the fund coming from the sale of the public lands, which is largely diminishing, or likely to diminish from year to year until entirely exhausted within a few years, and also the receipts from the indebtedness of the railroads shall both entirely disappear, and until such times the $15,000 first and ultimately $25,000 to each college is to be paid from the proceeds of the public lands and from the receipts coming from the railroads, only "so long as such receipts and credits shall be sufficient therefor."

But, contemplating the time when there may be a deficiency, the second section makes provision for an appropriation of the necessary moneys out of the funds in the Treasury. That is in no wise inconsistent with the provision of the previous section that these funds shall come so far as is necessary from the receipts from the public lands and from the income from the railroads, because those funds go into the public Treasury, and an appropriation, as in the second section, out of the funds in the public Treasury would be grammatically and really correct, notwithstanding the appropriation to a specific use of the funds arising from the public lands and the railroads as contained in the first section, the whole being like other assets of the country in the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator to explain whether he understands that the first section dedicates what is known as the sinking fund and the amount that is paid into the Treasury on account of the Pacific railroads to this fund, or, if not the whole of it, any part?

Mr. BLAIR. I do not understand that it is so designed. The amount that comes from these funds is only a very small proportion of the actual receipts.

Mr. ALLISON. It is over $2,000,000 annually now.

Mr. BLAIR. The receipts from the railroads?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; under the act of 1878.

Mr. BLAIR. The receipts from the public lands have averaged some $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 a year for ten years past. One year the receipts were some nine or ten million dollars.

Mr. ALLISON. I know.

Mr. BLAIR. But they are likely to diminish largely in the future. Now, I do not understand that any amount, except so much as is necessary to meet this annual charge, is appropriated or is understood to be appropriated or set apart for the use of the agricultural colleges.

Mr. MORRILL. That is all; no more.

Mr. ALLISON. Then there is no dedication of any of these funds?

Mr. BLAIR. There is not designed to be, not the slightest.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I hope that will be stricken out.

Mr. BLAIR. There is a dedication to the amount which is to go to the colleges, provided that amount coming from these sources is in the public Treasury. Of course that will continue to be the case for many years to come.

Mr. ALLISON. It will be a constantly accumulating fund. If we are only to pay out $25,000 each to these colleges, this railroad debt of itself put at reasonable interest in the Treasury and the income from the sales of the public lands would produce an enormous income, far beyond the amount appropriated or suggested in this bill, annually.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Vermont informs me that he had no such idea, and I never supposed that there was an appropriation of anything annually.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no such idea in the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no such dedication.

Mr. ALLISON. Then the section ought to be stricken out, I submit to the Senator from Vermont, because it will be so construed by other people.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think it will.

Mr. BLAIR. But to go on with such explanations as I think necessary to make in view of the arguments of Senators; in the third section is the next amendment of the committee. It consists of the insertion of the words "upon the order of the trustees of the college." That is merely a provision with reference to the manner in which the funds shall be drawn, and it was inserted at the suggestion, I may say, of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], whom I do not now see in his seat, and is a very harmless and at the same time very useful amendment, not at all bearing, however, upon the general merits of the bill.

I come now to the sixteenth line of the third section, where there is this amendment by way of addition: Speaking of the report to be made to the Secretary of Agriculture and also to the Commissioner of Education on or before the 1st day of September of each year, requiring a detailed statement of the amount so received and of its disbursement, these words are added by the committee:

Showing specifically its application to instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts and the facilities for such instruction.

That Senators may feel sure that there is no trap designed here by the committee, and, that the Senator from Vermont may not feel that he must disclaim it because it was reported by the committee or indicate his willingness that it should be stricken out, I want to say that those words were inserted on the suggestion of Mr. Bingham, who appeared as representing the National Grange of Patrons of Husbandry, and, I think it was, Colonel Polk, who represented the Farmers' Alliance. They were quite anxious that this language should go in, and it was indorsed and recommended, too, by the committee of the agricultural colleges, who were present and manifested great zeal and anxiety about the bill, because these representatives of the farmers said that the farming interest felt that in many of the States these funds were being diverted from agricultural education and education in the mechanic arts, and that if this large additional amount—much more, as the Senate will perceive, than the interest on the original investment made on the public lands—if this annual amount, supporting the colleges very largely, is to be appropriated year after year, this tendency to divert the appropriation of Congress in other directions should be corrected by a specific provision requiring the application of the fund for the benefit of education in agriculture and in the mechanic arts. That is why the language is there, that the report shall show "specifically its application to instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts, and the facilities for such instruction." The remainder of the amendatory language of that section comes from another source:

The grants of money authorized by this act are made subject to the legislative assent of the several States and Territories to the purpose of said grants.

No Senator can complain that this is a provision looking to the enlargement of our nationality and the swallowing up of the children of the country in the vortex of national power. It is not a national whole by any means, and these poor little Jonahs are safe so far as this provision of the bill is concerned. It was inserted with direct deference to, and humble humility and obsequious prostration before, the idea of States' rights, understood distinctly to be so, and upon the suggestion of members of the committee.

Mr. DAWES. I will ask the Senator if he thinks it is wise—

Mr. BLAIR. I certainly think it is wise. I am not one of those, let it be distinctly understood, who wish the National Government to interfere with or to have control of the educational institutions of the States, either the common schools of the States, or these institutions, or any other of the educational institutions of the States or within the States. I am for the application of the resources of the General Government through the forces of the common schools and other institutions of the State to the ends of legitimate education within the States, and I think—

Mr. DAWES. Right on that question may I ask if the Senator thinks it is wise—

Mr. BLAIR. I was defining my position.

Mr. DAWES. I did not ask the Senator to define his position.

Mr. BLAIR. I had a right to do so. Perhaps the Senator did not ask me—

Mr. DAWES. I thought the Senator would allow me to put my question.

Mr. BLAIR. Besides that, I supposed I had the floor.

Mr. DAWES. I did not suppose the Senator had not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BLAIR. I shall be very glad to hear the Senator's question. I thought I did answer it.

Mr. DAWES. I wanted to know of the Senator whether he thinks it wise to bring up the children of this country in the idea that the General Government is subordinate to the States in carrying on these schools.

Mr. BLAIR. Oh, no; the Senator asked me no such question as that. But I do think it well for the children of this country—

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator answer that?

Mr. BLAIR. I will. If the Senate desires to hear me I have no objection to delivering a lecture on constitutional law, with my views upon the subject at length, though I feel ordinarily great hesitation in addressing the Senate at any length. I do not believe that it would be well to bring up the children of the country in the idea that the National Government is subordinate to the States.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator said with meek humility that the committee agreed to submit to the States and get their consent.

Mr. BLAIR. No, I did not use the expression "meek humility." The RECORD will show that I did not. If the Senator desires to hear me, I submit that the ordinary rule should be complied with by him. He would hardly be allowed in a moot court to interfere with the charge of a judge in this way.

I was saying that I do not believe in the idea of training the children of the country in the view that the National Government is subordinate in its powers to the powers of the States; nor do I believe in training the children of the country in the idea that the States are subordinate in their powers to those of the General Government. I believe that both are independent and are sovereign each within its proper sphere.

I was saying to the Senator that I believe, in the matter of education, it is well and right and proper that through the institutions of the States education should be given to the children who live within them. I adhere to the power that the National Government has of self-defense, and when the parent and the State both neglect the proper education of the children living within their jurisdiction, so that the child becomes incapable of discharging his duty as a citizen either of the State or of the United States, then the nation has the power of necessity, in self-defense it has the power, to educate those who are to be the State and are to be the nation, so that they may exercise the powers of self-government. Any other theory is a destruction of a republican form of government in the nation as well as in the States.

But this particular provision is consistent with the original act by virtue of which the agricultural colleges were created. As I understand it, these funds were all taken, accepted by the States; the agricultural colleges are in fact the creation of the joint action of the nation and the States acting together; and most of them, I think all of them, are now more largely maintained, not from funds derived from this original appropriation by the Government, but from regular annual appropriation made by the States. What the Government did was really to put in the original plant. Now, the Government has gone further and recently made an appropriation for the maintenance of what are known as experiment stations. Just at this moment it is the amount of $15,000 a year. These appropriations have been accepted in the various States by action of the Legislatures of the States. This appropriation, made for the general uses and support of the agricultural colleges, is merely made with the assent of the States in conformity to all the legislation that appertains to the entire subject from the beginning.

But I made the suggestion that this was not open to the objection which was urged by some Senators on this floor, that there was an effort to grasp the control of the children and the institutions of the States, because the acceptance of this grant is made specifically dependent upon the action of the Legislatures of the States, as in fact it has been always hitherto:

The grants of moneys authorized by this act are made subject to the legislative assent of the several States and Territories to the purpose of said grants: Provided, That payments of such installments of the appropriation herein made as shall become due to any State before the adjournment of the regular session of the Legislature meeting next after the passage of this act shall be made upon the assent of the governor thereof, duly certified to the Secretary of the Treasury.

This language, the whole of it, does not come from a source that would be objected to by those who raise this objection to the bill.

The fourth section has no amendments which are not necessary in order to conform to the changes made in the bill on its second introduction. As first introduced by the Senator from Vermont, contemplating the creation of a fund, the language was consistent throughout. When the second draught was introduced by him it was found that the necessary corrections had not been made in the body of the bill. So the committee made some miscellaneous and otherwise unimportant amendments, but which were indispensable in order to have the bill consistent with its idea of providing only for the agricultural colleges.

The fifth section was stricken out in order to negative the idea of a permanent fund. I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Kansas to this action in striking out the fifth section, which is one alluding to the permanent fund and was designed to be a correction of the idea of the creation of a permanent fund that was in the original bill.

Mr. PLUMB. That is, if I understand the Senator, the Senator from Vermont, who introduced this bill, according to his view intended to create a permanent fund and the committee have stricken it out.

Mr. BLAIR. Originally, years ago, the idea was to take these payments as they came in year by year, set them apart in the Treasury for all time, and thus to create a permanent fund, the interest whereon (which in the far future would be very large, but in the present would be very small, of course) would be appropriated and distributed among the various States according to population after a certain period, so that there would in that case have been a permanent fund; and this provision of the old bill crept into the draught which was first referred to the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. Merely by accident. I very hastily prepared the bill, after having been informed of the position of the chairman and of the committee.

Mr. BLAIR. Traces of it appeared through other sections, which the committee struck out, all with the idea of making the bill conform with the views of the Senator, which merely are, as I understand, this immediate source of revenue, and taking it from it might meet some of the objections, as he supposed, on the floor of the Senate, so that this appropriation for education in the agricultural colleges might be derived so long as those funds lasted.

I have commented upon all of the amendments. Now we come to the ninth section, which is stricken out in full and stricken out for the reason that members of the committee objected to any legislation which could in any wise seem to tie up the income from the public lands or to interfere with the system of their disposition in any way whatever. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], whom I do not now see, who, being from a Western State, was peculiarly sensitive in regard to what might be done with the public lands, objected to that section so vigorously that in the next section an amendment was draughted which entirely met all his objections and secured his full concurrence, and as a result of it a unanimous report of the committee in support of the bill as proposed to be amended.

I wish to say with reference to the amendment which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has objected to, the language of which was put into the bill as it stands, inserted upon the motion of the Senator from Vermont, and which attracted his objection, the exact form of which I do not now recollect—that language is not recommended by the committee, and is not deemed by those, so far as I know, representing these institutions as at all essential. If it has anything to do with the support which might be received by the bill on the floor of the Senate, I should be very glad if the Senator from Vermont would consent that that language should be stricken out.

Mr. MORRILL. I will consent.

Mr. BLAIR. It is not helpful.

Mr. HAWLEY. Which language is that?

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Secretary please read the amendment to the amendment reported by the committee, in the way of an addition after the word "instruction" in the eighteenth line of the third section?

The Secretary read as follows:

Including the various branches of mathematical, physical, natural, and economic science, with special reference to their applications in the industries of life, and in a thorough training in the English language.

Mr. MORRILL. I should prefer to have the whole stricken out after the word "disbursement," in line 16.

Mr. BLAIR. I will just say in regard to those words, "showing specifically its application to instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts and the facilities for such instruction," the representatives of the farmers' organizations of the country made their support of the bill conditional upon the insertion of those words, as I was informed.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator will allow me to suggest if this does not repeal the act of 1872, which provides that—

An annual report shall be made regarding the progress of each college, recording any improvements and experiments made, with their cost and results and such other matters, including State industrial and economical statistics, as may be supposed useful.

That is already provided for.

Mr. BLAIR. No, this only relates to the fund appropriated by this bill. It could have no relation whatever to the control or management of the funds derived from the original appropriation.

Mr. HAWLEY. But if this is in addition?

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to say to the Senator and to the Senate that I do not see any anxiety in reference to the retention of that language. I only stated to the Senate that it was deemed to be very important by the representatives of the great interests chiefly concerned in the appropriation provided by the bill.

Mr. President, I have but a word more to say. The report of the committee was printed in the RECORD the other day. It has never been read to the Senate. It presents a somewhat full and comprehensive view, a comparatively brief view of the condition and necessities of these institutions. It shows something of the vast influence for good that they have already exerted throughout the country, of the great possible development of their usefulness beyond the degree already attained, and it also shows, and it is information based upon the written statement made by their representatives before the committee, that the present time is a crucial period with them. As they look upon it throughout the country it is an emergency in the lives of these colleges. They are at a point, nearly all of them, where they imperatively need rescue from some source. They are helped in the Southern States, and in many of the other States they are helped to the extent of the ability of the States wherein they are located, but all too little is their power to accomplish the purpose for which they were created, and the demands are increasing upon them.

The people of the country, the common people of the country, "we, the people," are turning to these industrial institutions for the education of the rising generation with a vastly increased sense of the importance of industrial education as compared with education in any other form. These institutions are really the nuclei where this form of education must take root and from which it must expand throughout all portions of the country. These colleges are taking the lead in this regard and they need a little money. No appropriations save one for the common schools of the country, in my judgment, could be made which would reach and benefit so vast a number of the people of the United States as these sums distributed throughout all the States and the Territories for the benefit of these colleges.

The amount given is very small. Only three years ago we gave the amount which is given for these general purposes to the colleges by the provisions of this bill, simply for the establishment at each one of them of an experiment station. This money can be vastly more usefully distributed, as it will be, to secure the flow of the very life-current of these schools in this emergency in their existence.

As to the form of the bill, we have done the best we could to make it conform to the views of the Senator from Vermont, whose interest in these colleges has been almost life-long, existing for a generation, and who desires, and I think we would all second him in this desire for personal reasons as well as those which are identical with the public good also, that his wish should be gratified in this culmination of the means of permanent, perpetual support of this great system of institutions, which, if successful, as they must be if properly sustained, would of themselves almost insure the perpetuity of our institutions. There is no inclination and there has been none on the part of the committee to object to any sort of amendment which seemed to be necessary, but I do hope that the Senate will leave the bill as nearly in the form in which the Senator from Vermont desires it to be as shall be consistent with their sense of legislative duty.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I have been looking over this bill and it seems to me that it can be put into a form covering about one-half of the space and more distinctly accomplish the work needed.

I agree with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] in saying that these are very useful institutions, but I do not agree with him in representing them as in a state of pauperism practically. This is no special crucial period with them. They are doing well at Harvard to-day; they are doing well at New Haven; they are doing splendidly at Cornell; they are doing well in Pennsylvania, and in general these colleges are prosperous, with large numbers of students coming in and with very fair endowments, especially where they have taken any care of the original endowments.

Now, there are too many details and specifications and examinations and reports and intermeddlements in this bill as it stands, and I can do what the Senator from New Hampshire wants to do and gratify the patriotic aspirations and purposes of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], whom we all love, and make a simpler bill, one as simple as that Senator presented to Congress in 1862 and which was then adopted.

I concur with the objections that have been made to the first section of the bill. One has to study a good while to see that the provisions mean and the end and the upshot of it are simply that out of the Treasury of the United States we propose to give certain moneys.

Now, to meet the scruples of some people—and I do not say that I do not share in them—it is proposed that these moneys shall come from certain funds. I am quite willing to agree to that, but I do not care to attempt to designate all the receipts from the sales of public lands nor all the railroad credits. I am willing to say just this, and it will dispense with the whole of the first section:

That there shall be, and hereby is, annually appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury, the proceeds of the sales of public lands not otherwise appropriated, etc.

And if in the course of five years or ten or fifteen years the proceeds from the sales of public lands are not sufficient for the demands of the bill, we can find some other fountain, some other source to get the moneys from. That covers the whole of the first section, all the purposes of it.

Now let me read—and I beg pardon, for my bill is short and I want to read what I call my substitute—beginning at section 2 and calling it section 1:

That there shall be paid out of the proceeds of the sales of public lands—

I condense it a little—as hereinafter provided for, to each State and Territory for the more complete endowment and maintenance of colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts—

Why spend pages in describing the purpose? That is enough—or which may be hereafter established in accordance with an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862—

So much a year—

Provided, That there shall be no distinction of race or color.

That is my first section.

Certain sums of the proceeds of the sales of public lands shall be appropriated to these States for colleges under the act of 1862. You can not make any more out of it if you make four pages of it:

SEC. 2. That these sums shall be paid before the 31st day of July of each year by the Secretary of the Treasury, etc., to the State officer authorized to receive them.

You can not make any more of that if you make a page of it. Stop at the word "who," in line 10, on page 3 of section 2, and strike out the provision about the money after it has gone into the State treasury being subject to the draft of the treasurer of the college and paid upon his draft and all that.

You have got it into the hands of the State as such under the conditions of the act of 1862; and do the States not know enough to prescribe rules under which the money shall be paid on draft to the treasurer of the college? You do not want those other words, nor do you want the words "including the various branches of the mathematical, physical, natural, and economic science, with special reference to their applications in the industries of life," etc., because you donate the money by giving it to these established colleges for agriculture and the mechanic arts, and you can not help it by mere preaching. I would strike out all after the word "same," in line 9, of section 2, near the bottom of page 3, and going over to the words "English language," in line 23, on page 4, and make a new section 3:

The grants of moneys authorized by this act are made under the conditions specified in the act of July 2, 1862, and subject to the legislative assent of the several States and Territories for the purposes of said grant: Provided, That payments of such installments of the appropriation, etc.

Regulating the time of payment. That is enough of that. Then strike out section 4, down to the word "buildings" in line 14, on page 5. By the way, the reports referred to there are already provided for in the conditions which are accepted by the States, the conditions of the act of 1862, but that requires them to only be made to one Cabinet officer. Let this stand if you wish it:

An annual report by the president of each of said colleges shall be made to the Secretary of Agriculture, as well as to the Secretary of the Interior, regarding the condition and progress of each college, including statistical information in relation to its receipts and expenditures, its library, the number of its students and professors, etc.

And then the bill is done. All this conversation about the railroad funds and land grants and receipts from public lands is done away with and nothing need be added except a few lines.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut, what is the necessity for referring to the proceeds of the sales of public lands when all this money comes out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will repeat what was said by the Senator from Ohio, as perhaps his remark was not heard. He asks, why refer to the proceeds of sales of public lands at all, as this money comes out of the Treasury? That is a very sensible inquiry. For many years after the war Congress was in the habit of saying that the moneys required to support the homes for disabled volunteersoldiers should be taken from lapsed and forfeited moneys of soldiers who deserted and left money due them and from the fines and penalties upon soldiers, and all that, and it required forty clerks constantly employed to keep the accounts of the soldiers' homes, running over dead muster-rolls and records of courts-martial to find out where penalties had been inflicted and where soldiers deserted and add them up each year, and at the end of the month the treasurers of the soldiers' homes ran through and got the sums found to be due out of these old, moldy papers. It occurred to somebody that that would all go to the support of the soldiers' homes any way, and they discharged the forty clerks and paid to the soldiers' homes whatever money there was due a runaway soldier anywhere or fines incurred.

So, to be sure, if you are going to support these colleges, it is not necessary to say you take the money from any particular fund, for the money is an indistinguishable mass in the Treasury; like a hoghead of water, it does not make any particular pint that you can specify; but it does meet the scruples of many men to the support of this bill, the men who desire to be its friends and maintain and enlarge these colleges, because they hold that the public lands were in some mysterious way a different property from any other property of the United States and that the proceeds of their sale may be given, and as they have been given many times, a precedent well established. Those proceeds and those lands may be given as you propose in this bill, a little more freely than you would give the ordinary proceeds of taxation. That is why that remains there, because it will make votes and gratify scruples which are reasonably founded.

I am sure that what I have specified here, which will not make three pages, will add to the act of 1862, under the same conditions and specifications, a sum of money which every year will be valuable to these colleges. I omit, in the first place, the whole section about the public lands; in the next place, the machinery for getting the money out of the State treasurer's hands into the hands of the officers of the colleges. It will get there if you pay it to the State and the State accepts it.

In the next place, in section 4 it is provided that if this money "shall, by any action or contingency, be diminished or lost" there shall be no payment until it is paid up. That is in the act of 1862. I have provided for this being done under the provisions of that act. But here is something else:

or be applied to any purpose or object other than for instruction in agriculture and mechanic arts and facilities for such instruction.

It is the faculty of the State, and if it does not apply the money as it has agreed to do by its acceptance of the provisions of the act of 1862, then no further appropriation shall be paid to such State or Territory.

Mr. HOAR. But if the money intended for the college is misapplied?

Mr. HAWLEY. It shall be replaced by the Territory or State to which it belongs, and until so replaced no subsequent appropriation shall be paid.

Mr. HOAR. The State is the conduit or channel through which this money reaches the college.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not understand precisely the criticism.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the Senator's objection to this provision is that it is establishing a certain guardianship over the college and over the State and putting the State under a penalty. Now, as I understand, this goes to certain colleges in the States, to certain particular institutions, and those that are the beneficiaries under the statute of 1862, and there ought to be some control over these colleges.

The great temptation, and one of the greatest temptations that will come to an honest man very often is the temptation to apply a particular trust fund to some other trust or purpose which he thinks will subserve the public interest. As I understand the purpose of this provision of the Senator from Vermont, if the college misappropriates the money, the college having complete control of the money after it goes into its treasury, it shall be left simply alone, nothing shall happen; out it says that the college which makes that misappropriation does it at the risk of losing the bounty of Congress for the future unless the State shall see fit to make good the loss.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, I do not know that we differ. The act of 1862 says that—

• • • shall, by any action or contingency—

Which is very much this language—

be diminished or lost, it shall be replaced by the State to which it belongs, so that the capital of the fund shall remain forever undiminished.

That is already provided for.

Mr. HOAR. That is another proposition.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, the Senator says, as I understand him, that the State is the guarantor or trustee or guardian or master of the college and if the college wastes the money the State must make it good. I do not object to that particularly. I think that is already provided for, however. But this is so if they wish to pay, and in case the State shall lose any of the money the United States shall stop paying to it the annual payment. I have no particular objection to that.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, he either misunderstands me or I misunderstand him. I understood when I came in that he was making a criticism which I think has been made also on the other side of the Chamber, and that is if this act undertook to exercise a certain guardianship or supervision over the State it would put the State in an ignominious or at any rate in a dependent position. I asked the question whether the language was necessary to be repeated in the present bill or whether it should be left to the same provision of the statute of 1862. The same argument has been made with great earnestness against the provision of the bill of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], the old bill. I desire to call the attention of the Senator—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will please address the Chair.

Mr. HOAR. I am desiring to address the Chair, but I want to be heard by the Senator behind me as well, and so I turned to him.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator's face was turned this way.

Mr. HOAR. My face was turned toward the Senator.

Mr. President, I understand that there is nothing in this proposition, whether in this bill or any other, which is designed on the part of its framers to put the States under guardianship in any way, shape, or manner, or to exercise control over them or interfere with either their dignity or their power.

Mr. HAWLEY. I must ask the Senator to reserve his argument. I should rather make mine, and when I get through he can go on. I have not the courage to occupy the floor an hour or two, and while I am up I want to get through.

This is the phrase I more particularly object to:

or be applied to any purpose or object other than for instruction in agricultural and the mechanic arts and facilities for such instruction.

That provides for a continual supervision as to whether the funds which are divided among different professors shall go beyond the strict line of agriculture and the mechanic arts, because that is changing the terms of the act of 1862, which said those other elements of a liberal education need not be disregarded.

Mr. MORRILL. I am perfectly willing that that amendment should be stricken out and the amendment on the fourth page after the word "instruction," in line 18, down to and including the word "language," in line 23. I am willing to strike out both of those amendments.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator would perhaps consent to strike out the words beginning after the word "same," in line 9, on page 3, of section 3:

Who shall, upon the order of the trustees of the college, immediately pay over said sums to the treasurers of the respective colleges entitled to receive the same.

That is unnecessary; the money having been given to the treasury of the State under a contract with the State, we need not tell the treasurer how to pay it out. He has already contracted to pay it out.

Mr. MORRILL. I think it should be stated so as to go to the colleges.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Vermont does not object to striking out "or be applied to any purpose or object other than for instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts and facilities for such instruction."

Mr. MORRILL. Provided this other can be passed.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then if it "be diminished or lost it shall be replaced by the State or Territory to which it belongs, and, until so replaced, no subsequent appropriation shall be apportioned or paid to such State or Territory." I do not know that there is any objection to that. The whole of section 6, in my judgment, ought to be left out. It is the machinery which you differed so much about in discussing the Blair bill:

That the Commissioner of Education, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury as to each State and Territory whether it is entitled to receive its share of the annual appropriation.

Then it provides "if the Commissioner shall withhold a certificate from any State or Territory of its appropriation the facts and reasons therefor shall be reported to the President," etc. In my judgment neither the Secretary of the Interior nor the Commissioner of Education should have anything to do with withholding a certificate.

That on or before the 1st day of July in each year after the passage of this act the Commissioner of Education, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury as to each State and Territory whether it is entitled to receive its share of the annual appropriation for colleges under this act.

If the Commissioner shall withhold a certificate from any State or Territory of its appropriation the facts and reasons therefor shall be reported to the President, and the amount involved shall be kept separate in the Treasury until the close of the next Congress, in order that the State or Territory may, if it should so desire, appeal to Congress from the determination of the Commissioner.

There is the same vicious machinery. A subordinate officer of the Government is to stop the payment and summon the State to come here and answer to him or anybody else, I do not care who, as to whether it has wasted the appropriation—the same identical machinery!

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby charged with the proper administration of this law, through the Commissioner of Education; and they are authorized and directed, under the approval of the President, to make all needful rules and regulations not inconsistent with its provisions to carry this law into effect.

No rules and regulations are needed. The transaction can be completed in an hour each year by the payment of the annual sum, and the United States Government is done with it then, and under the act of 1862 the United States Government is done with it then.

Mr. HIGGINS. If there were a case of misrepresentation or misfeasance upon the part of the State, would the Senator have no remedy on the part of the General Government provided or would he leave it entirely to the State?

Mr. HAWLEY. Here is the place in section 4, and I do not see any objection to that, because it is substantially the old condition of the act of 1862, that if any of the fund is diminished or lost it shall be replaced by the State or Territory, or annual payments shall be stopped.

The original act of 1862 made a gift and was done with it, but we did put in a provision that if any portion of the money was wasted the State should make it good; but the General Government had no way of enforcing that, the final payment having been made; but in this case, it being in annual payments, if any of it should be thrown away the United States Government would under this clause, to which I do not object, have a right to say We stop making payments.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator with his permission a question which I will make in four words?

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. If that be there, then, instead of the section putting the State under a subordinate officer, we provide a method by which the matter shall be referred to Congress for its decision.

Mr. HAWLEY. It stands just like any other payment made by the Treasury. Thousands of payments are made from month to month and year to year, and the Treasury will stop making payments when they are perverted. Why then should the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Education be charged with the duty of making these rules and regulations, the act already having stated that if the money is not properly applied no further payments shall be made and the Secretary of the Treasury is to judge? There do not need to be any rules as to the manner of payment.

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall annually make a detailed report to Congress of the amount of receipts from the sales of public lands and from the railroads—

Which I think should be stricken out anyhow. In short, I mean to say in about three pages the whole thing may be done in compliance with the principles and rules of the act of 1862.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I had hoped that this measure might pass promptly, and yet I was unwilling that it should pass without my taking some little part in it to show the great interest of all the people of the State of New York, those engaged in education and those who had been educated in these colleges, that this additional aid should be given.

I should be very sorry if differences among the friends of the measure as to some details or methods or guaranties should lead to a defeat of the bill. I will be very glad to vote for the bill with all of the amendments, and I also shall be glad to vote for it without any of the amendments.

I believe that a closer examination of the matter under the debate that has now transpired would show that a simplification of the bill might be attempted which would remove most of the criticisms and at least remove the opposition in the vote that shall be taken.

The question between funds taken out of the Treasury and funds that come from public lands has been discussed very fully on the great educational bill for four or five years. My views on that subject are understood to be that as a constitutional question it is immaterial. Other eminent lawyers and Senators think otherwise, but I believe the great body of the Senators by their votes, as shown on the great educational bill in this body in preceding Congresses as well as this, have adopted the conclusion that they can not insist upon a distinction between the proceeds of lands and the general funds in the Treasury.

But, Mr. President, as we have an abundant resource to meet all these criticisms, I should be very glad to have conciliation upon that point with a protest only on my part that by yielding to it I am not disposed to encourage that distinction on any other similar bill.

The usefulness of these institutions in our State has been so conspicuous, I might say so brilliant, that no one I think but must wish that an increased power should be given to them. Besides what has been accomplished by these institutions directly under these endowments and under obligations, I imagine that a very considerable extension has been made in the same line of education in institutions without any such endowments and that have heretofore been exclusively devoted to the classics and the scientific courses of instruction. Therefore it seems to me that we ought to have some way out of an entanglement in unimportant considerations and that if we should have a bill that we could pass, as I am sure it would with almost general support on both sides of the Chamber, that would answer the practical purpose which we all value and which the public are looking with great interest upon.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President—

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator from Oregon will allow me, I merely wish to interpose an objection to the idea of delaying this bill. I very much regret that it has taken so much of the time of the Senate, and I had no idea that it would take so much. I hope that we shall conclude the debate and let the bill pass to-day. I do not want it referred back to a committee or have it delayed, because, if it passes at all through both Houses, it is necessary that it should be passed by the Senate promptly.

I shall be ready myself to agree, not to all of the suggestions of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], who seems to have come in here for the purpose of making an entirely new bill, but I will agree to strike out the first section and to insert, in section 3, line 2, the words "arising from the sales of the public lands."

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator will allow me to say right there that I did not come in for the purpose of making a new bill. The amendment he is making is exactly what suits me. I was myself going to move it.

Mr. MORRILL. I will also consent to the amendment on page 4, that all after the word "disbursement," in line 16 of section 3, down to the words "English language," in line 23, shall be stricken out; and I agree to the amendment on page 5 "or be applied to any purpose or object other than for instruction in agricultural and the mechanic arts and facilities for such instruction." And, of course, I agree to the amendment striking out the original fifth section.

Mr. HOAR. I think, if the Senator will allow me, the word "misapplied" should be inserted in line 5 of section 4.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes; that should be inserted. Also on page 6, am willing to strike out in line 18 section [6] 5, after the word "Education"—

And they are authorized and directed, under the approval of the President, to make all needful rules and regulations not inconsistent with its provisions to carry this law into effect.

Then there is the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] in relation to colored colleges that I should be willing to accept.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President—

Mr. PUGH. I ask to have the amendment which I propose to offer at the proper time read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. DOLPH. I yield for the purpose stated.

Mr. PUGH. It is to meet the situation in my State and in several others, and the Senator from Vermont having read the amendment has offered no objection to it, as I understand.

Mr. MORRILL. To come in at the end of section 2?

Mr. PUGH. To come in at the end of section 2.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 2:

Provided further, That the Legislature of any State in which institutions of like character have been established and are now being aided by such State out of its own revenue for the education of colored students in agricultural or the mechanical arts, whether styled colleges or not, and whether they have or not received any money heretofore under the act to which this is an amendment, may appropriate any portion of the fund received under this bill to such institutions so established and aided by such State as a compliance with the provision in reference to separate colleges for white and colored students.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I am in hearty sympathy with the object of this bill, which is to grant to the several States certain sums of money, commencing with $15,000 a year and being increased until the same reaches $25,000 a year, in aid of agricultural colleges, and I am not particular as to the conditions upon which the grant is made. Senators may settle the conditions to suit themselves, and if the amendments which the Senator from Vermont says he is willing to accept are adopted, then I shall have no objection to the bill; but I was prepared to show that the fund estimated for the next fiscal year to arise from the sale of public lands is $7,000,000.

Mr. TELLER. How much?

Mr. DOLPH. Seven million dollars, and the fund estimated to be raised from the Pacific railways is $2,000,000, making a total of $9,000,000.

This first section does something more than to require a statement of accounts between the United States and the railroad companies and the receipts of the public lands over and above the necessary disbursement for the disposal of the public domain. In my judgment it makes, as it came from the committee, a special dedication of all these proceeds and the amounts received from the railroads for all future time; that is, it creates a separate fund and withdraws those proceeds of the sales of public lands and amounts received from railroad companies from the general fund. Now I will read the clause:

and the appropriations which are to be made to the several States and Territories under this act for the benefit of colleges—

Not each annual appropriation—shall be made from funds in the Treasury.

They must be "in the Treasury," and therefore it must be a special fund, or it would not be there and it could not be expended—arising from receipts and credits therein on account of the public lands and railroads aforesaid, so long as such receipts and credits shall be sufficient therefor.

Not each annual appropriation from the receipts of each year, but from the total receipts arising from the fund which is hereby created just as long as that is sufficient to make this annual appropriation, which will only be $1,200,000, or one million two hundred and fifty thousand when the maximum is reached by the bill. So we should have for the time being and perhaps for the next twenty-five years we should have set apart as a special fund, unemployed, not less than from five to ten million dollars, and that would be constituted a special fund to pay this appropriation a hundred years hence, when there were no longer any receipts from public lands.

That was my objection. Besides, it would repeal, in my judgment, the provision for payment to the States of 5 per cent. of the public-land proceeds; and how much further it would interfere with the general dispositions of the proceeds of the public lands I do not know. I have become pretty careful about these propositions since there was smuggled into—I do not know that I ought to say that—but since there was a provision incorporated into the sundry civil bill, as I understand, in conference a year or two ago, by which nearly all the western half of this continent, so far as embraced in the boundaries of the United States, can be withdrawn from settlement and people who have lived on them under the various land laws of the United States cut off from obtaining their titles. I never heard of that provision until I heard of it about two months ago.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator and the Senate in relation to that provision that it was the exact provision inserted in that appropriation bill and agreed to by the friends of the irrigation scheme, and was not in any sense the act of the Committee on Appropriations as distinguished from the act and wish and judgment of those who desired that appropriation.

Mr. DOLPH. Then it was a very bad judgment.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator will allow me I will state that about 30,000,000 acres of that land are ready to be opened by the proclamation of the President.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from Oregon will allow me, I should like to correct the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DOLPH. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. TELLER. That provision was not put in by the friends of the irrigation movement at all, but was a hostile amendment put on in the other House.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will find that the advocates of that measure appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and urged it.

Mr. TELLER. It might have been assented to under a construction that could easily have been put upon it and was professedly put upon it by those who put it in, but the Department since then have given it an entirely different construction.

Mr. ALLISON. The allegation was that in some indirect way an important amendment had been inserted. I only want to say in justification of the action of the committee—because I remember that whole affair thoroughly—that, as is suggested by the Senator from Colorado, it was put on in the other House, and it was modified in the conference committee to meet the views, as was supposed, of those friendly to that legislation. It was never intended or supposed by anybody that it would have the effect to segregate all the public lands beyond a particular line.

Mr. DOLPH. I have been a member of the Committee on Public Lands ever since I entered the Senate, and I think that at every session that committee has considered the question of desert lands and reported some bill upon that subject, and I never heard or imagined until two months ago that there was any such provision in the statutes of the United States as the provision alluded to. It never came before the Committee on Public Lands for consideration, and I undertake to say that the way it is construed it is the most atrocious piece of legislation as far as the West is concerned that has ever been enacted. I am not complaining of Major Powell or the Geological Survey. I do not care how much money Congress appropriates for Major Powell or for that office; but I say it would be a great outrage upon the people of the West if nearly one-half of the territory of the West was to be withdrawn from settlement—not only from future settlement, but withdrawn so that people who have settled under the existing land laws of the United States can not obtain title. The sooner that invidious legislation is repealed and the sooner, if we want to legislate in regard to desert lands, that we proceed to do it advisedly the better. That is all I have to say.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to strike out the first section of the bill.

The Senator from Vermont indicated that he was willing to consent to that.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, the law of 1888, as it passed the Senate, provided that the water places for reservoirs and ditches should be reserved from private entry, the object being to prevent in the arid regions the water of those regions from being monopolized so that people could not settle the country without paying tribute to those who happened to get hold of the water. The bill went to the House, and the House added to that that the land subject to irrigation should be reserved from location until further legislation.

The legislation now contains a provision that when the topographical surveys are made, the places for the reservoirs and ditches designated, and the land liable to irrigation segregated from the public lands the President by proclamation may open it to settlement, the object being to secure to actual settlers the settlement and occupation of arable land and to keep it out of the hands of corporations and monopolies. At this time I am told that 30,000,000 acres of that land are ready to be opened to settlement by the proclamation of the President and that this year it is contemplated that 15,000,000 acres more will be opened. But there is a struggle on hand, and it seems to come to the front on every possible occasion, to repeal that law and let men who have organized companies and made settlements commence the work of applying this water to the arid lands in the face of this law and in defiance of it to seize upon the water and the land, so as not only to prevent settlement by actual settlers, but so as, in my judgment, to retard the settlement of that country for a half-century if this plan of allowing a few men and a few corporations to get possession of these lands can supersede and override the policy of reserving the lands for actual settlement.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to call attention back to the bill under consideration for the purpose of facilitating its progress, and I regret very much that so much time of the Senate has been taken up by it, although I think the time of the Senate could not be more profitably and appropriately devoted. I move to strike out on page 4, section 3, the amendment now pending, after the word "disbursement," in line 16, down to and including the words "English language," in line 23.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know that my motion was heard. I moved to strike out the first section.

Mr. MORRILL. Let the committee amendment be made first.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 16, section 3, after the word "disbursement," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the words "English language," in line 23, as follows:

Showing specifically its application to instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts and the facilities for such instruction, including the various branches of mathematical, physical, natural, and economic science, with special reference to their applications in the industries of life and in a thorough training in the English language.

Mr. VEST. Is that to be stricken out?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment striking out the words just read.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask to have those words stricken out.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator moves to disagree to that amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. My motion is to strike out those words.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope that amendment will be adopted, to strike out. It has been accepted once.

The amendment of Mr. MORRILL was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. On page 5, section 4, line 5, after the word "lost," I move to insert "or misapplied," and to strike out all the words in italics down to and including the word "instruction," in line 7.

Mr. GEORGE. What page is that?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated by the Secretary.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, section 5, line 5, after the word "lost," it is proposed to insert the following words:

or be applied to any purpose or object other than for instruction in agricultural and the mechanic arts and facilities for such instruction.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope that amendment will be rejected.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that in lieu of that amendment of the committee the words "or misapplied," after the word "lost," be inserted.

Mr. HOAR. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator from Vermont to take the other question first as to inserting after the word "be" the letters "mis" before the word "applied," so as to read "misapplied;" then strike out all after "misapplied" in italics, and it will read so as to secure the desire of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. BLAIR. I have no desire about it only to secure the wishes of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. HAWLEY. Strike out all after the word "or," in line 5 of section 4, down to and including the word "instruction," in line 7, and then insert in lieu thereof the word "misapplied."

Mr. MORRILL. "Or be misapplied."

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont a question. Is it the object of the Senator from Vermont, in moving the amendment which has just been adopted, to strike out the feature of agricultural instruction for these colleges?

Mr. MORRILL. That is included already.

Mr. BLAIR. That is in the original act.

Mr. VEST. Then if I understand it this was simply surplusage in the first instance.

Mr. BLAIR. That is all there is to it.

Mr. INGALLS. Section 2, at the bottom of page 2, refers to the objects for which these institutions are to be established and maintained.

Mr. VEST. Oh, yes; I see.

Mr. BLAIR. That is an amendment which was to be inserted at the request of the representatives of the Farmers' Alliance and of the Patrons of Husbandry, so that if Senators desire to have it stricken out there will be no objection excepting on the part of the farmers.

Mr. GIBSON. I should like to inquire what became of the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not yet in order. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to disagree to the amendment reported by the committee, which has just been read, commencing on page 4, in section 4, line 5. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to have the amendment read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, section 4, in line 5, after the word "lost"—

Mr. HAWLEY. It should be after the word "or," but it is not material.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "lost," it is proposed by the Committee on Education and Labor to insert:
or be applied to any purpose or object other than for instruction in agricultural and the mechanic arts and facilities for such instruction.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Vermont desires to have that rejected, as I understand, or has he waived it?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. Senators who desire to have the amendment retained will vote "ay." Those who desire to carry out the wishes expressed by the Senator from Vermont will vote "no."

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont will prevail to strike out those words.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont if he desires those words which have been read by the Chief Clerk to be omitted from the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I do; because we have struck out on page 4 the amendment proposed to be inserted there. They are therefore not applicable.

Mr. GEORGE. Then, as I understand, if I desire to vote with the Senator from Vermont, I vote "no."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. So the Chair understands. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5, same section, after the word "lost" it is proposed to insert "or be misapplied;" so as to read:

That if any portion of the moneys received by the State or Territory for the further and more complete endowment, support, and maintenance of colleges, as provided in this act, shall, by any action or contingency, be diminished or lost, or be misapplied, it shall be replaced by the State or Territory to which it belongs, etc.

Mr. BLAIR. The words "or lost" are in the original text. They should not be stricken out by the vote of "no."

Mr. MORRILL. They have not been stricken out.

Mr. BLAIR. They were not intended to be included in the motion. Now they are to be stricken out, and the other words inserted.

Mr. MORRILL. Oh, no; the words "or be misapplied" are to be added.

Mr. BLAIR. That is correct.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. There is an amendment in the first line of the section to be adopted.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 1, it is proposed by the Committee on Education and Labor to strike out the words "college fund" and to insert the word "moneys;" so as to read:

SEC. 4. That if any portion of the moneys received by the State or Territory for the further and more complete endowment, support, and maintenance of colleges, as provided in this act, shall, by any action or contingency, be diminished or lost or be misapplied, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. There is a like amendment in the ninth and tenth lines, an informal amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, section 4, line 9, it is proposed to strike out the words "interest or income of said college fund," and to insert in lieu thereof the word "appropriation."

Mr. HOAR. Is this a subsequent appropriation to the appropriation to be yearly made?

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. Also in line 11, there is a like amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 11, section 4, it is proposed to strike out the word "fund" and to insert the word "moneys."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. There is also an amendment in line 21.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 21, it is proposed to strike out the word "experimental" and to insert the word "experiments;" so as to read:

Experiments made under the direction of any experiment stations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, it is proposed to strike out section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept and add to the principal of said permanent college fund any sums which may be given to the United States for that purpose by will or otherwise.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know from the Senator from New Hampshire, in charge of the bill—he seems to be in charge of it, at least—why this is proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. BLAIR. For the reason that there is no permanent fund provided, and consequently not any occasion for the existence of the section at all. It is struck out as a matter of necessity from the modification of the original bill, dispensing with any permanent fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. There is an amendment in the ninth line of the next section.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 9, it is proposed to strike out the words "share of the college fund" and to insert the word "appropriation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. There is also an amendment in section 6.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 4, of section 6, it is proposed to strike out the word "share" and to insert "appropriation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. There is an amendment in the sixth line of the same section.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, line 6, it is proposed to strike out the words "any such" and to insert "so."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7 it is proposed to strike out section 9, as follows:

SEC. 9. That nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to affect in any manner the existing laws and regulations in regard to the adjustment and payment to States, upon their admission into the Union, the per centum of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands within their respective limits, or to repeal, impair, or suspend any law now authorizing the pre-emption of public lands, or the entry of public lands for homesteads, or to impair the law relating to experiment stations, or limit the power of Congress over the public domain, or interfere with granting bounty lands to soldiers and sailors, or affect the existing or any future provisions of law relating to railroad companies. And the power to amend or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 8—

Mr. BLAIR. The original motion was to strike out and insert. Under the modification which has taken place in the bill that section should be stricken out, and then the eighth section proposed to be inserted should be rejected.

Mr. HOAR. Should not the last clause of the eighth section be retained, the power of amendment and repeal?

Mr. BLAIR. That is in the next section.

Mr. HOAR. No; that is the last clause in this section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question will be put on striking out section 9.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out all of the section down to the concluding sentence.

Mr. HAWLEY. Would it not be well to strike out section 9 first?

Mr. BLAIR. That is what we are talking about. Would it not be better to strike out the section 8 proposed to be inserted and then insert a concluding section with the power to alter, amend, or repeal?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on striking out section 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. Now let section 8 which the committee reported to insert be disagreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Let it be rejected down to line 7, including the word "but;" so as to read:

Congress may at any time amend, suspend, or repeal any or all of the provisions of this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. To and including the word "but."

Mr. BLAIR. No, insert a separate section as to altering, amending, and repealing, when section 8 is all struck out.

Mr. MORRILL. Insert the word "that" before the word "Congress."

Mr. BLAIR. Do what you please, gentlemen.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the amendment reported by the Committee on Education and Labor by striking out of the new section 8 the following:

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to affect or in any manner to limit the power of Congress over the public domain or any future provisions of law relating to railroad companies, and nothing in this act shall be held or construed as binding the United States to continue any payments from the Treasury to any or all the States or institutions mentioned in this act; but.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. The amendment, including those words, should be rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question was on striking out the words—

Mr. BLAIR. Section 8 will stand then as follows:

SEC. 8. Congress may at any time amend, suspend, or repeal any or all of the provisions of this act.

Mr. HOAR. As I understand, the committee propose an amendment which is printed as section 8 in italics. That amendment has been amended by striking out all down to the word "but," in line 7. Now, the question is whether the remainder of the amendment, which is that "Congress may at any time amend, suspend, or repeal any or all of the provisions of this act," shall be agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Education and Labor as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. The question now is upon agreeing to that part of section 8 that was not stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That has been agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Are the committee amendments disposed of?

Mr. MORRILL. I want to make one more amendment, on page 6, in section [6] 5, after the word "Education," in line 18.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to make an inquiry as to how section 8 stands? Am I to understand that all of section 8 has been stricken out except the words "Congress may at any time amend, suspend, or repeal any or all of the provisions of this act," and they have been inserted?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes; that is correct. I move to strike out after the word "Education," in line 18 of section [6] 5, to the end of the section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section [6] 5, on page 6, line 18, after the words "Commissioner of Education," it is proposed to strike out:

And they are authorized and directed, under the approval of the President, to make all needful rules and regulations not inconsistent with its provisions to carry this law into effect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on striking out the words which have just been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask the Senator's attention to section 7, which was section 8, on page 7, which reads:

SEC. [8] 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall annually make a detailed report to Congress of the amount of receipts from the sales of public lands and from the railroads, as mentioned in this act, and also of all disbursements to States and Territories made under the same for the benefit of agricultural and mechanical colleges.

I move to strike that out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut to strike out section [8] 7, which he has read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Now I move to amend section 2, after the word "appropriated," in line 3, by inserting "arising from the sales of public lands."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, section 2, line 3, after the word "appropriated," it is proposed to insert "arising from the sales of public lands;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That there shall be, and hereby is, annually appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, arising from the sales of public lands, to be paid as hereinafter provided, to each State and Territory for the more complete endowment and maintenance of colleges for the benefit of agriculture, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now the first section ought to be stricken out. I move to strike out section 1.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope that section will be stricken out, because we have had the unanimous approval of the committee that it should go out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 1, as follows:

That at the close of each fiscal year, beginning as of June 30, 1890, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause an account to be taken and shall ascertain the total receipts from the sale or other disposition of the public lands of the United States, including all fees received at the general and district land offices during said year, and the amount of expenditures occasioned by the survey, sale or entry, or other disposition of such lands, including appropriations for the expenses of the said offices for said year. He shall thereupon certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of said receipts for public lands after deducting such expenditures. The Secretary of the Treasury shall in like manner, at the close of the fiscal year, beginning as of June 30, 1890, ascertain and add to the sum so certified to him by the Secretary of the Interior all moneys paid, or receipts, into the Treasury, or credits allowed by the United States, to any railroads therein during the then last fiscal year by all railroad companies, or their assigns or successors, named in the act of Congress approved May 7, 1878, and the appropriations which are to be made to the several States and Territories under this act for the benefit of colleges shall be made from funds in the Treasury, arising from receipts and credits therein on account of the public lands and railroads aforesaid, so long as such receipts and credits shall be sufficient therefor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to strike out the section which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Now the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] is in order.

Mr. PUGH. I now offer the amendment of which I gave notice and ask that it be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 2 the following proviso:

Provided further, That the Legislature of any State in which institutions of a like character have been established and are now being aided by such State out of its own revenue for the education of colored students in agriculture or the mechanical arts, whether styled colleges or not, and whether they have or not received any money heretofore under the act to which this is an amendment, may appropriate any portion of the fund received under this bill to such institutions so established and aided by such State as a compliance with the provision in reference to separate colleges for white and colored students.

Mr. HALE. Has this amendment been considered by the committee?

Mr. MORRILL. I think it is eminently proper, because I understand in two of the States they have colleges that are supported by the State or institutions equivalent to colleges which will not come under the provisions of the bill unless they are expressly provided for. They are supported by State taxation in Louisiana and Alabama.

Mr. HALE. How far does this amendment give control of the fund that is granted by the bill, to the Legislature of the State absolutely?

Mr. PUGH. Only to the extent that the appropriation is made for the benefit of the agricultural colleges.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. PUGH.

Mr. HALE. As I gather from the reading of this, it gives the Legislature of any State that is covered by the amendment the right to absolutely control the benefaction of Congress and to appropriate it to any school of the kind mentioned, whether established as a regular college or otherwise. In fact, it turns over the funds in the case of the amendment absolutely to the State Legislatures.

Mr. PUGH. Not at all. I beg the Senator's pardon. The power given to the State Legislature is to appropriate a portion of this money to the support of the schools the State has established for the education of colored students in agriculture and mechanics. Under the bill as it was reported from the committee there being but one agricultural college in which white students alone are admitted and educated these colored schools would get no portion of this appropriation. There is a flourishing colored school in the adjoining county but one to that in which the agricultural college is established, and it is now in a very prosperous condition, and my purpose is to give the Legislature the power of dividing this appropriation between the agricultural college and the institution at Tuskegee for the education of colored students.

Mr. HALE. I thought as the amendment was read it applied to schools which might be very transitory in their character. It does not need to be applied to a regular college, but to any school.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is another objection to it. The Senator will allow me to say that it may be given to as many schools as the Legislature chooses, half a dozen of them that may not be devoted and may not have the facilities for instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts. They may be the ordinary academical and very useful institutions, but that may entirely escape the purposes of this act. Now, the thing aimed at by the Senator from Alabama, if he will look at page 3, is already sufficiently provided for. The proviso to what was section 2, and which is now section 1, beginning on line 15, on page 3, reads:

Provided, That no money shall be paid out under this act to any State or Territory for the support and maintenance of a college where a distinction of race or color is made in the admission of students, but the establishment and maintenance of such colleges separately for white and colored students shall be held to be a compliance with the provisions of this act.

Mr. PUGH. But the separate institution for the education of students is not a college. It is an institution of a different name, and it would not be embraced in the descriptive word "college" as reported in the bill. An amendment to cover a similar purpose was offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and that was objected to by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] because it was too general in its terms and operated in the future. My amendment is limited to institutions already established and being aided by the State out of its own revenue.

Mr. HAWLEY. But they may be quite inferior schools. It comes outside of the general purpose of this act and abandons the agricultural and mechanical feature distinctly.

Mr. PLATT. It is expressly limited to "agricultural and mechanic arts."

Mr. PUGH. It is expressly stated to be for agricultural and mechanical education, and that is the character of the school that I desire shall receive a portion of this appropriation.

Mr. HOAR. It appears to me that the Senator from Alabama, if he will give me his attention, would agree with me that his amendment ought to be somewhat extended, because it only authorizes the State Legislature to give a portion of this money to institutions now being aided.

Mr. PUGH. I am perfectly willing to give it any extension that the Senator desires if it will not be objected to by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. HOAR. As I understand, there are States, certainly one State, which was called to my attention within a few minutes, where there is now but one such institution, and that institution is an institution exclusively for white children. There is no provision for an institution for colored children there, and this bill does not help it as it stands, either with or without the amendment of the Senator from Alabama. Without the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, the bill only authorizes the appropriation of this fund to institutions which have already received aid or have been established under the appropriations of the statute of 1862, and you can not extend it to any others.

Now the Senator comes in and says the Legislature may extend it. I do not say anything about the criticism of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] as to the particular institutions or colleges. But the Senator from Alabama comes in and says if there be a colored institution now being aided by the State the State may apply this money to that. So that in the case of the State of Delaware, where they have but one institution, which is for whites, they would not get anything under this bill for the colored pupils. I do not know how it is in the State of Georgia. Perhaps the Senator from Alabama knows.

Mr. PUGH. I do not.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Alabama is aware that there is an endowed school in the State of Georgia, an institution the name of which is the Atlanta University—I may be mistaken about the name—from which the State withdrew about two years ago the fund which it appropriated to that institution because white professors received their own children into colored classes which they taught, and the State of Georgia thinking that was opposed to its policy in regard to the coeducation of the races withdrew its appropriation from that institution, and it has been made up by voluntary subscription at the North for the last two or three years.

But I do not propose to go into any discussion of any such matter further than merely to point out that the phrase "now be aided" in the Senator's amendment is not enough. I am not aware that there is any other colored institution of the kind which is being aided by the Legislature, but I suppose not.

Mr. PUGH. Does the Senator propose any amendment to the amendment that I offer?

Mr. HOAR. If I may be permitted to say a word further, I do not think we ought to limit this power of the Legislature to give this fund to existing institutions alone. I think we ought to give the State discretion to go further and extend its benefits to institutions which were created after 1862.

Now, let me put a case which was intended to be covered by one amendment. In my State the fund under the statute of 1862, the land-grant fund, was divided between two most admirable institutions, one being the agricultural college at Amherst, which is an institution with able instructors doing excellent work, and the other the Boston Technological School, which is an institution which mainly is devoted to the education of chemists, of civil engineers, of professors, and of scientific men who take a large place in the world. It is a very useful institution, the pride of the city where it exists and of the State, and is under the charge of General Francis A. Walker. But the particular interest of Massachusetts is the mechanical and manufacturing arts. Ninety or 95 per cent. of its whole people are supported directly or indirectly in that way. Neither of these institutions is devoted, exclusively or even chiefly, prominently to the great interests of our people.

Now, we have in that State an institution which has been largely endowed—it has an endowment from private sources of five or six hundred thousand dollars in addition to its valuable real estate and its costly buildings—which is devoted exclusively to the education of young men for the mechanic arts, and when young men come out of that institution they go into machine shops and factories, they become journeymen, they become foremen, and they rise very rapidly, indeed, to the high places in their calling. It has been a marvelous success. But the Legislature of Massachusetts can not, under the old act or now under this new bill, give any portion of this fund to the institution which in reality is the important one in our State in reference to the callings of the people of the State.

That was the object of my amendment. I desisted from pressing the amendment out of deference to my honored friend from Vermont, who has given so much study to this matter, and although, as I understand him, it was conceded that the situation in my State would make this amendment eminently just and proper, he was afraid that the opening of this thing would create a good deal of confusion and disorder in many States of the Union, and he was unwilling to have it done; and out of deference to him, and having some doubt about my duty, I have refrained from pressing this amendment. But certainly when this bill passes it should be made sure—I will say, of course, in the institution of my State colored and white youth study together; there is no separation—that wherever colored and white youth do not study together the bill shall secure equal provision for colored youth. That, I understand, is the object of the Senator from Alabama, but there ought to be some different phraseology than the phraseology of his amendment to accomplish that result.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Massachusetts, while the matter about which he has been speaking is fresh in my mind. I do not know that I caught the exact point of difficulty which he referred to, but if I understand this section I now, it does provide for any college which may be hereafter established where agricultural and mechanical arts are taught, established under the act of 1862, whether it be for white or colored children.

Mr. HOAR. They must be institutions established expressly in accordance with that act.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Now, suppose he has an institution in the State which was not established in accordance with that act.

Mr. PLATT. That is what the Senator from Alabama is desirous of providing for. If they are established in pursuance of the act they will be covered by the bill.

Mr. HALE. I have now before me the amendment which has been written and submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], and I think I am able to observe what it is intended to cover.

The fundamental object of the bill as it is left after the amendments which have been passed, is found in what was section 2, and which is now section 1, which provides—

That there shall be, and hereby is, annually appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid as hereinafter provided, to each State and Territory for the more complete endowment and maintenance of colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, now established, or which may be hereafter established, in accordance with an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, etc.

Under that amendment, if it passes, any State that is, out of its own funds, assisting and aiding any school of this kind (whether one or two or twenty, not up to the degree of a college, not up to the rank and the attitude that a college may attain, which is intended to be covered by the original act, but any system of schools of the kind described when this amendment shall pass), may take the control of this benefaction of Congress and divide it among those schools. It may do more. If the State thinks it is appropriating more than it should for such schools, or such systems of schools, all of which are covered by the words "whether they be styled colleges or otherwise," the State can refrain thereafter from appropriating so much money and substitute this appropriation by Congress instead of it.

It was not intended in the fundamental act, and I think it is not the intention of the movers and projectors of this bill, that this benefaction of the General Government shall be scattered pervasive to schools generally, but shall go to a distinctive class of institutions of education covered by the phrase "colleges for the benefit of agricultural and mechanic arts now established." It is intended to flow in a given direction to a particular kind of institution. It is not intended to be an addition to the general fund of a State for schools, and to be assumed and controlled by the State in place of the appropriations for schools generally. But the fault I find with the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is that it goes to just that extent. Now let me read it:

Provided further, That the Legislature of any State in which institutions of like character have been established and are now being aided by such State out of its own revenue for the education of colored students in agricultural or the mechanical arts, whether styled colleges or not, and whether they have or not received any money heretofore under the act to which this is an amendment, may appropriate any portion of the fund received under this bill to such institutions, etc.

In other words, the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is that this appropriation, made for a distinctive purpose and so intended in the fundamental act and in this amendatory act, can be used by the States as an addition to their fund that they are giving to another class of schools entirely, and it may be used by the States as a substitute for their own funds. I do not understand the scope of the original act to be anything like that. I do not think that we ought to appropriate in that way. I do not think that if the Legislature of any State is doing this meritorious work of encouraging these schools outside, which are not and never can be termed colleges, which may be many instead of few, and the appropriations for which may be ever so meritorious, it should encroach upon this fund for that purpose. That is entirely different from the intention, it seems to me, of the framers of this act.

Mr. MORRILL. Will it not answer the purpose of the Senator from Maine if after the word "institutions" we insert "for the benefit of agricultural and the mechanic arts?"

Mr. HALE. The Senator has gone further and has got affirmative language in there.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Maine will allow me—

Mr. HALE. The Senator will please permit me to finish my sentence—"whether styled a college or not." Those words are in. As I have said, this may apply to any class of schools, and it seems to me that those words should be stricken out, or that something should be done so that this benefaction may flow in the direction which was intended by the original act.

Mr. HOAR. I think those words, "whether styled a college or not," were probably inserted by the Senator from Alabama from the amendment which I proposed the other day and had printed.

Mr. PUGH. That is correct.

Mr. HOAR. They were proposed for the reason that a great many of these institutions are not called colleges. The Miller Institute, in Virginia, is one of the most important institutions of the kind, where there was a very large fund given by a gentleman of that name for an agricultural and technical school. Then there is the Rose Polytechnic Institute in Indiana, at Terre Haute, one of the most important institutions in the Northwest. Then there is the Boston Technological School, and there is a new school in Georgia, I do not remember what the name of the institution is—

Mr. MORRILL. Then there is the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institution, and there are several others.

Mr. HOAR. The claim might be made that the institution must be incorporated by the name of a college in order to entitle it to this fund. It is quite common in the establishment of these institutions now to use some other designation. So my amendment contained the provision:

Which it shall deem of equal grade with such colleges, whether styled a college in its incorporation or not.

If the Senator from Alabama will allow me to make a suggestion of a slight modification in the amendment, I think it will cover all he desires and what the Senator from Maine desires and what I desire. I will read the amendment:

Provided further, That the Legislature of any State in which institutions of like character have been established—

Now, I propose to insert the words "or may be," so that it will cover a case like that of Delaware, so that it will read:

Have been or may be established, and are now being aided by such State out of its own revenue.

I propose to strike out those lines, so that it will read:

In which institutions of like character have been or may be established for the education of colored students in agriculture or the mechanic arts.

That will confine it as the Senator from Maine desires. Then I propose to insert the words from my former amendment:

If of equal grade with such colleges, whether styled a college in its incorporation or not, and whether it have or not received any money heretofore under the act of which this is an amendment, may appropriate any portion of the funds received under this bill to such institutions so established by such State.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Massachusetts. I hope he will hear me. I should be very much discouraged about the use of this measure if we begin to subdivide. The original purpose in the measure was to set an example to the country by helping to build up one fine institution in each State devoted to the most practical studies imaginable.

I will not object to the provision on page 3 which forbids any distinction of race or color, or forbids giving any money where a distinction of race or color is made in the admission of students, but allows the establishment and maintenance of such colleges separately for white and colored students, which shall be held to be a compliance with the provisions of this act. That is what I mean. I have no objection to what is done in Texas. I have no criticisms to make; it is none of my business anyhow, but I think they are doing very well. I think they have one very large and prosperous and successful institution, but it is for whites alone.

I would not do that, but that is their way. They have, however, a large, and they claim, equally well conducted college for colored men, attended by a large number of students, not quite as many, because there are not as many colored people in proportion. But they are observing the spirit of this amendment already in the bill. If we should say "and other institutions of proper grade," or whatever language you please shall be allowed a share in the distribution of this fund, we should get down to a $500 apiece scattering of this money, and it would not be in accordance with the original statesmanlike purpose of the act.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to remind the Senator from Connecticut of what he seems not to recall, that in many of the States, certainly in several of them, this was divided between two institutions. Suppose in his State there is one institution for agriculture and the other for the mechanic arts—

Mr. HAWLEY. That is what we have.

Mr. HOAR. You have two in your State?

Mr. HAWLEY. We have.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; then this amendment does not contemplate the division any more than the original act did, any more than has in fact taken place. There is no further subdivision made possible or proposed by this amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the amendment say there shall be but one other institution?

Mr. HOAR. No; that was not said in the original act.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is my point, if the Senator will pardon me. Is it not possible, under the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, to give a part of this sum to the distinctive old agricultural and mechanical college, the Morrill college, if I may call it so, and take half of it and scatter it among half a dozen other colleges?

Mr. HOAR. It is not possible, absolutely.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thought it was, under the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama; and the Senator from New Hampshire confirms me.

Mr. HOAR. Let me answer the question. It is not possible to do it except as was done in contemplation of the original act. The purpose of the Senator from Alabama is, and the only purpose which I have in mind now (because I abandoned my own amendment in deference to the wishes of the Senator from Vermont), to see that the colored schools, the colleges for agriculture and mechanic arts, may have an even chance with the white. That is all that the amendment as now modified by the Senator from Alabama proposes, that where there is a colored institution, where they have separate institutions for the colored people, the State may give to those institutions their share. Then the amendment says that whether they are styled college or not, in order to get over the objection that many of these institutions do not have the name of college in their incorporation; but it requires them to be of an equal or like grade with the colleges. That is now inserted; he accepts that.

The Senator from Connecticut suggests that the object of the original act was to have but one institution, to which I reply that that is a mistake, because the original act left the Legislature to divide it among twenty, and this does not undertake to deal with that subject any more than the original act did. In point of fact in many of the States, including my own, and I believe his own, the Legislature did divide it between at least two, and that is necessary, because one institution may be for agriculture and the other may be for the mechanic arts, and it may be desired by the Legislature to provide for both.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me make a correction as a matter of fact. Perhaps I misled the Senator. The original fund given under the Morrill act of 1862 is devoted in Connecticut to one large and flourishing institution, but the State afterwards established a smaller affair, a practical farming institution, and aided that very largely, and it is made an experimental station under the act we passed a year or two ago. That does not get a portion of the old Morrill fund.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, one further statement I should like to make. This does not in the least extend the scope of the original act in that particular. It leaves it untouched.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the anguish of Senators over this question is amusing. The amendment was framed by my colleague with a view to the situation in Alabama, I suppose, which is this: Alabama sustains two important colored institutions. One is a literary college at Montgomery, Ala., with a very fine faculty, and has made very fine progress indeed. The other is a normal mechanical and agricultural school at Tuskegee, Macon County, Alabama, and that is certainly one of the most prosperous of all the colored institutions in the South, and I think has done more good for the youthful colored population in that State than can be claimed by almost any other State in the South.

Now, if you give this aid to colleges without restraining or restricting the appropriation to those devoted to agriculture and the mechanic arts, it would go to this college, so called under the laws of Alabama, at Montgomery. It was necessary therefore that we should avoid that feature of the bill which gave it to colleges of like kind and give it to another institution which is called a normal agricultural and mechanical school at Tuskegee.

That was the object of our amendment; but it has a much wider scope, I find, because it provides a convenient and proper way of distributing this fund for the purposes of agriculture and the mechanic arts among the colored population of the South.

We think that we ought to be trusted about a matter of this kind. We feel a great deal more interest in the education of those people than anybody can feel who is not of that community, for we find that it is beneficial to them. They become useful citizens, valuable men in a great many respects.

I think the States can be trusted upon this subject. All we want to do here is to see that this money is applied to instruction in agriculture and in the mechanic arts. If the States have incorporated institutions which do not fill the designation or denomination of colleges according to the letter of the statute, it makes no difference. This school at Tuskegee is one of very high grade, and it is a more useful establishment altogether than the general literary college at Montgomery.

Mr. MORRILL. Let the amendment be read as modified.

Mr. PUGH. I have examined the modifications proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts. They are acceptable to me, and I ask to have the amendment read as modified.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be read as it will stand after putting in those words. There is no necessity for the clerks to read the words separately. Read the whole amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator has a right to modify it. Read it as modified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 2 the following proviso:

Provided further, That the Legislature of any State in which institutions of like character have been or may be established for the education of colored students in agriculture and the mechanical arts, whether styled a college or not, and whether they have or not received any money heretofore under the act of which this is an amendment, may appropriate any portion of the funds received under this bill to such institutions so established by such State as a compliance with the provisions in reference to separate colleges for white and colored students.

Mr. HALE. Where are the words suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts providing that these institutions should be of like grade?

Mr. PUGH. The phrase "of like character" is substituted.

Mr. HOAR. "Of like character and grade."

Mr. PUGH. We struck out "of like character and grade" and inserted "of like character."

Mr. HALE. The words in the first two lines were in the amendment originally suggested by the Senator from Alabama, but the words suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, which confine the institutions that shall receive the benefit of this act, if they are named colleges or otherwise, to institutions of a like grade, do not appear there.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I suggested the words "of like grade" and some Senator, either the Senator from Maine himself or the Senator from Connecticut, suggested the words "of like character," so I substituted that. Then on looking at the amendment I found that was already in the language of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HALE. That was in the original amendment; there is no doubt about that; but I do not think that carries the distinction far enough.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest, then, in lieu of the words "of like character," to use the words "institutions of like character and grade." That will perhaps meet the Senator's view.

Mr. GIBSON. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that we strike out the words "such colleges," in line 19, of section 2, and insert "of colleges, universities, and institutes for agricultural and mechanical education." That appears to cover the point of the Senator. We have in the State of Louisiana two colleges supported by the State, one for the colored people, to which the State contributes very liberally, and another for the white people of the State. They are separate and distinct, but they get equal advantages. If the words I suggest were inserted in lieu of the words "such colleges," the proviso would read as follows:

That no money shall be paid out under this act to any State or Territory for the support and maintenance of a college where distinction of race or color is made in the admission of students, but the establishment and maintenance of colleges, universities, and institutes for agricultural and mechanical education separately for white and colored students shall be held to be a compliance with the provisions of this act.

That appears to cover the point.

Mr. HALE. In the suggestions that I made I had only one object in view, and the debate that has arisen since confirms me in the belief that that was a sound view. I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that whatever may have been the fact in different States, and although it may be true that this appropriation or this gift dedicated by the General Government may have been divided in some cases among two institutions, to divide or begin to divide this gift of the General Government is a misfortune. The object I had in suggesting what I thought was the fault, the weakness, in the amendment of the Senator from Alabama was that as it was left it allowed almost a general division and scattering. I think that would be a calamity.

I think, in any State, if you begin to divide this appropriation, this gift, you will soon destroy it. If there were half a dozen institutions in Alabama, or Louisiana, or Maine, or Massachusetts, and each of them comes to the Legislature and asks for an equal component part of this gift of the Federal Government, the whole general aim of it will be destroyed. It had better be amended and the language had better be so framed that it will be divided as little as possible, and then it will do something. Then it will penetrate somewhere. Then its uses will be known and realized, and it will help to build up one school, possibly two. But when you go further than that it will be frittered away. Both the Senators from Alabama, who have this situation at home, ought to desire that this appropriation, which is an addition to what has been already given, shall not be so scattered.

I hope the amendment if adopted will be modified in such a way that it shall narrow the scope and number of the institutions that will at once apply to the Legislature inevitably and demand their share of this benefaction of the General Government.

Mr. MORGAN. In the State of Maine it might be necessary, perhaps, to keep them from frittering away this fund and distributing it out among a dozen schools or more; but the people of Alabama have a more intelligent idea of the way to handle the money for education than that; and I think that the Senator from Maine can trust us as well as we can trust him upon a question of that sort.

Mr. HALE. It is not a question of discrimination between one locality and another. The Senator himself is a constant example before us of intelligence and of assumption that is superior to anybody else.

But it is not a question as to whether the people of Alabama can be trusted in this matter better than the people of Maine.

I am legislating, Mr. President, for the people of Alabama here as much as the Senator from Alabama is legislating for that people, and I want the clauses of and the amendments to this bill to be well guarded. No matter what happens in that State, the Senator with his superior intelligence is not going to be on the scene of action forever in Alabama; I wish he could be; all of us wish that; but a time will come and its teeth will eat away the things of the present. We are legislating not for his life nor for mine, but for the future.

I again affirm that it will be an evil to his people if this is left so that every class of institution can come in and seek to divide $25,000 between five institutions or fifteen or twenty-five, and what the Senators in common with what I seek will then be entirely destroyed and these good currents will—

Turn away,
And lose the name of action.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that in the original act of 1862 there was no provision in reference to a division of this appropriation among institutions for the instruction of white and colored students.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. PUGH. The necessity for my amendment grows out of the proviso in the original bill reported from the committee requiring that there shall be no distinction in the admission of students to the college on account of race or color, but that that provision might be complied with by the establishment of separate colleges. The necessity for my amendment grows out of that provision in the original bill itself. While the Senator is right in saying that in the original conception of the appropriation for the establishment of these colleges there was no thought that the appropriation should be divided and dedicated to different institutions, the bill reported from the Committee on Education and Labor requires that we shall make the provision which is contained in my amendment, so that the colored institutions now existing and flourishing in Alabama shall receive equal benefit from this appropriation, to be given them by the Legislature of the State.

Mr. HALE. I do not object to adapting the bill to changed conditions, as indicated by the Senator from Alabama. My only objection is to leaving it in such a way that a class and grade of institutions not contemplated either in the terms or the spirit of the original act may come in and claim benefaction. All that I ask is that the language may be so framed and adopted that this appropriation which we are providing for now shall only go to institutions of a like grade and character with those contemplated in the original act.

Mr. PUGH. I do not know how the word "grade," in the phrase "of like grade," would be construed. Say "of like nature," or "of like character," and then go on to define what shall be taught.

Mr. HALE. I think perhaps it is rather more than being of like character. They are all educational institutions.

Mr. PUGH. There is a colored college in the State of Alabama that is a literary college, and to say "of like grade" might be construed to embrace a college that was not teaching agriculture and the mechanic arts.

Mr. HALE. No, because the Senator has in terms made one description which must answer; that is, that it shall be for this specific purpose of agriculture. If he puts in simply the word "grade," I still believe there is danger of the Legislature being besought in any State, in my State or any where else, to divide this appropriation, but the number of institutions that could possibly come would be very limited. There would perhaps be but two, as there ought to be.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask the Senator from Maine to give attention to the words embraced in the amendment that I suggest, which I trust my friend from Alabama will accept, as it shortens the matter very much. I propose to make the clause read:

And maintenance of colleges, universities, and institutes for agricultural and mechanical education, separately for white and colored students, etc.

Mr. HALE. What is the third word the Senator uses?

Mr. GIBSON. "Institutes;" the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, for instance, and several of those institutions are called institutes.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GIBSON. I suggest this as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama. I will read it, and ask a vote on it if it is necessary, if the Senator from Alabama will not accept it:

That no money shall be paid out under this act to any State or Territory for the support and maintenance of a college where a distinction of race or color is made in the admission of students, but the establishment and maintenance of colleges, universities, and institutes for agricultural and mechanical education separately for white and colored students shall be held to be a compliance with the provisions of this act.

Or, I will say "institutions" in place of "institutes."

Mr. PUGH. That is acceptable to me.

Mr. GIBSON. It is not likely that there will be established in any one of the Southern States more than one institution of this kind for the colored people supported by the State. For instance, in the State of Louisiana, where the white people pay 90 per cent. per annum of the taxes, the Legislature of that State contributes an equal sum for the maintenance of the colored school as the white school of that State. I think that Senators who have any apprehensions on the subject may rest assured that the people of these States are doing all they can in proportion to their means to advance the education of the colored as well as the white people.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me to suggest a defect in his amendment which is not found in the amendment of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. GIBSON. Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. ALLISON. The theory of this bill is that the States have nothing to do with this appropriation. The third section of the bill ties up this money absolutely in the hands of the General Government. The Commissioner of Education is the initial point under the third section of the bill. Then the Secretary of the Interior appears on the scene, and then the Secretary of the Treasury. The money is paid over under the third section to the treasurer or other designated officer of the State, who shall upon the request of a college immediately pay that money to that college.

If the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana is agreed to, I do not see who is to decide this question as between these different institutions. It will then rest either with the Commissioner of Education or the Secretary of the Interior or some central power having control here, because the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana does not contemplate that the Legislature of the State shall have any power of distribution, and there is no such power contained anywhere in the bill unless it is specially provided for.

I was about to suggest to the Senator from Alabama that even if his amendment be adopted it will be necessary to wholly modify and reconstruct, in my judgment, the third section of the bill, because as it now stands the States are the mere conduit pipes; they have no discretion, no power. The Legislature has no control whatever, unless I am mistaken in the phraseology of the bill, as respects this money in any way.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I correct the Senator?

Mr. ALLISON. I hope to be correct, because I have endeavored to be.

Mr. HAWLEY. I see it is provided in the second section, or what will now be the second section, in the last half-dozen or ten lines on the third page—

That the sums hereby appropriated to the States and Territories for the further endowment and support of colleges shall be annually paid on or before the 31st day of July of each year by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the warrant of the Commissioner of Education, countersigned by the Secretary of the Interior, out of the Treasury of the United States, to the State or Territorial treasurer, or to such officer as shall be designated by the laws of such State or Territory to receive the same.

Mr. ALLISON—

Who shall, upon the order of the trustees of the college, immediately pay over—

Mr. HAWLEY. That is the college established by the State?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the agricultural college—

Pay over said sums—

Mr. GIBSON. The colleges are described in the proviso of the second section.

Mr. HOAR. They are described in the original act.

Mr. GIBSON. They are also described in the original act.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; but here are to be three or four colleges in a State. Now, I want to ask Senators how it will be, and who shall say whether one or the other of these institutions in Alabama or one or the other of these institutions in Louisiana shall receive this sum. You at once get up a question of jurisdiction.

Mr. HAWLEY. Allow me to read another two or three lines:

to each State and Territory for the more complete endowment and maintenance of colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanics now established, or which may be hereafter established, in accordance with an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to read this, if he pleases?

Mr. ALLISON. I only raised the question for information.

Mr. HOAR. A clause of the fifth section of the old act of 1862 provides that—

Any State which may take and claim the benefit of the provisions of this act shall provide, within five years, at least not less than one college, as described in the fourth section of this act, or the grant to such State shall cease; and said State shall be bound to pay the United States, etc.

Now, the new act comes in and says it shall be paid over to the colleges established by the State, according to the provisions of this old act. Then comes in the amendment of the Senator from Alabama as to the colored institutions, which, of course, shall also have their share. The State has got to designate.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, under the amendment of the Senator from Alabama; but the Senator from Alabama now accepts the suggestion of the Senator from Louisiana, which leaves that in the discretion of the Legislature.

Mr. PUGH. Then I decline to accept it.

Mr. ALLISON. What I mean to say is that we have a provision here making an expenditure of $25,000 a year to the State without the State having the slightest control over this money or any portion of it. It goes right into these colleges by a direct method under section 3, and nobody else has any control over it except the trustees of the college, and the Secretary of the Interior, and the Commissioner of Education.

Mr. GIBSON. I suppose under section 3 the officer who is to distribute this money will have to himself decide to which of these colleges it will go. Somebody has to do it.

Mr. ALLISON. But who is that officer, I should like to ask? This bill does not say.

Mr. GIBSON. The provision is:

Or to such officer as shall be designated by the laws of such State or Territory to receive the same, who shall upon the order of the trustees of the college immediately pay over said sums to the treasurers of the respective colleges entitled to receive the same, etc.

If he does that he is bound to decide himself which of these colleges complies with the conditions of this proposed act.

Mr. ALLISON. Suppose there are a dozen of them. Here is my State. We have one agricultural college now. Suppose another one comes up to-morrow and asks for a division.

Mr. BLAIR. But they must be organized under the act of 1862.

Mr. GIBSON. It is not likely that there will be more than one other such institution or college already organized under the act of 1862.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I hope we may soon reach a vote on this question.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for a vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to proceed. I was about to say that I hoped we might reach a vote on this pending matter. I desire to observe, however, that the objection raised by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to legislation which might result in the general dissipation of this fund would of course be equivalent to its waste. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] withdrew an amendment to which that was the principal objection out of deference to its force. The friends of the measure generally and the whole system of colleges, the representatives of those institutions as they now exist, were very strenuous in their opposition to any legislation which could serve to dissipate this fund.

The heads of these institutions have an association called the Association of the American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations. The president is James H. Smart, LL.D., who is at the head of the institution of Indiana. The vice-presidents are Messrs. Fairchild, Gates, Gulley, Hilgard, and Redding; secretary and treasurer, H. P. Armsby. The executive committee is composed of Messrs. Alvord, Armsby, Jenkins, Lee, Scott, Scovell, and Smart. All these are gentlemen of high scientific attainments, with plenty of titles, and they are the heads of these institutions scattered through the country. Through them the institutions have been represented at the hearings during the progress of the bill thus far.

Now, the Senator from Massachusetts has withdrawn his amendment, which could have effect only where these institutions are patronized exclusively by white students. It would apply to the Northern States specifically. His amendment in fact would apply to all the States, and until he withdrew that their opposition was very strong. I have received this letter, which I do not read in hostility to that amendment, because the Senator has withdrawn it, but speaking of that the chairman of the executive committee of the Association of American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations addressed this letter to me of date of Tuesday, June 17:

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, Md., Tuesday, June 17, 1890.

DEAR SIR: On behalf of this association, its executive committee desire to express the hope that you will strenuously oppose the amendment offered by Senator HOAR to Senate bill 3714, to be considered on Thursday, which would change the entire character of the bill. It would no longer be a measure for the more complete endowment of a distinct class of meritorious yet needy institutions, but would place before the Legislature of every State a sum of money to be contested for by numberless schools, and to be ultimately dissipated, in too many cases, by division and "log-rolling."

The bill substantially as it came from the committee is the bill asked for by the agricultural-college people and the farmers of every State.

Yours very respectfully, for the executive committee,

HENRY E. ALVORD,

President Maryland Agricultural College, Chairman.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The amendment of the Senator from Alabama applies only in specific localities, in very few States, and for the benefit of an exceptional class of people.

Mr. MORRILL. It applies only to colored students.

Mr. BLAIR. Its adoption will relate only to colored students. It will not interfere with the general force or efficiency of the act, which applies to fifty-five or sixty million people, while this amendment would reach only the children of perhaps five, six, or eight million.

I hope that the amendment will be adopted, but I would be opposed to any general amendment which would be subject to the objection specified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama accept the modification suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. PUGH. Yes, sir; I accept the modification suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated as modified.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the Legislature of any State in which institutions of like character and grade—

Mr. PUGH. The word "grade" is taken out. It reads, "of like character."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts was to add the word "grade."

Mr. HALE. That is right.

Mr. PUGH. I do not know.

Mr. BLAIR. I suggest that these colored schools can not be of the same grade with those of longer standing and a higher grade of efficiency. They may be all of the same character for the reason that they deal with the same subject-matter, but the word "grade" would afford the opportunity to any State Legislature or to any officer who is inclined to construe this act as against the colored people, and enable him to deprive them of the benefits of this act until, without any help from any source, they should have lifted themselves to the same grade of white colleges that had been receiving assistance all the time.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the comments which have been made about the dangers that would arise from the distribution and frittering away of these funds very strongly corroborate and re-enforce the position taken by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], with which I entirely concur, that the original design and purpose of this legislation was to establish one institution in each State for instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts as distinguished from academic and classical education. That was the result in Kansas. We established there one great institution, a central station, in accordance with the ideas of the act, from which light was to radiate to the boundaries of the State, a great fountain through which education was to percolate down to its lowest strata.

Now, so far as the changed condition of the South is concerned, we all realize the fact that there are difficulties to be overcome in carrying out this idea. I believe that it is inappropriate and improper, in various ways detrimental to the best interests of both races, that coeducation should be conducted. I am therefore entirely willing that in the Southern States where these conditions exist provision should be made for the instruction of white and colored people separately, but in two institutions, as the original bill provided.

I am entirely opposed to the amendment that has been submitted so far, believing as I do that it will permit the whole fund to be dispersed, to be dissipated and wasted away in little dribbles and little dribbles, going here and there by local importunity, so that the whole benevolent object will be destroyed.

Further than that, Mr. President, I am opposed to that amendment for another reason. If the Senator from Maine who is now looking at it will be kind enough to repeat the language, I think it is that a State is exempt from any penalty if it distributes any portion of this fund for the education of colored people. That does not satisfy me, sir. "Any portion" is a very indefinite and vague phrase.

Mr. HALE. This is the language:

May appropriate any portion of the fund received under this bill to such institution.

Mr. INGALLS. That is, the appropriation of $1 out of this fund will be a technical compliance with the terms of that provision. I am opposed to it. While I am inclined to be entirely liberal to the Southern people and to recognize fully the difficulties under which they labor, while I do not impute to them any insincerity or any disingenuousness, I do not believe they like the colored people as well as they do the white people, and I think they must be put under bonds just the same as the Northern people must be put under bonds to do justice.

Therefore it is that that language is not satisfactory to me. I do not want this left so that by the appropriation of a dollar out of this fund the law will be complied with. It should read that there shall be an equal or a proportionate share of this fund distributed for the education of the colored people in the several States.

I think, Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont is premature, that he is improvident, in expressing his inclination and willingness to have the terms of that amendment incorporated into his bill.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Kansas that that language, "any portion of the appropriation," was taken from the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. I copied that from the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. I am perfectly willing to insert the words "a proportionate or a reasonable share."

Mr. GEORGE. "Equal or proportionate?"

Mr. PUGH. Or "a proportionate share according to numbers."

Mr. INGALLS. I do not want to say "an equal share," because there may not be anything like as many colored people as there are white people. It ought not to be divided share and share alike, a moiety to each, because there might not be more than one-half as many colored people as there were white.

Mr. PUGH. Any word that will embrace the meaning desired will suit me.

Mr. INGALLS. All I want is a recognition of the principle of proportionate distribution of the gratuity and beneficence of the United States to all classes of its citizens.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] suggests "fair and just proportion according to numbers."

Mr. GEORGE. I am opposed to that.

Mr. PUGH. Just say "fair and just proportion."

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask only to have read an amendment which I desire to suggest, which covers this point.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The suggested amendment will be read for information, if there be no objection.

The CHIEF CLERK. Add the following:

And in case of the establishment of such separate colleges, the Legislature of the State or Territory shall provide for the division of the amount received among such colleges according to the relative numbers of the white and colored population within said State or Territory.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am opposed to such an amendment as that.

Mr. PUGH. That will not do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that proposition before the Senate now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not, but the Chair had recognized the Senator from New Hampshire before the Senator from Mississippi rose.

Mr. CHANDLER. My amendment is not before the Senate now. I sent it to the desk to be read as a suggestion in connection with the amendment which is before the Senate proposed by the Senator from Alabama. It seems to me that the Senate would do well to take heed of the suggestion made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], that the amendment which the Senator proposes is satisfied by the appropriation for a colored school by the Legislature of a Southern State of any portion of the $25,000 which is given to the State.

Mr. PUGH. That was the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. CHANDLER. And I do not think, Mr. President, that the Congress of the United States will be satisfied with that provision, without intending in the slightest degree to throw a doubt upon the intention of the Legislature of Alabama or of any other Southern State to make a reasonably fair division of this money; and so I think that some provision of this kind should be incorporated into the amendment which the Senator proposes.

I also wish to call attention to the danger in which the Senate finds itself when it undertakes by an amendment of this kind to change the character of the agricultural and mechanical colleges by an amendment put upon this bill. The original act of July 2, 1862, which is before me, carefully defines the character of these institutions. By the title of the act the lands were to be given to colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, and by section 4, which the Senator from Massachusetts did not read, the lands were to be invested and given to each State—

For the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the Legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life.

Mr. President, there is a very careful and well-defined object in view. The bill which is now before the Senate was intended to limit the new donations to be made by this bill to precisely such institutions, because in section 2, now the first section, the additional moneys are given—

For the more complete endowment and maintenance of colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts now established, or which may be hereafter established, in accordance with an act of Congress approved July 21, 1862.

That is to say, limiting the new donations to colleges of the character described in the original act of 1862.

But if the Senate adopts the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] substituting for this careful definition in the original act the words "colleges, universities, and institutes," or "institutions"—I am not certain which word the Senator from Louisiana proposes to use—for agricultural and mechanical education, you have completely opened the subject. You have allowed this additional donation of $25,000 to each State to be used for any college or university or institute or institution which may fairly come within the language of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama; and you have not only given an opportunity, which the original act did in terms give, of establishing more than one college, but you have given an invitation to the States to take these new moneys and scatter them out among half a dozen, a dozen or more colleges for blacks and whites in the Southern States.

It seems to me that this legislation is being too hastily framed, and that, instead of adopting here in the last hour of this Saturday afternoon an amendment which so wholly changes, as in my judgment it will, the whole character of these institutions, these amendments should be printed and the bill should go over until the first of the week, in order that we may ascertain exactly what is to be done in these Southern States where separate agricultural and mechanical colleges are to be allowed, according to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. GIBSON. I suggest that that might be accomplished by putting in a further proviso that the money shall not be received by more than one college for white students and one college for colored students in a State.

Mr. CHANDLER. And divided according to population?

Mr. GIBSON. And divided according to the number of students in each. I think that would accomplish the purpose in view.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish utterly to reject the suggestion made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], that I abandon my amendment in consequence of any force in the argument presented by these agricultural-college gentlemen, however wise they may be and however much I respect them. I abandoned it solely because the Senator from Vermont, who is the author of this bill, as of the original act, thought that it would embarrass the passage of the bill through the Senate, and I did not wish to risk it in any way or shape. I think the original act intended that there should be more than one of these colleges wherever the demands or wants or tastes of a community required institutions for agriculture to be separate from institutions for the promotion of the mechanic arts. The language of the original act is express, "at least one."

Mr. President, the one want of these Southern States is, in my judgment, to add to the agricultural, mechanical, and manufacturing employment of their people. It is not presumptuous for me to say that, because they are giving evidence of their own opinion to that effect by large appropriations and endowments for institutions intended for instruction in the mechanic arts. I enumerated quite a number of these institutions established in States which in 1862 were almost exclusively agricultural—Indiana, Virginia, Georgia, Alabama.

Mr. REAGAN. And Texas.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator near me says, "and Texas." They are all undertaking to have within their own limits institutions which shall fit the young men by sufficient scientific education and equipment to give a direction in the establishing of mechanical and manufacturing industries within their borders.

Undoubtedly, the gentlemen whose names were read by my friend from New Hampshire do not want a fund divided when if it is not divided they will get the whole of it for their institutions. It is natural and it is to be expected, but it is not for the public interest. It is for the public interest to-day that the mechanical and manufacturing arts should be promoted all over this country, and that they should be promoted by proper and appropriate scientific education.

How idle it would have been for the State of Massachusetts, 95 per cent. of whose population are engaged in or supported chiefly by mechanical and manufacturing employments, to have this whole fund appropriated as far as she is concerned to an agricultural institution?

Mr. HALE. Why not, Mr. President?

Mr. HOAR. Because the interest of the State is largely otherwise.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly; but you may as well say that another State may devote it to a commercial college. The object of it was agriculture.

Mr. HOAR. It was not agriculture; I deny it, if my friend will pardon me for my emphasis. It is a little discursive.

Mr. HALE. The Senator may have his view of the question, and I may have mine.

Mr. HOAR. I understand, and I am stating mine at this moment. The language which the Senator from New Hampshire read contradicts the Senator's view. It is that this is an appropriation for the industrial pursuits of the people, and it enumerates in words "the mechanic arts."

Mr. CHANDLER. The title is "for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts."

Mr. HOAR. Certainly; agriculture and the mechanic arts. I beg my honorable friend's pardon for the emphasis with which I contradicted him, but he will see that the purpose of the original act was that the mechanical as well as the agricultural arts should be promoted by this benefaction, and as the bill goes on to say in the clause which the Senator from New Hampshire read that it should promote the industrial pursuits of the people. It is not that an agricultural college in Massachusetts is not of great value. We have a most admirable one there; but that is why it would not have been just to have taken this whole fund and within the limits of that State give it to one college when the colleges there divide this matter of education.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish to complete the amendment that I offered. I move in line 19 to strike out "colleges" and insert "of colleges, universities, and institutions for agricultural and mechanical education;" and then at the end of line 21 to insert:

Provided, That the money shall not be received by more than one such college, institute, or university, or institution for white, and one for colored students, to be divided in proportion to the number of students in attendance in each college, between them.

Mr. INGALLS. That will not do.

Mr. GIBSON. "In proportion to the number of students in attendance."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. HALE. I offer a substitute for the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 2 the following proviso:

Provided, That such share of the moneys herein given as shall be the proportion which the colored population of any State bears to the entire population of such State shall be paid to and used for the purposes of this act to any one college or institution of learning which may be maintained for the education of colored students in agriculture and the mechanic arts in such State, which college or institution of learning may be selected by the governor of such State.

Mr. CHANDLER. "Selected by the Legislature?"

Mr. HALE. No; I will not have the Legislature to have anything to do with it. Let the governor make the selection.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that proposition before the Senate now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is before the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire, Mr. President, to call the attention of the Senate to the injustice of the proposition which has just been read to those States like my own, and South Carolina, and Louisiana, in which the colored population exceeds the white population.

Under the original act of 1862 a fund of about $200,000 fell to the share of Mississippi. Every dollar of that fund, as I have stated on a former occasion in this body, was spent in the ordinary expenses of the Government, so that in 1876 when proceedings were to commence in relation to the establishment of an agricultural college the treasury was empty so far as that fund was concerned.

Mr. MORGAN. When was it spent?

Mr. GEORGE. It was spent between the year 1869 and the year 1876. When the people of Mississippi came to use the fund, every bit of which was raised by taxation, they divided equally the interest, one-half to the colored agricultural college and one-half to the white agricultural college, there being only $5,000 to each, the whole interest being about $10,000.

In addition to that the State has outside of its obligation arising under the act of 1862 to make good the loss of the fund, all of which had been lost as appropriated out of the treasury to both of these colleges, in addition, as I say, to this fund.

I feel authorized to say that the white agricultural college in Mississippi is one of the best regulated and the most successful institutions of that sort in the United States, so recognized, I believe. So the colored agricultural college has been managed with great efficiency, and I believe I am authorized to say that it is the best institution of that sort in the United States.

Now, sir, this proposition is made to the tax-payers of Mississippi and to the people of Mississippi, when they have been thus generous with reference to the fund under the act of 1862, concerning which I desire to call the attention of the Senate to this: There was no obligation to make any division of the fund or to admit to the college any students except such as the State might direct. We find in this bill, intended by the venerable Senator from Vermont to be a beneficent measure for all the States without distinction, a provision which I deem unjust so far as Mississippi is concerned, after this fair, liberal, and generous action on the part of the white people of that State, not only in dividing the fund which they were not obliged to divide, but also in making appropriations which they voluntarily made out of the taxes paid by them, so as to keep up and maintain, as I aver is the fact, one of the best and best regulated and best conducted schools in the United States. When this proposed law, intended for the equal benefit of all and of both races, comes to be enacted, contrary to the intent of the venerable author of it, the people of Mississippi are required to go back on their past record of an equal division of this fund, which they voluntarily made, of the old fund, and to give $3 of this fund to the colored agricultural college and about $2 (that is nearly the proportion, I have not got it exactly) to the white agricultural college.

I do not think, Mr. President, that the Senate ought to do that. We have been fair about the thing, and if there is still distrust here, if the Senate is still unwilling to treat the Southern people as having ordinary feelings of propriety and magnanimity and generosity and justice in the management of a fund devoted to education, you have reserved the power, which you can use at any time, to stop any unjust, unequal, and unfair distribution. It is contained in the last section of the bill:

Congress may at any time amend, suspend, or repeal any of the provisions of this act.

So, without this unjust and unfair provision, without this attempt to impose shackles and fetters in the distribution of this fund and the management of it, the Senate, the Congress, the Federal Government has it in its own hands, requiring by the bill in another provision that reports shall be made of the condition of these colleges, the proceedings of these colleges, the administration of the fund in these colleges, and all that sort of thing. The Government has the power to enforce, if it thinks force is needed, a fair and equitable distribution of this fund.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the provision as it was introduced by the venerable Senator from Vermont. I hope Senators will give attention to what I am saying, because it is a matter of very deep and vital importance to us, not so much as to the amount which the whites would lose if they force us to an unequal distribution of this fund which shall operate unjustly upon the whites; we have the power to withdraw from the appropriations which we have heretofore made to the colored agricultural college a sum sufficient to equalize it; but that is not what I desire to do. I desire the State of Mississippi and the other Southern States to be treated here not as predestined and unreclaimable criminals requiring the supervision and care of Congress in the disposition of the fund.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator let me ask him a question there?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Premising by saying that the amendment that has been offered here providing for the distribution had its birth in the suggestion made by the Senator from Alabama—

Mr. GEORGE. I know that.

Mr. HALE. Who stated that there were colored schools there, two institutions that ought to be cared for, the question I wish to ask is this: The Senator says it would operate unfairly in Mississippi because it would give $3 to colored schools upon this basis—

Mr. GEORGE. About that.

Mr. HALE. To $2 to the white schools. Of course that must be upon the basis of there being a colored population of three-fifths and two-fifths of the whites.

Mr. GEORGE. Nearly that proportion.

Mr. HALE. Now, if that is the case, what does the Senator mean by saying that "We, in Mississippi, may be tempted to withdraw our benefactions that we have given to the colored people?"

Mr. GEORGE. I mean the white people, the tax-payers, of the State.

Mr. HALE. It is difficult to see, if there are three colored people there who share in legislation to two white people, how it is that the "we" can withdraw from the colored people. Why may not the colored people say "we will withdraw from the white people unless we have this aid?"

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, I expected that, Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. Then I have not surprised the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, not at all. It was just impossible to get through the discussion of this bill without a waving of the ensanguined garment.

Mr. HALE. That has not been brought up by me. The Senator himself has provoked it.

Mr. GEORGE. I knew it was impossible to get through with the discussion without interjecting into this matter the relations, the assumed or reputed relations, or the actual relations between the races in Mississippi.

Mr. HALE. The Senator himself is talking about that, making that the basis of his talk.

Mr. GEORGE. I have not done any such thing, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. May I make a suggestion to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I think I had better go on—

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. GEORGE. Because, if I allow interruptions, we shall get into a sectional debate, it is very evident.

Mr. BLAIR. At all events, let me make a suggestion.

Mr. GEORGE. All right; go on.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no State where the two races exist but where each race would furnish students enough for a very much larger college than all these funds will maintain, and where the two races are the fund is to be divided between two colleges by the suggestions of this amendment. Now, would it satisfy the Senator if the Senator from Maine would modify his amendment so that this fund would be equally divided between the two colleges?

Mr. HALE. Would that do to apply, for instance, to a State like Delaware, where there are only a few?

Mr. BLAIR. We have difficulties enough as it is.

Mr. HALE. Or take Tennessee.

Mr. GEORGE. I am perfectly willing to have an equal division. That has been done before.

Mr. HALE. How would that work in Texas?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know that I have anything to do with Texas or Tennessee.

Mr. BLAIR. It costs nearly as much to maintain a school for one hundred pupils as for one hundred and fifty. Substantially the same equipment is necessary. The white college will be larger at one time and at others it will be surpassed by the colored. An equal division to be maintained for all time ought to satisfy everybody.

Mr. HALE. I do not object to the equal division, but I see plainly that, while that might satisfy Mississippi and perhaps Alabama, it would not satisfy Texas, Arkansas, Delaware, or North Carolina.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine if he would object to the proposition made by the Senator from Louisiana—that is, that the fund be distributed in proportion to the number of students attending each college for the year previous to the time it was paid.

Mr. HALE. That would not be as good a plan.

Mr. GEORGE. I believe I am entitled to the floor. When I was interrupted by the question of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], I was about to read to the Senate the judgment of what was right and proper in this matter of the Committee on Education and Labor and of the venerable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is the father of this bill, and that judgment is in these words:

Provided, That no money shall be paid out under this act to any State or Territory for the support and maintenance of a college where a distinction of race or color is made in the admission of students, but the establishment and maintenance of such colleges separately for white and colored students shall be held to be in compliance with the provisions of this act.

It seems to me that provision ought to be enough to satisfy Senators. That was as far as this Senate went on three occasions—I believe it was three occasions—when we passed what was called the Blair educational bill.

There was no attempt—and if I misstate it I desire to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], so that I may be corrected—there was no attempt, and, if any, no successful attempt, made in either of those bills as they passed this Senate to provide for a pro rata race division of the funds.

Now, Mr. President, here comes this amendment right in the face, right in the teeth of the constant and unforced practice of the State of Mississippi under the original act of 1862, by which the State not only equally divided that fund, which she was not bound to divide, between the two races, but supplementing that fund in each college by taxation raised from the general mass of the people.

I hope, therefore, that Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, after voting down the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, if they see proper to do so—I am very willing to vote against it—will allow the provision upon that subject to stand as it was draughted by the Senator from Vermont and approved by the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SAWYER. I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope we may be able to get through with the bill to-night.

Several SENATORS. We can not do so.

Mr. SAWYER. I will not press the motion if the Senator from Vermont thinks he can get a vote on his bill. We have not had any executive session since Tuesday. Several executive messages have come in since and they ought to be referred.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is now a quarter to 6 o'clock and I do not think that we can get through with this bill to-night. I hope the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin will be adopted.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendments that are pending be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending amendments will be printed.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that the bill as amended be printed, with any amendments pending.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill as amended, together with the amendments submitted, will be printed, in the absence of objection.

Before putting the motion for an executive session—

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Several SENATORS. Let us have an executive session.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw my motion.

ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICE OF THE SENATE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Before putting the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] the Chair appoints, under the resolution of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to inquire into the administrative service of the Senate, Mr. ALLISON, Mr. PLATT, Mr. CULLOM, Mr. DOLPH, Mr. WASHBURN, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. CARLISLE.

Mr. ALLISON was subsequently, on his own motion, excused from service on the committee.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HIGGINS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7795) for the relief of certain property-owners in the city of Washington, D. C., reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3362) to regulate, define, establish, and secure the civil, political, and property rights of such American citizens as have intermarried with the Chickasaw Indians, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (S. 4133) to extend the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States as the same is defined in section 709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to include the judgments and decrees of the highest courts of the Cherokee, Creek, Seminole, Choctaw, and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, respectively; which was read twice by its title.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SAYER. I renew my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Wisconsin to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 23, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 21, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE SILVER BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to lay on the table the appeal of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], the yeas and nays having been ordered upon the proposition.

Mr. BLAND. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered. If the House will indulge me a moment—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] moves to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAND. I simply desire to make one statement—

Mr. MCKINLEY. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is upon the question of reconsideration.

Mr. BLAND. I simply want to withdraw the appeal.

Mr. MCKINLEY. We want to vote upon the appeal.

Mr. BLAND. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered, and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw the demand.

Mr. CANNON. My point of order is this: The appeal of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] having been made on Friday, private-bill day, although the yeas and nays were ordered and although it is unfinished business, yet it seems to me that it ought to go over until next Friday, the next private-bill day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit that this question is not in order at this time. The rule directs the order of business in a very simple way, as I understand it. There is, first, prayer by the Chaplain, then the approval of the Journal, then the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, and after that unfinished business. Now, we have not reached unfinished business at all, and the next thing in order, by virtue of the rule, is to dispose of business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. But this is a motion relating to the disposal of business on the Speaker's table. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is interrupting a roll-call.

Mr. SPRINGER. The roll-call has not begun. I desire to submit the point whether the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is not now entitled to withdraw his appeal, no decision of the House having been made upon the question—

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. And no previous question having been ordered.

The SPEAKER. There has been a decision to have the yeas and nays, which is a constitutional right.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is not a decision upon the question itself. It is simply a decision as to the mode of taking the vote; and, no decision having been made upon the question, I hold that the gentleman is entitled to withdraw his appeal. Now I ask the Chair to look at that question carefully, because it relates to the proper order of business in the House.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has any decision upon the point the Chair will be glad to have his attention called to it. The Chair understands that the matter has been decided the other way repeatedly.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the Chair will point to those decisions I should be very glad. I call to the attention of the Chair the Digest, page 553:

A motion may be withdrawn at any time before a decision or amendment (Rule XVI, clause 2), but not after the previous question is ordered. It may, however, be withdrawn while the House is dividing on a demand for the previous question (Journal, 2, 29, page 241); and all incidental questions fall with such withdrawal (Journal, 1, 26, page 57).

It has been held and acquiesced in by the House that a motion (or proposition) can not be withdrawn after the previous question is ordered, that being held to be a "decision" that the House desires to vote thereon. It has also been held that a motion to suspend the rules can not be modified or withdrawn after said motion has been seconded, as required by clause 2, Rule XXVIII.

Now, there has been no decision upon this subject. Ordering the yeas and nays is simply an ordering of the mode of taking the vote; it is not a decision upon the question, and therefore the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has the right to withdraw his appeal.

Mr. MCKINLEY. The question is upon my motion, and not upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]. The gentleman from Missouri appealed from the decision of the Chair, I moved to lay that appeal upon the table, and thereupon the yeas and nays were ordered upon my motion. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call the attention of the Chair to the rule which states that all incidental questions fall with the withdrawal of the main question. Now, the motion to lay the appeal upon the table is an incidental question, and therefore it falls with the withdrawal of the main question.

The SPEAKER. But the motion that is now under consideration is the motion to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. And that, I say, is an incidental question, which falls with the withdrawal of the main question.

The SPEAKER. No; there has been a decision by the Chair since the motion was made, a decision that it was out of order, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] appealed from that decision. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] moved to lay that appeal on the table, and upon that the House has already ordered the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is very true.

The SPEAKER. And that can not be withdrawn.

Mr. SPRINGER. But what is the question before the House? It is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

The SPEAKER. Not at all.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the original question.

The SPEAKER. Not at all. The question before the House is on the motion to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the gentleman from Missouri offered a resolution in regard to this business.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Whatever is done (if I may preface the inquiry I am going to make by a single observation) ought to be done in order. I understand that, the yeas and nays having been demanded under the constitutional provision, one-fifth of the members present rose in their places to support that demand. Now, how can that action be reconsidered by a vote of the House?

The SPEAKER. That has been repeatedly done and is settled by the practice of the House. But if the motion to reconsider should be adopted the question would then recur upon ordering the yeas and nays; and a decision a second time would be conclusive.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a further parliamentary inquiry. If this appeal be laid on the table, will the appeal relate to the business of Friday or to-day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to answer that question. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. BLAND)—ayes 92, noes 122.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 92, the noes 122; and the motion to reconsider is lost. The Clerk will call the roll.

After the Clerk had proceeded some time with the roll-call—
The SPEAKER said: There is so much confusion in the Hall that it is impossible for the Clerk to hear the responses of members. The House will come to order.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I ask that the Chair may announce the exact question to be voted upon.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] to lay on the table the appeal taken by the gentleman from Missouri from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. As I voted under the misapprehension, I would like to know whether I can not change my vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will begin the call again.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 146, nays 45, not voting 136; as follows:

 Mr. WILSON, of Washington, with Mr. O'FERRALL, for this day.
 Mr. HALL with Mr. STOCKDALE, for this day.
 Mr. ENLOE, Mr. HEARD, Mr. CLUNIE, and Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, withdrew their votes.

Mr. O'NEIL, of Massachusetts. My colleague [Mr. ANDREW] is absent and paired. Were he here he would vote in the affirmative.

The Clerk proceeded to read the names of those voting.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I object.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the recapitulation of the names.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. FORMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FORMAN. I have been as diligent, perhaps, as most members of the House in the discharge of my official duties; but I am the last man to accept credit for anything which I do not believe I deserve. On the 2d day of this month I obtained leave of absence for ten days. On the 4th I was in Springfield, Ill., and yet on that day action was had on the administrative bill here, and I was counted by the Speaker and the Clerk as being present in this Hall and refusing to vote. The Journal of the 4th instant shows the same as the RECORD, and I desire that the proper correction shall be made, as I do not want to impose upon my constituency by being at home and being recorded here at the same time. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is put down as present and not voting upon the Journal at the time he specifies. The gentleman states that he was not present.

Mr. FORMAN. No, sir; I was in Springfield, Ill., on that day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will be corrected to correspond with the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not a matter for objection; he has a right to have it corrected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Journal will be corrected.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce it as soon as the House is in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires the attention of the House on this matter.

The question was somewhat discussed on yesterday as to the condition of the bill which had been referred by the Speaker, and the record of which in the Journal was not concurred in by the House, but was rejected, or, if it can be said to be—the Journal not having been then adopted—erased. The provision of our rules requires not only that such bills should be referred, but that a statement of the reference should be put into the Journal and also into the RECORD. The statement was made in the RECORD. It was also put into the Journal, which was submitted to the consideration of the House. The House saw fit not to permit that record to be made and to become a part of the Journal. That left a somewhat difficult question as to the status of the bill.

The opinion of the present occupant of the chair, as an individual, would be very much in accord with what was said by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER], that the refusal to record a fact did not obliterate the fact itself, any more than the destruction of a deed would prevent the transfer of property which had already taken place, or the scuttling of a boat, which had carried a man across a lake, would reland him on the other side. [Laughter.] Nevertheless, the action of the House may have had its origin in another motive, which was that it would not give its sanction, by recording it in the Journal, to a transaction which it desired to subvert; and while it might seem to the Chair that some definite action ought to be taken by the House, yet, as gentlemen may have noticed, within the last few days parliamentary law does not seem to be an exact science. [Laughter and applause.]

The great object which every one must have is in trying to arrive, in proper fashion, at a legitimate decision; and it is especially the business of the occupant of the chair to give the House, so far as in him lies, all proper opportunity for the transaction of business in the manner which the House may determine upon, subject to all the rules of the House.

The Chair, therefore, in order to enable the House to pass its judgment upon this question, whether the bill should go to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, will take action in regard to it, with an opportunity for the House to review the same, believing that that will enable the House to come quickest to its conclusion upon the subject. That conclusion, the Chair need not say, ought to be arrived at with reference to all the business of the House; and the House ought to come to its decision in some way that will not disarrange its business. As the Chair remarked the other day, this reference which was made of the bill was made in accordance with the custom which has prevailed ever since the establishment of the rules of the House.

The Chair believes, after a careful examination of the Senate amendments to the House bill, which is known as the silver bill, that it comes within the purview of Rule XX, which prescribes that any amendment made by the Senate to any House bill must be considered first in the Committee of the Whole, which would have been so liable to be considered had it originated in the House. It is not necessary to enlarge upon that point except to point out the fact that the Senate amendments to the House bill entirely strike out the first section, which contains the words of appropriation in the House bill, and substitute another section containing no words of appropriation, but embodying an altogether different line of action, to wit, the substitution of the fashioning of silver bars and the coining of all silver which may be presented instead of the purchase by the Treasurer of a certain amount of silver and the coining of it for the use of the Government. Another section is also stricken out and a substitution made; and in that substitution is an appropriation for the purpose of carrying out, not what the House ordered, but what the Senate ordered.

This plainly is a new proposition, which requires its consideration in the Committee of the Whole House. Its consideration being required in the Committee of the Whole House—and this does not depend upon the point of order being made, because it is a description of a class of bills—the Chair is of opinion that it should be referred to the committee, and the reason for the opinion that it should be referred to the committee arises from this provision in the rule, that all proposed legislation must be referred to certain committees. Legislation can be proposed to this House either by a member of it or by the Senate. Such has always been the construction of the identical language which is used in this set of rules and in those which preceded it. Under those circumstances and in conformity to the rules, the Chair announces to the House that in obedience to the rules the bill has been referred, is now referred, to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. From that decision, if the House thinks the Chair is wrong, an appeal can be taken.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move to lay that appeal on the table.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the gentleman will allow some debate upon it.

Mr. MCKINLEY again addressed the Chair.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from Missouri has taken an appeal from the decision of the Chair and he has the floor to debate the proposition. It is debatable.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to move to change the reference made by the Speaker? Under the old rules it was in order when the Speaker referred a bill, to move to change the reference.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It is impossible to hear what the gentleman is saying, as there is so much confusion in the House.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. There is no occasion for confusion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The inquiry I submit to the Speaker is, whether under the present code of rules it is in order to make a motion changing the reference. Under the old rules it was in order. If the question has arisen under the new rules I am not familiar with the precedent and do not know how the Chair has ruled.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the rules point out the only method of correction, and that there would be no right to make such a motion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the Chair will allow a single suggestion, as it is a matter of law, whether that reference which the Speaker has made is yet complete. The rule which corrects erroneous references, of course, only applies to a completed reference. Now, the reference made by the Speaker in open House is made as Speaker, and is not a completed reference, of course, if the House by its order changes the reference. Therefore I would submit that the House has the power to change the reference from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures to some other committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would not come in under that motion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no desire to do anything except to submit the inquiry.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio made a motion to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor.

Mr. MCKINLEY. This matter has delayed this House two days. The very question that is involved in the decision of the Chair has been discussed over and over again.

Mr. BLAND. We have not discussed it at all. We have not discussed that point.

Mr. MCKINLEY. And upon my motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLAND. I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri knows that a motion to lay on the table takes precedence.

Mr. BLAND. But I had the floor.

Mr. MILLS. Does not the Chair know that in order for the gentleman from Ohio to make the motion he must obtain the floor, and he can not obtain the floor while a gentleman is on the floor discussing a question that is debatable under the rules?

Mr. BLAND. I had taken an appeal and was going on to answer the objections made by the Speaker in his argument. The Speaker has made a ruling and there has been no debate upon it.

Mr. SPRINGER. And I think I can show the Chair that his ruling is wrong, if I can be heard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] will proceed.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, if I can only get order I would like to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. BLAND. I want to call attention to the bill. Having a copy of the bill before me, I want to call attention to the two appropriations.

The appropriation in the House bill, before it went to the Senate, is found in section 1. That section provides for the purchase of bullion and the issuing of Treasury notes. It says:

A sum sufficient to carry into effect the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

It is very true that that appropriation is made for the purchase of $4,500,000 of silver bullion per month, on which notes are to be issued, and a sufficient sum of money is to be appropriated to purchase the bullion ($4,500,000 a month), and also for the issuing of notes.

Now, the Senate amendment to that is:

That a sufficient sum of money is hereby appropriated, etc.

One is "a sufficient sum," and the other is "that a sum sufficient;" a mere transposition of the words.

Now, the Senate provides for the free coinage of silver, that is all, and the issuing of notes upon the coined dollar and also upon the bullion.

Mr. COWLES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. It is impossible to hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND. It is hardly possible for me to hear my own language.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the gentlemen near by the gentleman from Missouri are responsible for much of the trouble in hearing. The gentleman will suspend until order is obtained, when the Chair presumes the House can go on with its business.

Mr. COWLES. I would suggest to the Chair that a large portion of the trouble is from gentlemen on the other side of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen on the other side of the House, so far as they are amenable, will conform to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina, and the House will be in order.

Mr. BLAND. Now, the Speaker has claimed that, because the Senate amendments required an appropriation for a different purpose from the House bill, that necessarily sends it to the Committee of the Whole. I do not think it follows at all. The appropriation is the matter that is material. The Senate bill provides for free coinage; the House bill provides for the purchase of bullion. But the appropriation made by the Senate bill, the language used, is identical with that of the House bill, and so far as the purposes and the objects of the two appropriations are concerned it is not material. Indeed, the Senate bill, on a fair construction, makes a much less appropriation than the House bill, for the House bill appropriates not less than $4,500,000 every month, or $54,000,000 annually, while the Senate bill simply appropriates a sufficient sum of money to coin, even going to that extent, which I do not, for our general appropriation bills appropriate the money for the coinage of gold and silver, and the carrying of these appropriations for the Mint service. So that presumably the matter of the appropriation of the Senate bill would be confined to the printing of the certificates alone, which is a mere insignificant sum compared with the House appropriation; and it is in harmony, so far as this is concerned, with the House appropriation, because the House appropriation requires the Secretary of the Treasury to issue these certificates, and the appropriation is made for the certificates in the House bill. The appropriation in the Senate bill is made for the issuing of certificates, and they are largely, therefore, identical even if that which is claimed be true.

But, Mr. Speaker, I contend that this House has already settled this question, and it is too late now to raise that point. By the vote of this House striking from the Journal the reference of this bill or the record of it, this House has determined that that bill is upon the Speaker's table now; and it will not do to say that because the House struck out of the record a reference that was null and void therefore the Speaker can now refer a bill or the House by such a proceeding as this can refer it. The reference of the Speaker, according to the vote of the House, and it was based upon that—and the whole argument was based upon the proposition that the Speaker had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of that bill to dispose of it in the way he did, and that his act was a nullity. Now, I suppose if we take the illustration of the Speaker himself, that if a deed was made and a judgment rendered which was a nullity upon its face, the destruction of that record and the destruction of that deed would make no difference whatever.

Now, I say this matter is already settled by a vote of this House. This bill is now practically upon the Speaker's table, and if this reference and this decision of the Speaker is voted down we have but one thing to do, and that is to go to the Speaker's table and take this bill up and pass it, or else get a conference committee and have a conference between the House and the Senate and agree upon some bill that may be passed. So that I say, if the opinion of the Speaker is not the opinion of the House, that bill lies upon the Speaker's table to be immediately reported to this House for its action; and now is the time for gentlemen who are in favor of the free coinage of silver to show by their votes their confidence in the free coinage of silver, and the confidence of their constituencies will not be betrayed upon the floor of the American Congress on this bill by a vote of the House. You can not dodge behind the fact that the Speaker has rendered an opinion that you have already thought that bill was not referred, and that he has no power to thus refer it. It is on the Speaker's table by a vote of this House, and if these gentlemen do not stultify the action of the House then they will be compelled to stand upon the point that the bill is still upon the Speaker's table and has to be laid before this House.

I have another case in point very analogous to the one which the gentleman from Georgia the other day laid before the House—the bill of Albert H. Emery—which I will read from the RECORD:

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3538) for the relief of Albert H. Emery, with the following amendment of the Senate thereto, and a request for a committee of conference:

"Line 10, strike out 'fifty' and insert 'one hundred and twenty-five.'"

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House non-concur in the amendment of the Senate and agree to the request for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Now, there is a bill that has passed the House with an appropriation of $50,000; it went to the Senate, and the appropriation was raised to $125,000, and yet the Speaker, under this rule, laid that bill before the House.

Mr. PETERS. But that was an appropriation for the same object, namely, the payment of Mr. Emery for the invention of a certain testing machine. I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question: If this bill had been prepared and introduced by the gentleman himself, providing for free coinage and providing that "a sufficient sum of money to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," would not such a bill have to have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BLAND. I will answer the gentleman by saying that that is not at all the proposition before the House. The proposition before the House is an appropriation in direct terms, and the very language of the two Houses—

Mr. PETERS. I realize that the gentleman can not answer the question without stultifying his position.

Mr. BLAND. Oh, well, the gentleman can stultify himself if he wants to, by voting to sustain the Speaker.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here was an appropriation bill that went to the Senate with an appropriation of $50,000, the amount was raised there to $125,000; and yet, although that appropriation was largely increased in the Senate, the bill when it came back was laid before this House by the Speaker and was not sent to the Committee of the Whole or to any other committee. The House bill contained an appropriation of money. The House, by a special order, took that bill from the Committee of the Whole and considered it in the House, and thus, by special order, dispensed with consideration in Committee of the Whole, and the case is on all fours with the case quoted this morning by myself and also the one quoted by the gentleman from Georgia the other day.

But, laying aside all these questions, here is a matter that has been adjudicated by the House itself, by a vote of the House, and I hope the House will not now reverse its action upon this question. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Speaker is under a misapprehension with regard to the practice of the House heretofore with reference to House bills with Senate amendments. The Speaker stated to the House the day before yesterday that the reference of this bill, out of the session of the House, to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures was not an unusual procedure, but was in the ordinary course of business. He said:

In the regular course of business the officer of the House to whom the Speaker has intrusted the clerical work of the reference of bills, the Journal clerk, informed the Speaker that upon his list of bills which were to be referred, under the rules, to committees of the House, in the same manner as hundreds, and possibly thousands, of bills have been referred heretofore, was the bill known as the bill for silver coinage which had come from the Senate, and the Chair was asked if he had any particular direction to make in regard to it.

The Speaker further said:

What, then, was the duty of the Speaker in regard to it? Obviously, to refer it in the same manner in which hundreds and thousands of bills have been referred at this session.

Now, I was led to believe from that statement that hundreds and thousands of bills in the same parliamentary situation as this bill had been so referred by the Speaker during this session of Congress, but I have taken the pains, in two hours' time this morning, to examine every page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD where such references appear, and I say here now, and this RECORD will prove it, that the silver bill is the only bill of this kind that has been so referred. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PETERS. The gentleman from Illinois will remember that every appropriation bill that comes back from the Senate with amendments is referred to the Committee on Appropriations in the same way.

Mr. SPRINGER. I deny it; I deny it; and I challenge the gentleman from Kansas and I challenge the Speaker to point to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this House which shows a single case in which a House bill with a Senate amendment has been referred to a standing committee of this House by the Speaker without calling the attention of the House to it. Now, I stand upon the RECORD and I challenge any gentleman to produce any evidence to the contrary of what I have stated. The Speaker made that statement in order to influence the judgment of this House at the very time his action in referring this bill was under consideration and when no answer could be made to it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I desire to call attention to the further fact that the practice of the House has been uniform, so far as House bills with Senate amendments are concerned, to the effect that those bills have been laid before the House in the order of "business on the Speaker's table," just as was done in the Emery case, to which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has referred, and in the cases of all other bills of that kind.

I call particular attention to the Emery case. After the Speaker had laid before the House several other House bills with Senate amendments, he also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3538) for the relief of Albert H. Emery, with the accompanying amendment of the Senate thereto and a request for a committee of conference.

The amendment of the Senate to that bill was this: Line 10, strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred and twenty-five"—an amendment increasing the amount of the appropriation made by the House from $50,000 to $125,000. Yet the Speaker laid that bill before the House in the ordinary course of business as business on the Speaker's table. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] thereupon made this motion:

I move that the House non-concur in the amendment of the Senate and agree to the request for a conference.

That motion was agreed to, and that disposed of the matter. And such has been the course of proceeding as to all bills of this class.

Now, if the Chair will pardon me again, I want to call attention to the fact that the bills coming from the Senate which have been referred in this way to committees by the Speaker are Senate bills, bills originating in the Senate, which under the rule are properly so referred. They have been principally public-building bills, pension bills and relief bills, bills which originated in the Senate and which, never having been before any committee of this House, were properly, under the rule, referred by the Speaker to the appropriate committees. But that is not this case.

This is a House bill with Senate amendments to it; and I reassert the fact that no other bill of this kind has ever been referred by the Speaker of this House to a standing committee, so far as appears in our proceedings as recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Now, what is the condition of the question? A few days ago, in face of this record and in face of the fact that it was generally believed that, if this bill were laid before the House and an opportunity afforded the House to vote to concur in the Senate amendments, that vote would pass in the affirmative—that was the understanding of the country, that was the understanding of this House, that if the House should vote upon this bill as it did upon the Emery bill and upon all other House bills with Senate amendments, the House would vote to concur in the Senate amendments and thus pass the bill; and in order to stifle the voice of the people's representatives, in order to prevent this House from doing what our constituents demand that we should do, in order to prevent the representatives of the people from carrying out the people's demands and behests, that bill was by the act of the Speaker referred to a committee of the House; and the House was not consulted as to the matter. And now, after the House has reversed that action, stricken that record of reference from our Journal, the Speaker takes the bill up from the table and refers it to the same committee with no power on our part to reach it, to make a motion to concur in the Senate amendments, unless we override the decision on an appeal from the decision of the Chair as we are now undertaking to do. So that I hold this as an attempt to revolutionize the rules themselves, which were revolutionary in their inception—

Mr. HAYES. Conception.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, and conception, as the gentleman from Iowa suggests. I was somewhat amused yesterday by the remarks of the honorable gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] when he commented upon the preamble to the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], and which was rejected by the House. It reminded me of the fact that "drowning men catch at straws." When the gentlemen on the other side were overwhelmed in the flood tide of opposition raised by this act of the Speaker they did not find a straw upon the surface at which to grasp, but they clutched at a rejected preamble and vainly imagined that would keep them above the waves. But a rejected preamble will not save you, gentlemen. You are dodging this question; your Speaker is dodging it; and the people know you are dodging it. We intend to have a fair vote on this question before this Congress adjourns. You may put it aside now; you may get it out of the way by arbitrary rulings; but those who aid in getting it out of the way will be repudiated by their constituents at the polls in November. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I want to call the attention of the House to the further fact that, while it is believed a majority of this House would concur in these amendments of the Senate, it is well known to the country that the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, as at present constituted, is hostile to this measure of the Senate, hostile to the free coinage of silver. That committee reported against the same proposition heretofore; so that an unusual course is to be taken in regard to this bill; it is to be referred arbitrarily to an unfriendly committee—

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I rise to a question of order. I desire to have a correct vote on this question of sustaining the action of the Speaker, and it seems to me our time ought to be confined to the consideration of the question of the propriety of the ruling. I insist that the gentleman from Illinois, in discussing this question in the manner he does, is not giving us any light on the subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] will proceed in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg pardon of the gentleman and of the House if I digress in some small degree. There ought to be some latitude, of course, in discussing a question of this kind, a great public question.

I want to call the attention of the House to the further fact that all public-building bills which have passed the House and have gone to the Senate and there been amended have been laid before the House by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's ten minutes have expired.

Mr. BLAND. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am obliged to the gentleman from Missouri for his kindness and will conclude in a very few minutes. All these House bills for public buildings, which have been returned with Senate amendments, have been laid before the House in open House, and the House has taken action on them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And pension bills also.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; pension bills also. So that there has been no deviation from the rule heretofore with regard to House bills with Senate amendments. They have all been laid before the House for its action.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the proper order of business here? We are now upon the Speaker's table, and having reached a bill on the Speaker's table it is the province of this House to deal with that bill just as with any other bill that might be reached in its order. The Speaker has admitted by his ruling that this bill was on the table, and that he undertook to refer it to a committee, the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The bill is now upon the Speaker's table under an order of the House; and under the rules of the House it is our province to pass upon that bill in any way we see fit; it is subject here to every point of order and every parliamentary motion that can be made in reference to any bill before the House. The first proposition that could be made in regard to this bill (if any gentleman saw fit to make it) would be that the Senate amendments should receive their first consideration in Committee of the Whole. That would be a point of order which the Speaker could rule upon; and, if he sustained it, it would be the right of any member to take an appeal from that ruling; and if the ruling were sustained by the House the bill would go not to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, but to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. If the opinion of the Chair should not be sustained by the House, the bill would still be in our hands—what for?

The rule says, "to be at once disposed of, as the House may determine." Therefore, we could then properly move to concur in the Senate amendments to the bill, and it would be the duty of the Speaker to put that motion to the House. If a majority should vote in the affirmative then the bill would be passed, so far as Congress is concerned, and would go to the President. So that gentleman can see how near (and perhaps how far, under this ruling) we are now to a final decision upon the silver bill.

If the ordinary rules of procedure can be had, if we can proceed as in other cases, then the Speaker must lay this bill before the House for our consideration, for the action of the people's Representatives, for them to consider and deal with it as they see fit. If, Mr. Speaker, we can have that right, if we can ever reach the question properly presented, whether the House will agree to the Senate amendments to the bill or not, there can be no question in the minds of any gentleman present that the action here will be overwhelmingly in favor of the adoption of the Senate amendments. We will then have performed our whole duty to our constituents and to our country.

I yield the remainder of the time back to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BLAND. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. CRISP. As I intend, Mr. Speaker, to vote to sustain the appeal from the decision of the Chair, I desire to say a word or two respecting the reasons which influence my vote.

As the Speaker has often stated, the rules of the House are a growth. They come from experience and practice. Very often the impression the individual Representative has as to what ought to be done under a given rule, as it stands in our code, is inconsistent with the usage and practice of the House under such rule.

I can cite members to many instances of this. Under the old rules the Speaker was expressly forbidden after the second roll-call to recognize a gentleman to ask unanimous consent to cast his vote; and yet for very many years, notwithstanding that express rule, the practice of the Speaker, assented to by the House, was, whenever a gentleman stated that he was in his seat during the roll-call and had not voted, to permit him to vote. The rule seemed plain and unequivocal, and yet the practice under it was essentially different from the rule itself.

Now, take the rule under which the Speaker referred this bill. Whatever my impression or your impression may be as to the meaning of the rule, standing alone, when we come to vote on its construction we must vote in the light of the decisions heretofore made upon it and the practice of the House under it. I have referred the House on a previous occasion to the decision of the present Speaker made when a point of order was raised that the House bill for the condemnation of land in the District of Columbia for a post-office building, which had been amended in the Senate so as to make it carry an appropriation, was not such a bill as, under the rules and practice of the House, could be taken from the Speaker's table and laid before the House for consideration; the Speaker distinctly decided that it was his duty to submit the bill to the House for its action.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has shown you that during this whole session of Congress the silver bill is the first House bill with a Senate amendment which has been privately referred. Why, Mr. Speaker, on the bill involving the question of coinage of silver, should we depart from what has been the usage and practice of the House? What is there peculiar in legislation respecting silver which seems to make a certain party in this House and country so anxious to do secretly that which they do in regard to it? We are told, and we believe it, that the demonetization of silver was a secret process; that it was done without full notice. It was done when the people were not aware of what was being done.

Here we have a repetition of those tactics. Here you find a House bill coming from the Senate with an amendment providing for the free coinage of silver. Here you find that as to that bill the ordinary course of parliamentary procedure in respect to such matters is not followed, but a new and different practice obtains. The bill is not laid before the House, but is secretly referred to a committee. We are not permitted to consider the legislation proposed by the Senate; we are not permitted to have a direct vote upon the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLAND. I yield two or three minutes longer to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CRISP. Now, Mr. Speaker, I recognize the necessity of rules of procedure, although I regard the rules we have as extremely vicious. I believe, however, they do what they were designed to do. They put it in the power of a majority of the House, with the aid of the Committee on Rules, to do pretty much what they please. You gentlemen have so construed and so enforced them as to absolutely stifle the voice of the minority.

A mixed majority here now desire "to do business." I believe the chief advantage claimed for our rules is that they enable a majority to do business; and yet when we seek, under the rules you have established, "to do business," you pursue a course contrary to the usages and practice of the House, which with the aid of the Committee on Rules will enable you to defeat and deprive us of the right to do so. Against that kind of practice, sir, I protest. While I have not always sympathized with the purposes and intention of gentlemen to "do business," while I have not always sympathized with the great desire expressed by gentlemen on the other side to attain "results," yet, Mr. Speaker, when I find a practice has obtained since the beginning of this Congress, by which the Republican majority has been permitted to attain practical results and to do business, I propose to follow that practice, when by following it the majority of the House—all the Democrats and a few of the Republicans together making such majority—can attain the practical result of free coinage of silver.

I propose now to adhere to the Speaker's construction and the practice, not to the letter of the law. I call your attention to the practice under the rule; I call your attention to the decisions under the rule, and I confidently say to you that, conforming to both, we can, if we will, in this case attain practical results.

If on this appeal the decision of the Speaker is overruled, the silver bill is on our table. It will be submitted to the House (the House has expressly decided that it ought to have been submitted), a motion will then be in order to concur in the Senate amendments, and those gentlemen whose constituents demand that there should be in this country free coinage of silver can settle the question, so far as the legislative department of the Government is concerned, before the sun goes down to-day.

Mr. FITCH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRISP. One moment. If, on the other hand, this ruling of the Speaker, which is new and a departure from the practice, is sustained, then this bill is sent to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, where neither that committee nor the House can control its fate. Even if that committee were friendly to the free coinage of silver, they could do nothing more than to report their bill back and put it upon the Calendar. When it reached the Calendar, there it would sleep until the Committee on Rules gave life and vitality to it.

That committee, and that committee alone, if this bill is referred, can give this House an opportunity to vote on the question of the free coinage of silver. How does that committee feel on the question? My friend from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON], who claims to be an earnest advocate of free coinage, tells us that the Committee on Rules are patriotic and that they will take care of the interests of the Republican party. So they will, Mr. Speaker, but many of us here are anxious to take care of the interests of the people, and not specially of the interests of the Republican party.

We are not left to conjecture how the majority of the Committee on Rules stand. When we were permitted to consider this bill before, how did they permit us to consider it? They brought in an iron-clad rule by which a certain number of days were given for debate. In the rule an hour was fixed at which the previous question should be ordered upon the bill and pending amendments. That was an iron-clad rule. What was it for? The rule on its face was a harsh one, because in saying that at a fixed hour the previous question should be considered as ordered upon the bill and pending amendments, it limited our right to propose amendments. Harsh as it was, however, under it there might be offered, first, an amendment; second, an amendment to the amendment; third, a substitute, and, fourth, an amendment to the substitute—four motions. Under the rules no more could be offered until one of those was disposed of. This harsh rule was adopted by a party vote.

Then what happened? Four motions could be made, four motions only. The Speaker of the House recognized four Republicans to move amendments, not one of which touched the question of free coinage of silver. Mr. BLAND had been on his feet all the time demanding recognition to offer a substitute providing for the free coinage of silver, but the Speaker could not see him until after he had recognized the four Republicans and the right to amend had been exhausted, then he blandly turned to the gentleman from Missouri and said "No further amendments are in order." [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Are you left in doubt as to how the Committee on Rules stand on the question of the free coinage of silver? Is there room for speculation? Now, if you sustain the ruling this bill goes to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. They may report it back as they please, and it goes upon the Calendar. They please to report against the free coinage of silver. The gentlemen do not deny it. When it goes upon the Calendar it lies there until the Committee on Rules bring in another iron-clad rule, which, perhaps, will read about this way: "Resolved, That this bill shall be taken up at such a day, that it shall be debated so long, and at such an hour a vote shall be taken upon the bill and pending amendments." The rule will be again adopted, and then the Speaker, in sympathy with the gold men of this country, will again recognize their representatives alone to offer amendments to the bill.

Mr. Speaker, those representatives who desire to secure legislation in favor of the free coinage of silver may rest assured that their only hope of success lies in overruling the decision of the Speaker. In so doing you are not violating the precedents. In so doing you are not violating the practice of the House. So that the people may rightly conclude, the people may justly determine, that those representatives who vote to sustain the decision of the Speaker in this case are opposed to the free coinage of silver, and that those gentlemen who vote in this case that this bill is on the Speaker's table and must now be presented to the House for consideration are those who stand as the recognized and earnest advocates of the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire how much time I have remaining.

The SPEAKER. Nineteen minutes more.

Mr. BLAND. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TOWNSEND].

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I will not attempt to say anything that would throw any light with reference to the question of the rule. Many gentlemen are better fit to discuss that matter than I am, but I say this: It does seem to me that this question, if it is not, ought to be res adjudicata, so far as the present action is proposed. Now, sir, if I did not believe that this was the only way to the consideration of the free coinage of silver, I might cast a different vote from what I have cast, and I know, and gentlemen on this floor know, how, when this bill was before the House for consideration in the first instance, there was no opportunity or permission given to offer any amendment except such as was at the disposal of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures; and if this bill should go to that committee, we have no reason to believe that this House will ever be permitted to cast a vote for the free coinage of silver.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the people whom I have the honor to represent upon this floor are for the free coinage of silver, every man, woman, and child of every party in that State; and did I not vote for an opportunity to get consideration of that question I would be unfaithful to the people whom I represent upon this floor. [Applause.] They look upon the demonetization of silver as the most infamous crime that ever was perpetrated upon a producing people of this country and upon the people of this world. [Applause.] They desire to have that reversed. We simply want to get the matter up here so that we can reverse it, if the majority of this House sees fit to do so. I believe it is wise, and I believe it is the thing to do, and so believing, and so being practically instructed by my people, I shall vote in every way I can to get to the consideration of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. BLAND. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW].

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, when the present Congress assembled it was confronted with the complaint that in preceding Congresses public business had not been transacted as the people of the country desired and expected. During the last year the subject was a matter of discussion among the people and in the leading magazines in the country by the leaders of both parties. The people demanded, very properly, that there should be some modification of the rules of this House in order that legislation should be expedited and that the business of the House might be transacted. There were many difficulties in the way. Some of them have not been and may never be removed.

The Committee on Rules reported certain modifications of the rules of the former Congress, and among the modifications was an amendment or amendments to Rule XXIV of the preceding Congress. This is the rule that relates to the order of business, and as amended it provides for the immediate consideration of business coming on to the Speaker's table from the Senate.

It is provided—

1. The daily order of business shall be as follows:
First. Prayer by the Chaplain.
- Second. Reading and approval of the Journal.
- Third. Correction of reference of public bills.
- Fourth. Disposal of business on the Speaker's table.

This last provision of the rule, it was supposed, would in some degree at least facilitate the transaction of the business of this House, as we shall see further on. The order proceeds—

- Fifth. Unfinished business.
- Sixth. The morning hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees.
- Seventh. Motions to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.
- Eighth. Orders of the day.

The second general clause of the rule is as follows:

2. Business on the Speaker's table shall be disposed of as follows:
Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committees without debate. Reports and communications from the heads of Departments and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner, and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by members; but House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole, may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to call your attention to this provision that follows:

Senate bills, substantially the same as House bills, already favorably reported by a committee of the House, and not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole, may also be disposed of in the same manner on motion directed to be made by such committees.

Now, this last provision was a new method of procedure adopted for the consideration of Senate bills. It was for the purpose of enabling committees to take from the Speaker's table a bill from the Senate when substantially the same bill had been reported by a House committee for the consideration of the House. Unquestionably this facilitated business, because it did away with the necessity of referring the Senate bill to a committee, and probably in the end sending it to the foot of the House Calendar. So it has happened during the present session of this House that many Senate bills have become laws which under the old rules would to-day be at the foot of the Calendar, and these laws owe their existence on the statute-book to the very fact that under this rule they have been taken from the Speaker's table and passed because of the privilege of immediate consideration provided for by this rule.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the country approves of the modification of the rule which has enabled this House to transact business in that way, and we can say to the people with some claim of credit that, with reference to that particular method of procedure, we have so modified the rules that we can transact the business of this House in a more expeditious manner than before. And in doing this we do not deprive bills of proper consideration. They have already been considered by the appropriate committee and reported to the House, and when the same bills have come from the Senate, certainly they have advanced to a position where they should be considered by the House without further delay.

Now the same reason for immediate consideration obtains where a bill has passed the House and has been amended and passed the Senate. It has progressed to a point where the prompt dispatch of business requires that it should be taken from the Speaker's table and laid before the House for immediate action. And referring again to the rule we find it is so provided with reference to certain bills as follows:

House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of, as the House may determine.

But suppose the amendments do require consideration in a Committee of the Whole, what then? Why, Rule XX provides—

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

Now, assuming that the amendments to the bill under consideration render the bill subject to the point of order, what is to be done with the bill? It is on the Speaker's table. It should be laid before the House, and if the point of order is made it must be considered by the Committee of the Whole House, and I submit that a motion would then be in order for the House to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering the bill. This in the extreme case, but it is a question whether the bill is subject to the point of order.

The original bill contained an appropriation. The bill has been amended by the Senate, but it still relates to the same subject. The Senate amendments contain an appropriation in almost the identical language of the original bill. If the bill is not subject to the point of order that it must be considered in the Committee of the Whole it should be at once considered by the House, but it is nowhere provided that the bill should be considered by any one of the general committees, and there is no authority, either express or implied, for referring this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. Such a reference can only result in delay which the rule was framed to avoid. This was the procedure under the old rule. It is not in accordance with the spirit of the new rule, and I submit the bill should be laid before the House for present consideration.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLAND. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN].

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of most profound regret to me to disagree with a large proportion of my associates upon this side of the Chamber, and I feel that it is incumbent upon me to state to the House and to the country the position in which I am situated with regard to this question. I am here as a Representative of the people of Oregon, and as such I feel it to be my bounden duty and obligation to represent those people to the very best of my ability and according to their wishes and their interest.

But recently, within four weeks, this question with others was made an issue before the people of Oregon in an election. Both parties went before them with substantially the same platform. I stood upon the platform of the Republican party and indorsed the sentiments it contained. I agreed to abide by the wishes of the party as set forth in that platform, and I engaged that after I was elected as a Representative to Congress from that State I would endeavor to carry out those wishes as the wishes of the whole people to the best of my ability.

In order that my associates upon this side, particularly, may understand the pledge which I have made to those people, and the sentiments which they have expressed on this question, indeed I may say the instructions which they have given me to execute, I will take the liberty of reading from the platform of the Republican party of Oregon:

6. That, recognizing the fact that the United States is the greatest silver-producing country in the world and that both gold and silver were equally the money of the Constitution from the beginning of the Republic until the hostile legislation against silver which unduly contracted the circulating medium of the country, and recognizing that the great interests of the people demand more money for use in the channels of trade and commerce, therefore we declare ourselves in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver and denounce any attempt to discriminate against silver as unwise and unjust.

Mr. Speaker, those are my "sailing orders," and I feel it my duty as a conscientious Representative, upon all questions and upon all motions in which the subject may be involved, to obey those instructions to the best of my ability. I propose to stand or fall by them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLAND. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, the action of this House on yesterday, from my point of view, was but the exercise of the supreme right of the House, recognized by the Speaker himself, to control the business of the House. The opinion has been expressed by parliamentarians on both sides of this Chamber that the reference of the bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures was an authorized act, and the defeat of the preamble to the resolution of the gentleman from Texas emphasized that view. But, independent of the reference, regardless of the right to make it, stood the supreme right of the House not only to undo that which the Speaker, as the authorized organ of the House, had done, but to undo that which the House itself might have done the day preceding.

I propose to consistently support the votes cast by me upon yesterday, and that position I will maintain for the reason that I believe such course to be the most direct and business-like way of reaching and disposing of the momentous question in hand. It would be entirely proper to refer this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. Who can assert that it is not equally proper for the House to hold the bill and act upon it without the intervention of that committee? Does the assertion of this supreme right by the House imply reflection upon any member or any officer of the House? Not at all. So believing, I propose to combine with those who hold similar sentiments to my own in asserting the right of the House to dispose of its own business in its own way. That right no gentleman in this body recognizes more clearly than the eminent Speaker who presides over the deliberations of the House. We can dispose of this bill to-day with as much intelligence as we can bring to bear upon it at any other time.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Can this House amend it?

Mr. CARTER. This House is supreme in this Chamber.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLAND. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. BARTINE].

Mr. BARTINE. I suppose that every member of this House is perfectly aware of the fact that every gentleman upon this floor who represents a silver-producing constituency represents one every individual of which is in favor of the free coinage of silver. For that reason gentlemen representing those States do not approach this question in a purely technical spirit. We are all of us new members of this House. We do not claim to be great parliamentarians, and for that reason we have not undertaken to discuss the refinements of parliamentary law which have been presented during the course of this debate; but there is one thing which, as a matter of plain common sense, I wish to suggest. While I do not claim to understand parliamentary law, I do claim to understand plain, simple, commonplace English when it is presented to my gaze. The rule under which we are acting, and under which it is proposed to act, makes the statement that when a House bill is returned with a Senate amendment it may be considered and disposed of by the House, unless it requires consideration in a Committee of the Whole.

Now, I do not see how an exception requiring the consideration of a bill in a Committee of the Whole requires its consideration by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. The little that I know about law amounts to just this, that when a thing is expressly mentioned in a statute everything else that is not mentioned is excluded, and when this rule says that a bill of this kind may require consideration in a Committee of the Whole, it carries with it the necessary implication that that consideration must be in a Committee of the Whole and not anywhere else, and sending the bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures does not even tend to get it into a Committee of the Whole.

Now, then, aside from all technicalities, I regard the great question involved in this contest as being simply this: Shall we have the opportunity of voting fairly and squarely upon the question of free coinage? I am a member of the Coinage Committee—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLAND. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time is exhausted.

Mr. MCKINLEY rose.

Mr. BLAND. I had nineteen minutes, of which I yielded five to the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], and three minutes to each of three other gentlemen, making fourteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. It is an hour since the gentleman rose and took the floor.

Mr. BLAND. I can not help that. There has been occasionally a good deal of confusion and time has been taken up in that way. The Speaker, when I asked him how much time I had remaining, said nineteen minutes. I then yielded to the gentleman from California five minutes, and to three other gentlemen three minutes each, making fourteen of the nineteen minutes. I may have very little time to reserve, but whatever it is I desire to do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must not be in error about this matter. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] should move to lay on the table, the time reserved to the gentleman from Missouri would not be at his disposal.

Mr. BLAND. If no further debate is desired, all right; but if there is to be further debate I reserve my time.

Mr. MCKINLEY. If the gentleman from Missouri yields the floor, I desire to take it.

Mr. BLAND. I want it understood that I may have the opportunity hereafter to use the little time I have remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio desires to take the floor in his own right.

Mr. BLAND. Certainly; but I suppose I shall have my time to reply.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, under the circumstances, the gentleman had better use his time now.

Mr. BLAND. I believe I have the affirmative on this proposition.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman's hour has expired—

Mr. BLAND. The question is on the appeal I have taken, and I think I have the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. Exactly; but the gentleman from Ohio has made a motion to lay on the table, or indicated—

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman has not made the motion.

The SPEAKER. He has indicated that he desired to do so. The Chair simply wished to warn the gentleman from Missouri of the situation, so that he might not lose his four minutes if he desires to occupy them.

Mr. BLAND. If I am compelled to use them now I will do so. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS].

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Speaker, this ought not to be a political or partisan question, and I shall not discuss it as such. It appears to me, however, to be an appeal on the part of the Speaker from the decision of the House which was rendered yesterday. The House, after voting down numerous dilatory motions, decided at last to erase from the Journal the declaration that this bill had been sent to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. If the Speaker has the power this morning in open House to send it there, he had the power to do so privately the other day when he attempted to do so.

This is simply a question as to whether or not the Representatives of the people shall have the right to execute the will of the people; and I want to say to the friends of free coinage of silver on either side of the House this word of warning: If you pass this station the probability is you will not have another opportunity to vote on the question of free coinage of silver upon this bill. I say this in the light of the history of the proceedings on this bill in the House before it went to the Senate and the proceedings here during the last two days.

Now, certainly the condition of this country is such—and a majority of the people recognize that condition to be such—that there ought to be a large increase of the circulating medium in order to respond to the demands of the growing business and trade of the country and to relieve the present depression. Here is a direct opportunity, if the Representatives of the people decide to avail themselves of it, to vote to execute that will; and no technical reason ought to stand between the Representatives of the people and a direct vote on this question.

Now, the fact that the Senate struck out one section of this bill which carried an appropriation at one place and inserted it at another and appropriated more than the House did or proposed an indefinite appropriation does not make it a new appropriation or proposition. Neither does an enlargement of the purposes of the appropriation as stated in the amendment require it to be again considered in Committee of the Whole.

The appropriation, though made indefinite as to amount, is substantially the same as proposed by the House. The substantial object of the bill is the same. It is simply made broader and more effective. The members of the House are ready to pass upon the bill. Again I repeat that no technical reason should defeat direct, immediate, and substantial action upon this important measure.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLAND. Did I understand the Speaker to say that I can not reserve my two minutes?

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that if the gentleman from Ohio moved to lay upon the table the gentleman from Missouri would not be enabled to use the time reserved.

Mr. BLAND. Well, if he should not, I reserve my time.

Mr. McKINLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW]. How much does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Three minutes.

Mr. McKINLEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Speaker, since the present controversy has arisen I have voted steadily that those members of this House who are the friends of unlimited silver coinage should have fair play and that any action in the House by the Speaker or otherwise should be open and known when it takes place. Besides, it is my conviction that amendments made in the Senate to House bills are, under parliamentary law and under a reasonable and just construction of our rules, to be disposed of in open session, permitting the House to control its business with reference to all matters of that sort which are brought before it by message.

Our new rules have not yet settled into construction. Upon most of the points that can be raised upon them and upon this one, on which contrariety of opinion has arisen, on which there are honest differences, our rules, in my judgment, are to be construed, first, in favor of the power of the House and, second, in favor of free and fair action of the House with reference to all interests concerned in any and every bill that comes before it.

This accounts for the votes I have given up to this moment, and practically for the votes of many other gentlemen who are not committed to the measure of unlimited silver coinage which has been sent to this House from the Senate.

Now, sir, as to that, this bill being now introduced to the consideration of the House and the proposed action of the Speaker upon it announced, it is for this House, by a fair and open vote, according to its best judgment, to determine whether the Speaker shall send the bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures or whether the House shall resist that action and itself proceed to consider the bill.

Well, sir, those who are in favor of the Senate amendment, those who want no prolonged consideration of this measure, may vote to take this bill up immediately and under the previous question drive it through the House without delay. If they have power to do that, possibly it may be their wish and they may succeed, but I, who desire a fair consideration for this gigantic measure in this House as well as in the Senate, I who pay some attention to the proprieties and dignity of public debate and parliamentary proceedings, want this bill to be considered in some regular and proper manner; and, sir, I see no objection on general grounds to the reference of the bill to the appropriate committee, the one indicated by the Chair, to see whether that committee be in favor of it or against it and report their conclusions to the House. Let it make its report and if it shall not come before the House within a reasonable time the House can control it and command it.

And why should not this bill receive such consideration? At all events, from my standpoint of independence in regard to this measure, I shall vote upon it as I shall probably vote upon all other great public measures at this session, that there shall be fair and reasonable consideration before the House is called upon to act on it. And therefore the vote I may now give, for the reason explained, is perfectly consistent with the votes I have heretofore given in favor of bringing this subject before the House. Let us now have a fair, square, and decisive vote, if it can possibly be taken between those hot, warm-headed men who want unlimited silver coinage and without consideration in this House, and those of us who desire its consideration before the House in the regular way and in conformity with our rules.

Mr. BLAND. All we want is consideration. We do not ask anything else.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McKINLEY. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITCH].

Mr. FITCH. Mr. Speaker, I have been one of those who for a couple of days past have insisted that this bill should not be sent to a committee by the Speaker without an opportunity for the House to appeal from his decision and to debate that bill and vote upon it; and I have rejoiced with my other friends that there are Republicans on the other side who are willing to take that view of the subject and go along with us to the success which we achieved in connection with the matter on yesterday. But to-day, Mr. Speaker, it is claimed on both sides of the House that this is a victory for free coinage, and those of us who do not believe in free coinage are called upon to go on with this crusade, as my distinguished friend has said, to have immediate consideration for the silver bill and its final passage under the previous question.

Mr. BLAND. Oh, no; we want consideration only.

Mr. FITCH. When it comes to that point my friend from Montana [Mr. CARTER] says that he, combined with those on this side of the House who agree with him, can secure it. Now, Mr. Speaker, he can not combine with me on that branch of the silver question. [Laughter.] So far as I am concerned, I will vote to send this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, on which there are distinguished Democrats, in which committee it can be fully considered, so that we may have a full, fair, and open discussion of the subject. Then when it comes back to the House, if there is a majority on both sides of the House who are willing to go to the extreme length which my people at least do not approve, then it will have been at all events considered in order under the rules, and those who believe as I do upon the subject will not be held responsible.

For the gentleman from Georgia no one has more admiration or higher respect—I refer to the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. CRISP—than I have. But the gentleman made a little mistake to-day when he said that some Republicans, combined with all the Democrats of the House, had voted in favor of this subject of free coinage. I have not voted here for free coinage and I never will. You may make any kind of coin money you please. You may make it out of clam shells, as it was originally fashioned, but you can not have the support of all the representatives of the city of New York in any such legislation as that. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McKINLEY. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I am for the consideration of this bill; I am for the enactment of silver legislation. There is no man on the floor of this House that more heartily desires the use of both metals for money than I do. But, in treating of this question and in legislating about it, I propose, so far as my vote goes, to proceed in an orderly way by the aid of a majority of the House, under the rules of the House, to consider, to determine, to legislate.

Much has been said by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] about the position of various members of this House. I want to say that when any man states as a Representative that I am not for the fullest use of both metals, keeping them equal in value for money purposes, he states that which is incorrect.

Now, what is the question before the House? Whether or not, under the rules that were made by the aid of the votes of the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], the gentlemen from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], the gentleman from Montana [Mr. CARTER], and others for the consideration, not of one bill, but of all bills—whether these rules shall be observed. I nowhere find within the body of the rules that they shall be observed except as to the silver bill. The exception is not there.

You did not make the reservation. And I want to say that I honor the gentleman from Montana. He has the manhood to avow his position and has the courage of his convictions. He marches straight to the mark. He says "True, so is the rule, but with the rule, or in the teeth of the rule, before it is repealed, I will march under the rule or over the rule to this legislation."

I commend his frankness to the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] and to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN].

Mr. MORROW. Does the gentleman from Illinois question the integrity of the other gentlemen who vote here, believing that the rule authorizes them to vote as they do?

Mr. CANNON. I never question anybody's integrity. [Laughter.] I said, and I say it again, that I honor the gentleman from Montana [Mr. CARTER] for his manliness, and directness, and courage in saying, "True, the rule is the other way, but I want legislation, and I want it so badly and so quickly that I will trample upon the rule," and he does not pettifog—I will not say pettifog, but he does not undertake to manipulate the rule away.

Mr. MORROW. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. MORROW. Does not he think it requires some little courage on our part under any circumstances to face the Republican side of this House and vote upon this question as we have voted from day to day?

Mr. CANNON. Ah, my friend, each man in this House must settle his vote by his own judgment, by his own wisdom, for himself. It is not for me to criticize; but standing here as a Representative, recognizing that this is a Government from time to time by parties, and will continue so as long as the Republic lives, for one, so far as I am concerned in this Congress, having helped to make these rules, I will observe them and march shoulder to shoulder with other Representatives under the rules, to work out wise, just, and proper legislation that will honor silver, not degrade it, that will keep the yellow and the white metals side by side. That is the way I propose to work it out.

Mr. MORROW. That is a discussion of the silver bill, not of this decision.

Mr. BLAND. That rule was prepared to enforce gag law, and that is the way you want it.

Mr. CANNON. My friend is always being gagged. Why, God knows a barrel of ipecac would not gag him. [Laughter.]

Mr. ENLOE. Put a fresh cracker on your whip. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BLAND. I think free coinage would gag you very much.

Mr. CANNON. Why, gentlemen, this is a rule of a majority in the House of Representatives. A majority can make the Journal, which should tell the truth, tell that which is untrue. A majority can do anything. It can adopt a special order; it can disregard the rules; it did falsify the Journal. It can do all these things. And yet these gentlemen say they are oppressed by three members of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BLAND. Did you allow us to vote on a bill for free coinage?

Did you not gag it? Do you not know the Speaker gagged it and the Committee on Rules gagged it?

Mr. CANNON. I am going next week to introduce a resolution to bring from Paris an apostle of Pasteur and establish a hydrophobic hospital here. I think we will need it pretty soon.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Judging by the way they keep barking.

Mr. CANNON. Now, one word further. Gentlemen say that this Committee on Coinage is an unfriendly committee. If so and we want it to act, we can compel it to act. But I say, from the bills which it has reported and from what the chairman has stated in open House in the last two days, that it is not an unfriendly committee. But, whether it is unfriendly or not, there is where the rule sends the bill, and speaking as a representative of the people, to the representatives of the people, we go to our people to the laboring men who earn their bread by the sweat of their brows [derisive laughter on the Democratic side]—we go to them for indorsement or rejection in November. We get our letters of attorneyship direct from the fountain-head. We do not get them once in six years through a Legislature. And now is the time for the representatives of the people, for the protection of the people, all the people—the silver men, and the gold men, and the man who earns his living in the sweat of his brow—now is the time for this body to consider and legislate so that every man, woman, and child in this country, everywhere, shall receive the price honestly given of a day's wage. And nothing seen or unseen, no threat, nothing to come or to be apprehended, will drive me or should drive the House of Representatives from a full, fair consideration and an honest settlement of this question, a settlement that will always keep gold and silver, and that gold and silver as good as the best money in the world, in circulation in this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. My friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], as a member of the Committee on Rules, when the question was up before, did not give us an opportunity to discuss this measure as we wished.

Mr. CANNON. My colleague from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS], my friend from the district so long represented by my worthy colleague who has passed away, Mr. Townshend, interrupts me. I sometimes wonder whether my old friend and ex-colleague, whom I prized so much, if he could look down from above, would look with approval upon all the performances, and interpolations, and interruptions by his successor. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. I am not a candidate for the Speakership, however.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I do not consider the pending appeal from the decision of the Chair a question as to whether we shall have free coinage or something less than that, or whether we shall have legislation upon this important subject or not. In my judgment the question that we are called to consider and determine now is one whether, according to the rules of this House, we will have an orderly and methodical consideration of business and thoughtful and patriotic legislation or whether, without consideration, without deliberation, and in violation of the rules, there shall be forced through this House a measure honestly believed in by many, but forced through under circumstances that if possible will induce an Executive veto when presented to the President of the United States for his consideration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I know many gentlemen upon the other side of this House personally, and I know them as individuals to be reputable and deserving gentlemen, but they deem that their allegiance is to the Democracy of the United States, and collectively, in my judgment, they would wreck the business interests of this country, if by doing so they could advance the interests of the Democratic party. [Applause on the Republican side.] To-day, yesterday, and the day before we saw them unitedly contending for the position they assumed, not in the interest of free coinage, not in the interest of wise legislation, and not to secure the passage of a bill that would give us free and unlimited coinage of silver, but to force through this House a measure under circumstances that if possible would compel the Executive of this nation to veto it, because it did not secure the sanction of a deliberative body. [Derisive jeers on the Democratic side.]

Personally I am in favor of free coinage. [Cries of "Oh!" on the Democratic side.] I represent a constituency that believes in free coinage and in the remonetization of the silver dollar. [Renewed jeers on the Democratic side.] But I do not represent a constituency that sent me here to rebuke the Speaker of this House when he honestly and fearlessly discharges the duty that is given to him under the law and under the rules of this House. [Applause on the Republican side.] I do not represent a constituency that sent me here to vote to have the Journal of this House certify and recite a lie or to expunge a respectful and truthful statement of fact. [Cries of "Good!" and applause on the Republican side.] I do not represent a constituency that sends me here to induce the consideration of this measure in violation of the rules that we as Republicans adopted for our government and for the dispatch of business; and I am much mistaken, Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, if the intelligent people of Oregon, who sent this honorable gentleman here [Mr. HERMANN] sent him here with any such instructions or for any such purpose.

Mr. HERMANN. They sent me here in favor of free coinage of silver.

Mr. PERKINS. Their instructions are to give your support and indorsement to a free-coinage measure; and when that proposition is before the House I shall stand and vote with my friend from Oregon. [Derisive jeers on the Democratic side.] But I do not allow nor will I suffer myself to be swayed by gentlemen upon the other side, who are not anxious to secure free silver, but who are anxious to embarrass the Republicans, who are anxious to embarrass the Administration, and who are only anxious to force through this House this measure under circumstances that will compel a veto from the Executive if it is passed. [Renewed derisive jeers on the Democratic side.] It is not legislation that they want; it is not a free-coinage bill that they want.

Mr. HEARD. How do you know it is not free coinage?

Mr. PERKINS. It is not a larger volume of money and prosperity for the people that they desire, but to gain political advantages they would wreck this important legislation, hoping thereby to embarrass the Republican party and the Republican Administration. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] This fact is shown by the votes of the anti-silver men on the Democratic side of the House as well as by those who profess to be the friends of silver.

Mr. Speaker, let us be done with this juggling. In due time this bill will be reported to this House for our consideration and action, and in my judgment legislation will be secured that will be of great value to the people. Our mines will be opened, the volume of our money will be increased, and thrift and prosperity will come to our people, but those of us who are the friends of free silver ought not to permit ourselves to be used by our political enemies for the sole purpose of embarrassing the Administration with the hope that by such methods it will be induced to veto this measure of so much importance to the great agricultural sections of the country. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas has yielded the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is in violation of order to make a threat of an executive veto against any measure; and I want to make that point against the remarks of the gentleman from Kansas. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MCKINLEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] stated the question when he was on his feet about the custom of referring bills by the Speaker—House bills coming back from the Senate with amendments—without its being done in open House, and challenged any one to state an instance when it had been done. I accept the challenge. I had charge of the urgent deficiency bill appropriating money for the Government Printing Office, being House bill 10390. That bill was returned to the House, referred to the Committee on Appropriations by the Speaker, considered there, referred back and passed this House with certain amendments which were recommended by the Committee on Appropriations; and not one word was said about that bill in open House between the time that the message of the Senate was read and when I reported it back to this House in pursuance of the instructions of the Committee on Appropriations. In support of that statement, I ask the Clerk to read from the Journal the reference made of House bill 10390.

Mr. SPRINGER. What page is it in the RECORD?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The Clerk will read it from the Journal.

The Clerk read as follows:

June 9.—Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a bill of the House of the following title on the Speaker's table was referred by the Speaker as follows, to wit: With amendments of the Senate thereto, House bill 10390, making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the last quarter of the fiscal year 1890—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That settles the issue presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. Now, Mr. Speaker, some of the practices of this House have been, when matters have come from the Senate, to have a reference asked for then and there, and the Speaker sometimes in clearing his table has presented them, and sometimes the party in charge of the bill would ask to have it done; but in many other cases, and I think in perhaps half of the urgency deficiency bills that I have had charge of, they have been referred in the same manner as that of which I have spoken, which is exactly the manner in which the bill under consideration was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now I want to call the attention of the gentleman—

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I will not yield. I will not allow the gentleman to interrupt me.

Mr. SPRINGER. But you will. The RECORD does not show the fact. Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I have given a case. I have accepted the gentleman's challenge and given the evidence of the reference of such bills. It is in the Journal of the House as I have proved.

Mr. SPRINGER. I say that it is not here in the RECORD. Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I might as well try to stop Vesuvius as try to stop him. I do not yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has no right to interrupt the gentleman from Iowa unless he consents, and the gentleman knows that very well.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not here representing the money-lenders of Wall street; I am not here representing the great mine and silver-bullion owners of the West; I do not care a snap of my hand for either or all of them; I am representing my own good people, who want good money, people who want money that will be as good in the hands of the poor as in the hands of the rich.

In my representative capacity in this Congress I have fought and will continue to fight for such legislation as will keep the mints of this country at work every minute they can be utilized, and that will consume the entire silver product of the silver mines of my country [applause], and that is what I want. It is charged on this floor that to follow the clear rules of this House, clean cut and unquestionable, and send this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, is to bury it. I deny that proposition. I know this side of the House—yes, and I know that side of the House—and I say to you, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, that the proper reference of this bill, under the rules of this House, will give that bill its due consideration and that it will come back promptly to this House for consideration and action.

Mr. BLAND. Will that free-coinage bill come back?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do not yield to the gentleman from Missouri. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BLAND. You know it will not.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I say that the bill of the House amended by the Senate, with the judgment of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, will be reported back to this House for action, and I expect to see a bill passed that will provide for consuming the entire product of the silver mines of this country. In spite of your Democratic opposition, I expect to see such a bill enacted into law with the sanction of a Republican President before this Congress adjourns. [Applause on the Republican side.]

No men voting as we have done in this House want to defeat silver legislation. A few gentlemen may honestly fear that a commitment of this bill will defeat silver legislation, but I do not agree with them in the policy they have pursued. These men who have been voting with the Democrats know my sentiments and know how I have stood side by side with each and all of them to secure silver legislation, and there I stand to-day. But I stand also by the rules of this House. I am ready, under the rules, to fight to enlarge the law so as to give a greater currency to the country, a currency that will be good and acceptable; not a currency that will be found valueless and discredited. Some want currency without regard to its value or standing. Let our money go down in value and where will it be found? Not in the banks of Wall street, not in the safes and vaults of the great money centers, but among the farmers and the laboring men of the country.

There is where the discredited money will be found. It is not the bright men who lend money and shave notes that get caught at such an hour. No, no; it is the laborers and the farmers of the country, and for these I stand in favor of a currency that they will not have to consult a bank detective or a great financial genius to find out whether it is good money or not and whether worth as much as a gold dollar or not. On that line of thought I stand by the rules of the House; I believe that the ruling of the Speaker is right, and I would be glad to see every man on this side of the House and on that take an orderly course of procedure which will bring this bill here, through the proper channels, for our final and wise consideration and disposition. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, may I be permitted to make an explanation?

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I object.

[Cries of "Regular order."]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the issue presented to us this morning is very simple, clear-cut, and well defined. It is not whether we are in favor of the free coinage of silver; it is not whether we are in favor of the Senate amendments to the House bill; but the sole and only question is whether the Speaker of this House has acted in accordance with the rules of this House in the reference of this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Now, I desire to corroborate the statement of my friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] in regard to the practice of the House. It happens that two important bills, both appropriation bills, have been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with which I am connected, have gone from the House to the Senate, have been there amended and returned to the House with the Senate amendments, and have been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, precisely as this bill was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. I refer to the Army appropriation bill and the Military Academy appropriation bill. When those bills came back to the Speaker's table, without one word being said in open House, the first we knew they made their appearance in the committee-room of the Committee on Military Affairs by a reference made precisely as the reference in this case was made. And now I desire to challenge the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to cite one single instance of a House bill returned from the Senate with Senate amendments since the 14th day of February, when these rules were adopted, that has not been referred to the appropriate committee precisely as this bill was referred if it came in the same category and was a bill demanding consideration in a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is not one case reported in the RECORD where a bill was referred as you state.

Mr. CUTCHEON. There is not a single instance of an appropriation bill which has gone to the Senate from the House and has been amended by the Senate and returned to the House that has not been referred in the due, orderly course of business precisely as this bill has been referred.

Mr. SPRINGER. That I distinctly deny, and I cite the RECORD to the contrary.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] testifies as to what was done in the case of a deficiency bill, and I know that my statement is correct as to the bills of the Committee on Military Affairs. There has not been a single bill that has been reported from that committee to the House and has gone from the House to the Senate and been amended there and then has come back to the House with the Senate amendments that has not been referred in the manner I have stated. I defy contradiction.

Mr. SPRINGER. I contradict the statement now, and I point to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the proof.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] knows that he has no right to interrupt another gentleman without his consent, but it seems impossible for him to obey the rules of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am obeying them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] has the floor, and the gentleman from Illinois has no right to interrupt him.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman challenged me.

The SPEAKER. It makes no difference whether the gentleman from Michigan "challenged" the gentleman from Illinois or not—

Mr. SPRINGER. It makes a difference to me, though apparently not to the Speaker. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has no right to interrupt the gentleman from Michigan without his consent.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Clause 2 of Rule XXIV is perfectly plain. There are but two classes of bills referred to in this paragraph. First: "Bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by members;" secondly, "House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole."

Bills of the first class are to be referred precisely as bills introduced by members, that is, they are to be referred by the Speaker precisely as private bills are referred by the Clerk, and not otherwise. The second class of bills, provided they do not require consideration in Committee of the Whole, may be laid before the House for immediate consideration. "May be" is the language of the rule.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the only remaining question is, does this measure require consideration in Committee of the Whole? I hold in my hand the Senate proposition, and, as remarked by the Speaker in his ruling, it provides that—

A sufficient sum of money to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

I now refer to the language of Rule XXIII, paragraph 3:

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole.

That, Mr. Speaker, concludes the argument. This bill does make an appropriation of money; it must be considered in Committee of the Whole. Therefore the reference is correct; and the Speaker must be sustained or we must violate our oaths of office.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House at this time is not whether we shall have free coinage or shall not have free coinage, but it is a question of parliamentary procedure under the rules of this House. The Speaker has referred a bill to the proper committee of this House under the rules, and the question is whether he shall be sustained in that proper reference.

No question of equal magnitude with the measure that has been sent over to us from the Senate was ever acted on in this House without deliberate consideration by some committee of the House. Why, gentlemen, the bill sent over here from the Senate is not simply a free-coinage bill. There are matters in that bill which have never yet been discussed in either branch of this Congress.

Why, sir, this bill goes infinitely beyond the free coinage of silver. It not only proposes to coin all the silver that may be brought to our mints from anywhere in the world free of expense to the holder, but it also provides and advertises the fact to the world that any man who can by any accumulation of capital control the purchase of silver bullion anywhere in the world may bring it immediately to our mints and be paid for it in legal-tender money of the United States, at a price 30 per cent. above its market value, and fixed and guaranteed by the Government. Gentlemen, I say there are not three districts in the United States outside of the silver-producing States that are in favor of such a proposition as that; and the people of this country outside of those districts would not indorse such a proposition for a single moment if they understood it. Now, gentlemen, such a measure as this does deserve deliberate consideration. It did not have it in the other branch of Congress.

That part of the measure was never considered; in fact, the details of the Senate amendment were scarcely discussed in the Senate, and, gentlemen, I, for one, insist that a measure of this magnitude ought to be deliberately and carefully considered, and if sent to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures it shall have such consideration, and at the earliest possible date.

To those gentlemen who have intimated that by sending this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures it will be consigned to the "tomb of the Capulets," I want to say here that I, for one (and I believe I understand the sentiments of that committee), promise today, as I did the other day, that this measure shall be reported back to the House at the earliest possible moment.

Why, sir, this committee is not unfair to silver. The Speaker in making up this committee has made it up as fairly as a committee could possibly be made. He has placed upon it, at the head of the minority, the most notorious silver man on the Democratic side of this House and he has placed upon it on this side two of not only the ablest, but the most enthusiastic supporters of silver. And I want to say for myself that no man on this floor or elsewhere has ever heard me offer a single argument against the free coinage of silver. I am, and every utterance I have made will prove it, in favor of the free coinage of silver. But I wish to reach that condition under some safe, honest, conservative plan that will insure the use of both gold and silver as money, and am not for a plan like this of the Senate which will permit only the use of silver.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McKINLEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the exact status of the question now before us. The Speaker decided that this bill under our rules must be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and an appeal has been taken from that decision. That is the whole question at issue. If the Senate amendment requires an appropriation, then it must be considered in the Committee of the Whole, because, according to Rule XX—

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

When the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] was speaking I asked him the question, Suppose the Senate amendment which provided for the free coinage of silver had been introduced as a House bill by him and reported to the House by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, would not such a bill under our rules necessarily receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole? The gentleman declined to answer the question or evaded it.

Mr. BLAND. I understand—

Mr. PETERS. I have not time to yield.

Mr. BLAND. Just an instant. I understand you claim that the bill under consideration, the Senate bill, and the House bill are different propositions. Now, they both relate simply to one proposition, that of silver and silver coinage and the utilization of silver. It is therefore one proposition.

Mr. PETERS. I will come to that presently, if I have time.

The primary question, Mr. Speaker, for us to consider now is this: If the Senate amendment had been introduced as a bill in the House and referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures and had been reported back for the consideration of the House by that committee, would it not receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole? I think it would, and there is no escape from that conclusion.

If, therefore, a Senate amendment is put upon a House bill, which amendment, if it had been originally introduced in the House or placed on the bill when reported from the committee, must first be considered in Committee of the Whole, then the action of the Speaker is undoubtedly correct and the bill must necessarily be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

I spoke the other day on the question of whether the reference was proper or not without being called to the attention of the House. Other gentlemen have so clearly and forcibly established the proposition that I need not refer to it again. That has been conclusively shown in the discussions which have taken place during the last two days.

I stated to-day that the practice in the House had been, with regard to appropriation bills, for the Speaker to refer them to the appropriate committees without calling the attention of the House to them.

That statement was denied; but gentlemen on committees having charge of appropriation bills say that it has been frequently done. I know that the record shows certain cases where appropriation bills were referred in open House. But there were reasons for it which made such action necessary. For instance, where the committee wanted to take action upon such bill messaged from the Senate, the Speaker at once laid it before the House for reference to the committee, which committee could examine promptly and thereby economize time. Such are the only exceptions and such is the only purpose of calling the attention of the House to such reference.

So, Mr. Speaker, the whole question now resolves itself into one, not of free coinage or the reverse of free coinage, but whether the Speaker, under the rules of the House, has decided correctly to refer this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. COWLES. Oh, no; that is not the question at all.

Mr. PETERS. I believe, looking at it from the standpoint of a lawyer, that no other action on his part would have been proper, and in fact that any other action would be a clear violation of the rule; and I will never vote to censure the Speaker for carrying out what I believe to be the spirit as well as the letter of the rule. To do so and to go home to my constituents and state to them that I had condemned the Speaker for doing what he was required to do under the Constitution and the rules of the House, would subject me to that just condemnation to which every member should be subjected who violates the sacred obligation of the oath that he takes here.

Mr. FUNSTON. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. PETERS. In a moment.

I concede that other gentlemen may differ on these propositions. I can readily understand how differences of opinion may arise; but my own judgment and conviction, from a careful consideration of the subject lead me to this conclusion and must be my guide.

Now I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. FUNSTON. The House virtually decided on yesterday that the Speaker had not properly referred the bill, or rather that it was not referred at all. Now, if they decide the same thing to-day, when is this re-referring of the matter to come to an end?

Mr. PETERS. If the House decides to-day that this bill is not properly referred, it simply postpones the consideration and final action upon the silver question.

Mr. FUNSTON. But every time the House decides that this has not been properly referred, is the Speaker to bring it up and re-refer it?

Mr. PETERS. If the House decides to-day that it has been properly referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, then we have a promise of speedy and prompt action.

Mr. FUNSTON. But that is not the question. Suppose the reference to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures is set aside; this is a question as to what shall be done with the bill which is on the Speaker's table. Shall the Speaker continue referring it?

Mr. PETERS. No; the Speaker has decided to refer it to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McKINLEY. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL].

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I have not occupied the attention of the House for a minute since the discussion of this matter began. I have the fullest confidence in the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures; and I shall therefore vote to place the House bill with Senate amendments in the charge of that committee, and I have no doubt that they will immediately enter upon the discussion and consideration of the new bill and report their conclusions promptly to the House.

I believe that the sentiment of this House is too strong to be disregarded either by the committee or the dominant party of this House. I believe at least that the majority of this House is in favor of a coinage that shall absorb the entire product of the United States, or it may be in favor of a coinage that shall be open to the silver product of the world. I am for a measure that shall provide for the coinage of American silver.

A remark was dropped this morning by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] with which I have become somewhat weary. It is that the demonetization of silver in 1873 was done in a corner; that it was not known at the time; that it was a secret; that it was a snap judgment; and that the two branches of Congress knew nothing about the passage of the bill which demonetized silver when they passed it.

Mr. Speaker, only four or five days ago Senator SHERMAN, in a full and elaborate speech, showed from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that sixty days were given to the discussion of that question and that silver was not demonetized until it had had a full discussion in both branches of Congress.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McKINLEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has ten minutes remaining.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I have several times had occasion to call attention to the fact that gentlemen on that side of the House had only recently become impatient on this silver question. No proposition looking to an increase in the amount of silver money in circulation in this country came from any committee on that side of the House during the four years of the last Administration, except in the form of a minority report. And gentlemen on that side were entirely patient under that condition of affairs, and notwithstanding the fact that their President proposed to entirely abolish the coinage of silver he received a renomination by a unanimous vote from every constituency in the United States, including the great district of Missouri. So that I have the right to infer that this anxiety on the part of gentlemen on the other side is simply for political purposes and with a view to embarrassing this Administration. Now, in that view of the case, having, as I have, entire confidence in the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] who is chairman of this committee—

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield—

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I have not time. And this committee being in favor of using the entire silver product of the United States, and ultimately of the unlimited free coinage of silver, I am in favor of referring the matter to that committee. I wish to say further that this bill as it comes to us from the Senate is not only a bill for free coinage, but it is a bill for the unlimited issue of Treasury notes, based upon the silver of the entire world and redeemable in coin generally. It is a proposition for the issuing of paper money that would never receive the sanction of one-half of the men on that side of the House if it were not for the fact that the act in that direction will embarrass, as gentlemen think, this Administration; because the decision of their courts and the entire history of their party are against the issuing of paper money and making anything but gold and silver a legal tender. And on that ground every gentleman on that side knows that the Senate bill, or this bill with the amendments of the Senate, would never receive the sanction of that side of the House except for the purposes that I have indicated.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I now move to lay the appeal of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] on the table.

Mr. BLAND. I had two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yielded his two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. BLAND. No, sir; I did not yield to him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked a question, and upon the gentleman from Kansas saying that he had not time, the gentleman from Missouri said he yielded his time.

Mr. BLAND. No; I said I had yielded to him for a question when I was on the floor before. The Speaker misunderstood me.

The SPEAKER. Then, if the Chair misunderstood the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], the gentleman is in the position which the Chair warned him of before, namely, that the gentleman from Ohio now moves to lay the appeal on the table, and that is not debatable.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I will not make the motion until the gentleman has occupied his two minutes.

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CONNELL].

Mr. CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, like my friend from Nevada [Mr. BARTINE] I am a new member, from the wild and woolly West. I am free to admit that I have only a limited knowledge regarding national legislation. I confess I am inexperienced so far as the rules and practice of this House are concerned.

It may be that it is due to such limited knowledge and inexperience that I am unable to understand the position of Republican members about me who declare in favor of free coinage and vote in the opposite direction. There is much regarding the rules and procedure of this House which I do not understand.

But I do not propose, in the brief space of two minutes which has been yielded to me, to undertake to tell all I do not know, as that would be impossible. I do wish, however, to refer to one thing I can not understand, and that is, why this is made a political question. I can not see why a line should be drawn from the Speaker's desk through the center of this Hall, dividing Democrats and Republicans. I deny that this is a political question. It is above and beyond that, and if you wait until the roll is called you will hear members on the other side voting according to their convictions, not their political convictions, but according to their belief on this question of free coinage.

Then, why, on this side, should not members who are in favor of free and unlimited coinage of silver vote according to their convictions, vote as representatives of the people who sent them here? Why do not the Western members, who know the sentiment of the West, stand up like men and vote according to their convictions, and vote according to the speeches they have been delivering here in this House? Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one other thing I do not understand, and that is why those who favored limited debate when the silver bill was originally discussed are now pleading for time for its further consideration. If not for the purpose of "burying" the bill, it must be to suspend it, like Mohammed's coffin, "between high heaven and earth." I am in favor of meeting all questions arising under the amendments proposed by the Senate right here and now.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move now to lay upon the table the appeal of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY]. The Chair has announced to the House that he refers the bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and that the Chair does so under the rules of the House for the reasons given. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] moves to lay that appeal upon the table.

Mr. MCKINLEY. And upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLAND. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 144, nays 117, not voting 66; as follows:

So the appeal was laid on the table.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. McDUFFIE with Mr. BLOUNT, on this vote only.

Mr. BROWER with Mr. WHITTHORNE. On this vote Mr. BROWER would vote "yea" and Mr. WHITTHORNE would vote "nay."

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. BLAND. We had better have the names read, as this is an important vote.

The vote was recapitulated.

Mr. MCRAE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. ROGERS] is paired generally with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR]. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. STOCKDALE. I am paired with Mr. HALL. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. WADE. I was paired with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]. If he had been present, he would have voted "nay." I voted "nay."

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BREWER. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the fortifications bill.

Mr. MILLS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CANNON. We want to report the fortifications bill back.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. MILLS. I renew it.

The SPEAKER. This is a report from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS BILL.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. 8391) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes. We ask the House to non-concur in all the amendments of the Senate and ask for a conference.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report of the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. The reading of the report furnishes no information. If there is a statement I think it should be read.

The SPEAKER. This is not a conference report. It is a report of the Committee on Appropriations, and the gentleman from Michigan simply desires that the House non-concur in all the Senate amendments.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that this is a unanimous report to non-concur in all the amendments.

The motion to non-concur in the Senate amendments was agreed to.

Mr. BREWER. I now ask that a committee of conference be appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BREWER. There were certain hearings had before our committee on these amendments. I ask that they may be printed as a part of our report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put and, pending the announcement, by unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. THOMPSON for ten days, on account of important business.

The motion of Mr. MCKINLEY that the House adjourn was then agreed to.

Accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, June 23, at 12 o'clock m.

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 23, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting an estimate of appropriation to reimburse the Chickasaw Nation, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 2d instant, certain reports with reference to the practice of the United States courts at Fort Smith, Ark., and Paris, Tex., in the appointment of commissioners for the investigation of offenses committed in the Indian Territory; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICE OF THE SENATE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] in place of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] on the Committee to Inquire into the Administrative Service of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a communication from the chairman of the Republican Central Committee of New Mexico, transmitting resolutions of that committee urging the favorable consideration of some one of the measures now pending before Congress for the settlement of private land claims in New Mexico, Arizona, and Colorado; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Reading, Pa., favoring the limited postal-telegraph system as recommended by the Postmaster-General; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of Henry H. Lowery, late a private in Company A, Two hundred and fourteenth Regiment, Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, praying for relief from the charge of desertion; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CASEY presented a petition of the Fort Ransom Farmers' Alliance, No. 9, of North Dakota, praying for the passage of House bill No. 5353, known as the Butterworth option bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Farmers' Alliance, No. 70, of Sanborn, N. Dak., praying for the passage of what are known as the Conger lard bill and the Butterworth option bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Fort Ransom Farmers' Alliance, No. 9, of North Dakota, praying for the passage of House bill 283, known as the Conger lard bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petition of Messrs. Procter & Gamble, of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying that the duty on crude and refined glycerine be increased rather than lessened; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also printed a memorial of 419 members of the medical profession of various cities in the United States and the Clinical Society of the State of Maryland, remonstrating against the proposed tariff tax on bottles containing mineral waters, and the impost proposed on effervescent natural mineral waters; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PADDOCK presented a memorial of citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against specific duties on guns; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Grant Farmers' Alliance, No. 963, of Nebraska, praying for the passage by Congress of the so-called Conger lard bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Grant Farmers' Alliance, No. 963, of Nebraska, urging the passage by Congress of the so-called Butterworth option bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of 400 members of the medical profession of the United States, praying for the admission duty free of effervescent mineral waters into the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on crude and refined glycerine; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TURPIE presented the petition of Kingan & Co., of Indianapolis, Ind., praying for a rebate of duty upon foreign salt; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of certain physicians of the United States, praying that foreign mineral waters be placed upon the free-list; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. REAGAN presented a petition of citizens of Navarro County, Texas, praying for the passage of a law to limit the labor of post-office clerks to eight hours a day; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Alexander Johnston, late captain United States Army, Southern Branch National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, praying for certain legislation for his relief; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition and the annual report of the Woman's Christian Association of the District of Columbia, praying for certain relief; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANDERSON presented petitions of the Farmers' Alliances of Harlan and Clay Counties, in the State of Nebraska, praying for the passage of the Butterworth option bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of the Farmers' Alliances of Clay and Harlan Counties, in the State of Nebraska, praying for the passage of what is known as the Conger lard bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PLATT. I present resolutions passed by a meeting of the Hat-Makers and Hat-Finishers' Association in South Norwalk, Conn., relative to the tariff on hats. As the memorial relates to the time when the tariff bill shall go into operation, and as that is a matter which is undetermined in the bill as reported, I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of citizens of the city of New York, praying for the passage of a law to limit the hours of labor in first and second class post-offices; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MORRILL. I present two memorials, one from Michigan with one name, and one from Vermont with one name, remonstrating against the duty on tin. The memorials are in the usual printed forms. I move that they lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of 31 citizens of Latham, Kans., praying for the passage of the education bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3893) to provide for the purchase of a site, and the erection of a public building thereon, at Nevada, in the State of Missouri, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5939) for the relief of settlers on Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with the accompanying report, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I shall ask leave later to make a written report on this subject-matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Leave will be granted.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 901) for the erection of a new tower near the site of the light-house on Smith's Island, Virginia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported an amendment, which had heretofore been referred to that committee, intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WASHBURN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 4139) granting a pension to Rebecca Page; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4140) granting a pension to Alexander Ross; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 4141) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of William E. Woodbridge for compensation for the use by the United States of his invention relating to projectiles, for which letters patent were ordered to issue to him March 25, 1852; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 4142) for the relief of the heirs of Sterling T. Austin, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 4143) granting a pension to John S. Elder; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 4144) to incorporate the Woman's National Industrial University and School of Useful and Ornamental Arts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4145) granting increase of pension to Mary Marsh; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. VEST submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WASHBURN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WASHBURN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor bill; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

SALARIES OF SENATORS FROM NEW STATES.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and they are hereby, directed to inquire as to the date on which under the law and precedent of the case the salaries of the Senators from the States of Montana, Washington, and North and South Dakota, respectively, began, and report their conclusions to the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MARTIN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8391) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BREWER, Mr. BUTTERWORTH, and Mr. SAYERS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution requesting the President to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 5702) granting a pension to Ann Bryan.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 8831) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans., and not over 10 miles above the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railway bridge at Kansas City, Mo.," approved March 1, 1889, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

INDUSTRIAL AND SCIENTIFIC EDUCATION.

Mr. MORRILL. If the morning business is through—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, that order is closed.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3714) to establish an educational fund and apply the proceeds of the public lands and the receipts from certain land-grant railroad companies to the more complete endowment and support of colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education. I desire to have read an amendment, which I think will be acceptable to all parties on both sides of the Chamber, in lieu of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. PLUMB. Is the bill up for consideration?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I object to its consideration now. I want to call up an appropriation bill.

Mr. MORRILL. It will take but a few minutes to dispose of the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I think it will take more, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the amendment which I send to the desk may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 1 the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That in any State in which there has been one college established in pursuance of the act of July 2, 1862, and also in which an educational institution of like character has been established and is now aided by such State from its own revenue for the education of colored students in agriculture and the mechanic arts, however named or styled, or whether or not it has received money heretofore under the act to which this act is an amendment, the Legislature of such State may propose and report to the Secretary of the Interior a just and equitable division of the fund to be received under this act between one college for white students and one institution for colored students established as aforesaid, which shall be divided into two parts and paid accordingly. And thereupon such institution for colored students shall be entitled to the benefits of this act and subject to its provisions as much as it would have been if it had been included under the act of 1862; and the fulfillment of the foregoing provisions shall be taken as a compliance with the provision in reference to separate colleges for white and colored students.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I did not hear the entire reading of the amendment. I ask the Senator from Vermont if it contains the feature in it of the appropriation going to one college for colored students and one for whites?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes; one for colored and one for whites.

Mr. HALE. Then, with that view, with the consent of the Senate, I withdraw the amendment submitted by me on Saturday evening.

Mr. MORRILL. I have shown this amendment to members on both sides of the Chamber who took an interest in the question on Saturday, and I believe all are content with the amendment as now proposed. I ask that it be adopted.

Mr. WALTHALL. I did not catch the reading exactly of the amendment. I ask the Senator from Vermont to state how it affects a State which, like Mississippi, has an agricultural and mechanical college for white students and an agricultural and mechanical college for colored students.

Mr. MORRILL. It would only affect them so that the fund would be divided between those two and no others.

Mr. WALTHALL. In what proportion? The proportion is not fixed.

Mr. MORRILL. It does not name the proportion, but leaves the Legislature of the State to make a just and equitable division of the fund.

Mr. GIBSON. I have carefully examined the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, and I think it covers all the points that have been discussed in respect to the bill. I trust it may be accepted.

Mr. CULLOM. There was some confusion when the amendment was read, and I should be glad to have it read again so that we may understand it fully.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

Mr. CHANDLER. The first amendment pending is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH]. I will inquire whether that has been withdrawn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That has not been withdrawn.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I raise the question of order whether that is not the pending amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the pending amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] offered an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That has been withdrawn.

Mr. HAWLEY. That has been withdrawn. So I suggest that the amendment now offered by the Senator from Vermont is in order as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. CHANDLER. But it is not proposed as an amendment to that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is in order as an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator from Alabama will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. PUGH. I have examined the amendment which has been read, offered by the Senator from Vermont. I heard all the debate on Saturday, and I have endeavored to instruct myself further by reading it as reported in the RECORD. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont substantially covers all that I am aiming to accomplish to meet the situation in my State, and I am willing to accept it in the place of the one that I offered.

Mr. CULLOM. Let us have it read.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I understand all the prior amendments have been withdrawn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. CHANDLER. And the Senator from Vermont moves his amendment as an independent proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The only pending amendment is the one offered this morning by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the amendment previously offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], which has been withdrawn. The amendment moved by the Senator from Vermont will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. MORRILL.

Mr. CULLOM. As the other amendments have all been withdrawn I think the word "further" after "provided" is not needed.

Mr. MORRILL. There is another proviso preceding in the section.

Mr. CULLOM. All right, as there is another proviso.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. There are two or three slight verbal amendments that are further necessary to the bill. On page 3 of the reprinted bill, section 2, line 10, after the word "college," I move to insert the words "or the institution for colored students."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Chief Clerk. On page 3 of the reprinted bill, line 10 of section 2, after the word "college," insert "or the institution for colored students;" so as to read:

That the sums hereby appropriated to the States and Territories for the further endowment and support of colleges shall be annually paid on or before the 31st day of July of each year, by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the warrant of the Commissioner of Education, countersigned by the Secretary of the Interior, out of the Treasury of the United States, to the State or Territorial treasurer, or to such officer as shall be designated by the laws of such State or Territory to receive the same, who shall, upon the order of the trustees of the college, or the institution for colored students, immediately pay over said sums to the treasurers of the respective colleges entitled to receive the same, and such treasurers shall be required to report to the Secretary of Agriculture and to the Commissioner of Education, on or before the 1st day of September of each year, detailed statement of the amount so received and of its disbursement.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. There are two like amendments to be made, one in section 3, line 3, after the word "colleges," to insert the same words, "or of institutions for colored students."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Chief Clerk. On page 4 of the newly printed bill, line 3, section 3, after the word "colleges," insert the words "or of institutions for colored students;" so as to read:

That if any portion of the moneys received by the State or Territory for the further and more complete endowment, support, and maintenance of colleges or of institutions for colored students as provided in this act shall, by any action or contingency be diminished or lost, or be misapplied, it shall be replaced by the State or Territory to which it belongs, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. On page 5 of the reprinted bill, section 4, line 6, after the word "colleges," I move to insert "or institutions for colored students;" so as to read:

That on or before the 1st day of July in each year, after the passage of this act, the Commissioner of Education, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury as to each

State and Territory whether it is entitled to receive its share of the annual appropriation for colleges or institutions for colored students under this act, and the amount which thereupon each is entitled, respectively, to receive.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. There is but one other amendment, which is made necessary by striking out the first section. That having been stricken out, after the words "arising from the sale of public lands" in what is now section 1, I wish to add the words "so long as the same shall be sufficient therefor."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Chief Clerk. In section 1 of the reprinted bill, line 5, after the word "lands" insert "so long as the same shall be sufficient therefor;" so as to read:

That there shall be, and hereby is, annually appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated arising from sales of public lands, so long as the same shall be sufficient therefor, to be paid as hereinafter provided to each State and Territory for the more complete endowment and maintenance of colleges for the benefit of agricultural and the mechanic arts, etc.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not press that amendment. Let the future take care of itself.

Mr. MORRILL. I will not press it if there is the slightest objection to it.

Mr. HARRIS. There is objection with some on this side of the Chamber; myself for one.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no other amendment to offer.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Vermont to insert, in line 11 of section 2, after the word "colleges," the same words he did in a preceding line.

Mr. HAWLEY. "Or other institutions."

Mr. PADDOCK. "Or other institutions." That will make it correspond.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Chief Clerk. On page 3, section 2, of the reprinted bill, line 11, after the word "colleges," insert "or the institutions for colored students;" so as to read:

Immediately pay over said sums to the treasurers of the respective colleges or of the institutions for colored students entitled to receive the same, etc.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator from Connecticut suggests a modification, which I think is a good one, to insert simply the words "or other institutions."

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no necessity of repeating the other words.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. Calling attention to the amendment proposed this morning by the Senator from Vermont, I should like to inquire why he limits this just and equitable division of the fund to colleges for colored students already established, and whether he does not intend that the same just and equitable division shall be made in case, under the provisions of this act, schools for colored students are hereafter established by the States?

Mr. MORRILL. I may say that I would be willing to insert the words "or which may be established." I understand that there is one State where there is no such college or institution established; that is Delaware.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I move that there be added to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, after the words "colleges already established," the words "or which may be hereafter established."

Mr. VANCE. I think that is a very proper amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Chief Clerk. In the second line of the amendment, after the word "established," it is proposed to insert "or that may be hereafter established."

Mr. HARRIS. The second line of what amendment?

The Chief Clerk. In the second line of the amendment to the first section adopted this morning, after the word "established," it is proposed to insert:

Or that may be hereafter established.

So as to read:

Provided further, That in any State in which there has been one college established or that may be hereafter established, in pursuance of the act of July 2, 1862, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment should come in after the second word "established." The Chief Clerk will again read it.

The Chief Clerk. In the fifth line, after the word "established," insert the words "or that may be hereafter established;" so as to read:

Provided, That in any State in which there has been one college established in pursuance of the act of July 2, 1862, and also in which an educational institution of like character has been established, or that may be hereafter established, is now aided by such State from its own revenue, etc.

Mr. PLATT. Leave out the word "that," so as to read "or may be."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That modification will be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I think the bill should also be amended in the first section, before the new proviso comes in, after the word "act," in line 24, page 2, by adding the following:

If the funds received in such State or Territory be equitably divided as hereinafter set forth.

That is, in all cases where there are separate establishments for white and colored students, the principle which has just been adopted shall be applied. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the provision on page 4, in section 3, as to the reports that are to be made by the presidents of the colleges endowed under this act. It declares that they "shall be made to the Secretary of Agriculture, as well as to the Secretary of the Interior." What is the use of duplicating these reports and having one made to two different Cabinet ministers? It seems to me to be superfluous.

Mr. MORRILL. The machinery of the bill requires these reports to be made to the Secretary of the Interior. They were so under the original act. Now, the Department of Agriculture having been established, it will be very little work in addition that they should also make a report to the Secretary of Agriculture, as in relation to experimental stations.

Mr. INGALLS. It seems to me entirely superfluous, because the section does not provide that there shall be any different report made to the one from that made to the other.

Mr. MORRILL. They will be separate. What is intended for one is not intended for the other.

Mr. INGALLS. In section 4 of page 5 there seems to be a still further complication, providing that the Commissioner of Education is to "ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury as to each State and Territory whether it is entitled to receive its share of the annual appropriation for colleges under this act and the amount which thereupon each is entitled, respectively, to receive."

The machinery of the bill seems to be unnecessarily complicated. There is no report to be made to the Commissioner of Education, and yet he is charged with the duty of ascertaining the disbursements that have been made and the title of the colleges to receive the benefit of the act. Of course it is immaterial, but the bill should be made as complete as possible. It seems to me that there should be some amendment made in these particulars.

Mr. MORRILL. I think not, Mr. President. It is expected that the Commissioner of Education will do this sort of work for the Secretary of the Interior. It has been so provided in all the bills that we have had in relation to education in these colleges.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest that the Secretary of the Interior shall be charged with that duty. Say: "The Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury whether each State and Territory has received," etc. There comes afterwards "and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby charged with the proper administration of this law through the Commissioner of Education;" but when it comes to the serious business of reporting a deficiency or fault of some kind in the action of a State, I think that certainly should be by the Secretary of the Interior. He can get the information from a bureau officer, of course, as in any other case. I agree with the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

Mr. MORRILL. That is a mere matter of taste, whether it be done by the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Education. I have no objection to the clause cited being stricken out.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the bureau officer ought not to make a report to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Interior is specifically charged with the general execution of the act through his bureau officer, the Commissioner of Education; but when it comes to the highest act the Secretary of the Interior is to perform, then it is said the Commissioner of Education shall perform it. I think it will be better if section 4 in the first three lines should read in this way:

That on or before the 1st day of July in each year after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury, etc.

Striking out the words "Commissioner of Education under the direction of" before "the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. PLUMB. I think the amendment ought to be adopted. I know at some time it has been the theory that in legislation of this kind we should put the responsibility upon the head of the Department rather than upon one of his subordinates, not to do anything that would weaken his authority over them or divide the responsibility for the exercise of whatever function is committed to the Department or to any branch of it. I think it is conducive to good administration to give this power to the Secretary of the Interior.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut move the amendment he has suggested?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, on page 5 of the reprinted bill, line 2, after the word "act" it is proposed to strike out "Commissioner of Education under the direction of the;" so as to read:

That on or before the 1st day of July in each year after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. In line 8 of section 4 the word "Commissioner" should be changed to "Secretary."

Mr. MORRILL. "Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; "Secretary of the Interior."

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, in section 4, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

If the Secretary of the Interior shall withhold a certificate from any State or Territory, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In line 14 the same amendment should be made.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, in line 14 the same amendment should be made.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. On page 4 of the present section 3, and at the end of the first line, I move to add the words "the designated officer of;" so as to read:

That if any portion of the moneys received by the designated officer of the State or Territory for the further and more complete endowment, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, section 3, at the end of the first line, it is proposed to insert "the designated officer of;" so as to read:

That if any portion of the moneys received by the designated officer of the State or Territory for the further and more complete endowment, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut if the words "Commissioner of Education" ought not to be erased and "Secretary of the Interior" ought not to be substituted in line 14, as the officer to whom the report shall be made.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that amendment; that the words "Secretary of the Interior," on line 14, page 4, be substituted for "Commissioner of Education."

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, in section 2, line 14, it is proposed to strike out the words "Commissioner of Education" and to insert the words "Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

And such treasurers shall be required to report to the Secretary of Agriculture and to the Secretary of the Interior, on or before the 1st day of September of each year, a detailed statement, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. On page 3, section 2, lines 5 and 6, I move to strike out the words "Commissioner of Education countersigned by the," so that it will leave the warrant to be drawn on the Secretary of the Treasury, not by the Commissioner of Education, but by the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, section 2, line 5, it is proposed to strike out the words "Commissioner of Education, countersigned by the;" so as to read:

That the sums hereby appropriated to the States and Territories for the further endowment and support of colleges shall be annually paid on or before the 1st day of July of each year, by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the warrant of the Secretary of the Interior, out of the Treasury of the United States, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. On page 6, line 18, has there been any amendment made?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There has not been.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to strike out the words "through the Commissioner of Education," leaving the Secretary of the Interior to be charged with the proper administration of the law.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 18, it is proposed to strike out the words "through the Commissioner of Education;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby charged with the proper administration of this law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. In section 5, lines 1 and 2, I move to strike out the words "the Commissioner of Education under the direction of," so that the Secretary of the Interior shall make the annual report.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, section 5, lines 1 and 2, it is proposed to strike out the words "the Commissioner of Education under the direction of;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall annually report to Congress, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like, as I have not been in the Senate all the time during the discussion of this bill, to know of the chairman of the committee who has it in charge whether the bill has reference to any appropriations or contributions of land by the Government for the establishment of these colleges heretofore, or only to the fund hereby appropriated?

Mr. MORRILL. That is all.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to know further whether on a division of this fund, where two different institutions are established, it is under an act of the Legislature or in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury as to the amount that each college shall receive?

Mr. MORRILL. It is in the discretion of the Legislature.

Mr. CULLOM. Of the Legislature of the State?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. I am inclined to think it ought to be the other way myself, but I simply wanted to know the fact, so that it might be understood.

Mr. PADDOCK. After the amendments already made striking out "the Commissioner of Education" and inserting "Secretary of the Interior" there should be an amendment in the latter part of the section to strike out the word "Commissioner" in line 8 on page 5, section 4.

Mr. MORRILL. That has been done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That change has been made.

Mr. BLAIR. I will simply say that I think, and it is an observation to which no one can object, that this whole movement, about which we are so critical and hypercritical and overhypercritical, to take care of the colored people in the distribution of this money, came into the Senate upon the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], and that no Northern man thought of it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am unwilling to let that go. The Senator from Alabama is a thoughtful and judicious man about these things, but there was already in the bill a proviso in this language:

Provided, That no money shall be paid out under this act to any State or Territory for the support and maintenance of a college where a distinction of race or color is made in the admission of students, but the establishment and maintenance of such colleges separately for white and colored students shall be held to be a compliance with the provisions of this act.

The difficulty is that there were some institutions quite proper to be added that could not exactly be called colleges.

Mr. BLAIR. That being the general provision in the bill, that satisfied all; but the Senator from Alabama knowing of a particular institution which did not quite reach the denomination of a college, brought in this amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. So far as any imputation rests upon any Northern member of the Senate for the action that has been taken, I assume my share without hesitation or trepidation. I frankly confess, Mr. President, that a proposition to distribute this money among white and colored schools could not proceed with propriety from any Northern Senator. My instincts and my convictions are against it. There is no demand in any Northern State, so far as I know, for such a distribution. The necessity could arise only in a Southern State, and the Senator from Alabama therefore logically offered his proposition to adapt this measure to a condition that exists in the South; and as a practical friend of education, realizing the obstacles that exist, while I could not propose such a plan, I cordially gave my consent to it. I do not understand that it imposes any turpitude upon those who unite with him in that direction.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thank the Senator from Kansas for his speech. I think so myself. I would have one institution in each State with all the money I could get for it, open to everybody that the Lord may see fit to allow to come into the school. That is the way I would have it. I yielded to this other because it seemed to be the best on the whole to do it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. The title ought to be amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands and the receipts from certain land-grant railroad companies to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts established under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862."

Mr. HARRIS. The title ought not to read in that way. The land-grant railroad fund is stricken out of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. The title should be amended according to the report of the committee as just read.

Mr. HAWLEY. The words "and the receipts from certain land-grant railroad companies" should be stricken out, because there are not any provided for in the bill. The railroad-grant business is entirely eliminated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title will be read as proposed to be amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts established under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862."

Mr. PLUMB. Am I to understand that the provision in regard to public lands has been stricken out?

Mr. MORRILL. The original first section has been stricken out.

Mr. BLAIR. Does this amendment come in line 5?

Mr. HAWLEY. It has been adopted.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not understand that. My objection to the first section was because it tied the public lands to this system of agricultural education. I certainly should not have allowed the bill to go as far as it has without my protest if I had understood that that was in it. I understood the Senator to say that that was entirely out of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. No. I said the first section was stricken out.

Mr. PLUMB. The first section was stricken out and the substance of it was put in somewhere else, which does not seem to be quite candid.

Mr. HAWLEY. The bill does not require now a separate account of the public lands to be kept, but it eliminates that whole entanglement in the first section. There will be enough to answer this bill for many years to come, in the proceeds of the sales of public lands, but there is no special account to be kept for the sake of these institutions.

Mr. PLUMB. Why should we not make this appropriation, then, of public money when it comes in? Why should there be this distinction? If it is not to cost anything, why should we not vote money right along to be paid out of the proceeds of the public lands?

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator happened to be absent when that was being discussed. He will remember that we have had a great deal of discussion about the extreme liberty that the United States might exercise in controlling the public lands and the proceeds of the sales thereof; that it might go wider and go further with this money than with the moneys received from ordinary taxation. I do not know how much it would trouble the Senator or myself if the funds were drawn from the Treasury in general, though I like this provision, I rather prefer it; but there are many Senators friendly to the bill who would have very much trouble if this were taken out of the proceeds of the ordinary or direct or indirect taxation.

Mr. BLAIR. In regard to this careful navigation to avoid other questions and enable Senators to meet consistency, possibly if they look their records over long enough back this will not be quite sufficient, because they have often voted in a way to involve them in difficulties so far as precedents go. By an amendment in the second section, the first having been stricken out, I would say to the Senator that the appropriation for the agricultural experiment stations is a clean and absolute appropriation from year to year out of the money in the Treasury of the United States, and not out of the money derived from the sale of public lands. In the original act the money coming from the sale of the public lands was appropriated for the support of the experiment stations, as I recollect it. In subsequent appropriations Congress do, as the Senator from Kansas suggests as the sensible and proper way, just take the money from the public Treasury and pay it out to the support of the experiment stations which are appurtenant to the agricultural colleges.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title of the bill will be amended as last read by the Secretary, if there be no objection.

Mr. DAVIS. Has the bill been passed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been passed. The title will be as last read.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the fortification bill be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair) laid before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8391) making appropriation for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial for the service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS AND DEPENDENT RELATIVES.

Mr. DAVIS. I now call up the conference report on the bill (S. 389) granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is a privileged question. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I was not in the Senate a few days ago when the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] explained to the Senate the difference between the conference report and the original bill as it was passed by the Senate. If I understand it, however, from the reading of the report, the principal difference is that the Senate bill provided that those who had served in the Union Army for a certain period of time, and who from any cause were disabled, and were injured to such an extent that they were incapable of earning their support by manual labor, and who had no other adequate means of support, were placed upon the pension-roll.

Now, as I understand, the Senate conferees have yielded that part which required that the beneficiaries should have no other means of support, and if this report be adopted then all persons who were disabled from any cause will be placed upon the pension-roll without regard to the state of their fortune or the amount of money which they have. In other words, this conference report places upon the pension-roll all Union soldiers who served for the period of ninety days who for any cause are disabled to such an extent that they can not earn a living by manual labor, and in addition the widows of all deceased soldiers who are dependent upon their labor receive a pension of $8 a month and minor children $2 a month, and when there is no widow then the parents of the deceased soldier receive the pension.

The passage of the bill has been advocated for the reason which has been given again and again, that in the absence of some such measure as this a large number of Union soldiers, men who fought upon the Union side during the war, will be compelled to go to the almshouses or become a charge upon the public; and yet that being the reason given for the passage of the bill the conference report proposes to put all parties upon the pension-roll, whether the man is worth a million dollars or whether he is not worth a dollar.

It seems to me the reasons that were urged then do not apply to this bill, or, in other words, the practical effect of this bill will be to place 90 per cent. of the Union soldiers upon the pension-roll of the Government of the United States. The Senate persistently refused to pass a service-pension bill, yet the conferees agree to an amendment which in its practical effect will be a service bill. I do not think the chairman of the committee himself will dispute the fact, or that he can dispute it successfully, that if this bill becomes a law at least 90 per cent. of the soldiers of the Union Army can prove that they are disabled to the extent required by the bill, which will authorize them to go upon the pension-roll. I do not assert that they will commit perjury in order to do this, but I assert that of those who served in the war, on account of age, on account of exposure, or from any other cause, the great body to-day can prove and prove truthfully that they are more or less disabled from some cause or other.

Then, I say, if that be true we ought not, under the guise of passing a bill for the relief of those who are unable to take care of themselves and have no means of support, to pass what is in effect practically a service-pension bill.

The estimate of the chairman of the committee is that this will add about $42,000,000 to the pensions that we are already paying, or, in other words, that if this bill becomes a law, in addition to the $103,000,000 that we are paying annually for pensions the amount paid will be $145,000,000 each year. And yet, Mr. President, when we have passed this bill, although we have paid $1,000,000,000 for pensions since the war, although we are paying $103,000,000 annually to-day for pensions and if this bill should become a law this estimate will be swelled to $145,000,000 according to the lowest estimate, we shall still hear the cry, as we have heard it for the last fifteen years, that the Government is neglecting the soldiers of the Union Army and not providing for those who saved the nation in the hour of danger.

We all know, as far as this estimate goes, judging this bill by those which have been passed heretofore, that no estimate which has ever been made either by the chairman of the committee or by any of the Departments has ever reached anything like the cost that was imposed upon the Government when we came to the practical administration of the law; and I think to-day if this bill passes no one will be astonished if, in the course of three or four years, the pension-roll will be found to have been swelled from $103,000,000 annually to $200,000,000 annually. I say I think no Senator upon this floor will be astonished if in the course of three or four years under the provisions of this bill our pension-roll shall be swelled to that, and yet the cry will be for more.

So skillfully and systematically has this sentiment been worked to pass every character of pension bill which could be proposed that it matters not how extravagant the demand is it always finds advocates and numerous defenders. There are various causes which contribute to the working up of public sentiment in favor of every class of pensions, but the most potent and efficient cause is the pension agents in the city of Washington, men who have grown rich by collecting pensions for soldiers, men who are supplied with literary bureaus, men who send out newspapers and circulars and letters to every locality in the country, men who have their agents in every town and hamlet throughout this nation, all combined to urge upon Congress to give more pensions to the Union soldiers. Added to this are the Grand Army of the Republic and the soldiers, men who are continually asserting that the Government has not met their just demands. I say so skillfully has this sentiment been worked up that scarcely any member of Congress from the Northern States dares to stand in opposition to any character of pension bill that is offered, and we find upon every occasion that the Northern Democrats and the Northern Republicans contest with each other as to who shall be first to introduce a pension bill or who shall go furthest to satisfy the demands of the soldiers; and, Mr. President, if any Southern member of the other House or any Senator from a Southern State dares to interpose a possible objection he is assailed by both friend and foe, and it is urged upon him that if he opposes such legislation he will injure the party to which he belongs, while in many instances he is denounced by the other side as a traitor who has no right to express any opinion upon the question of pensions.

Mr. President, we either occupy upon this floor a position here as free and independent representatives or we do not. I for one do not believe in this "stand-and-deliver" manner of passing this or any other bill. I believe that each man here has taken an oath to oppose such legislation as he believes is not for the best interests of his country, and it is his duty to do it regardless of the section from which he may come. Therefore, I am opposed to this indiscriminate granting of pensions. I am opposed to this bill, which I state practically is a service-pension bill in disguise. I am opposed to it because I do not believe it in the best interests of this nation that such enormous sums of money should be collected by taxation from the people and distributed out to the Union soldiers. I am opposed to it because I believe it is injurious to the men who receive it. It was the boast of every American in the past, and it was that which made our country as great as it was, that each citizen was a free and independent man, dependent alone upon God and his own strong right arm, and whenever you make him dependent upon the nation you not only destroy his energies, but you to a large extent destroy his usefulness.

In addition to that, when you foist upon the Government a million and a half of men who are living out of the labors of others, men who are doing no work, but simply drawing their pay from the work and labor of the other citizens, you not only destroy that man's energy and make him comparatively useless as a citizen, but you breed discontent in the minds of his neighbors and his fellow-citizens, men who are obliged to toil from day to day in order to meet the demands upon them. It creates a bitterness with them and a feeling of injustice rankles in their hearts when they know that their burdens are added to in order that they may support men in idleness who are sometimes far more able to work than themselves. I say that is another reason why this bill should not pass.

I wish to say here, as I said upon a former occasion, that in my opposition to this indiscriminate granting of pensions to the soldiers of the Union I have not been actuated, whatever may have been charged to the contrary, by any hostility to the soldier himself or to the Government for which he fought. Upon the other hand, I believe that that man who, through motives of patriotism, entered the service of his country at the time when he believed its flag was in danger, who endured all the hardships and toils incident to a soldier's life, is entitled to more consideration than the citizen who did not so serve. But when the demands become extravagant, when he seeks to make it a question of dollars and cents, when it comes to the fact that we measure the patriotism and the honor and the glory acquired by the Union soldiers by so many dollars and cents, and put it simply upon a financial basis, it seems to me that it detracts from the high position that the soldier occupies; it seems to me he would prefer to occupy the standpoint that he went forth with motives of patriotism, without hope of reward, to defend the country in the hour of danger; and when his friends here place him in the position that he has a right to come and demand in dollars and cents whatever he may conceive he is entitled to, they are doing an injustice to that soldier.

Nor do I believe that there is any necessity for this legislation to the extent that has been charged. I do not believe that there are any great numbers of ex-Union soldiers of this country who are in any great danger of going to the poor-house. I can not think it is possible that so many men as has been asserted are in that condition that unless the Government comes to their relief they will be compelled to beg for bread or go to the almshouses of the country. I think the statement which has been so often made to that effect is an injustice to the Union soldiers. As I stated upon another occasion, I judge them by those with whom I am acquainted. I judge the Union soldiers by those who opposed them in the contest, the men who were in the Southern army, who neither ask nor desire anything from the Government—the men who for four long years endured hardships equal to any other men, who returned to their homes in 1865 to find desolation upon every hand; men who returned with their hopes of victory and success crushed forever; men who went back to their homes without money, without farm implements, without stock, without aid from the Government, or elsewhere; men who found desolation on every hand, who went to work to rebuild their fortunes, and, instead of being a charge upon their neighbors, they have at times innumerable not only taken care of themselves, but stretched forth their hands to aid their less fortunate brethren. That being the situation as shown by them, I believe this hue and cry which is so often raised for political effect in order to secure the soldiers' votes, that there are thousands of Union soldiers in danger of going to the poor-house, is a false cry.

I believe that this bill is not just to the people of the nation. I believe the idea that it carries with it, an idea that has been asserted again and again, that the Union soldiers saved the Government and have the right to demand whatever they please, is an idea destructive of liberty. I believe that at least we owe it to ourselves and we owe it to those we represent to say that there must come a time when this pension-roll shall no longer be swollen. More than ten years ago the late Mr. Garfield, President of the United States, asserted, when $38,- 000,000 were appropriated in a bill, that he thought the limit had been reached and that thereafter pension appropriations would be decreased; and yet year by year and day by day the appropriations continue to increase, and so certain is it that whatever is demanded will pass that men sit mute and silent and see bills which are unjust and unfair go through this Senate from day to day.

I say, as I said before, with no unkindness to any Union soldier, I say it respecting and honoring him and respecting and honoring as I do today the flag and the Government for which he fought, that I believe I owe a duty to oppose this bill to the thousands and thousands of poor laboring people who are compelled to toil from year to year, and I confess that my sympathies go out to them as well as to those who fought to save the flag in the hour of danger, and believe that they have some rights which the Congress of the United States should respect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the report of the conference committee.

Mr. BERRY. Upon that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, when the conference report was under consideration a few days since, I made inquiry of the chairman of the conference committee, who has given this matter great consideration, what the probable expenditure would be in case this report was adopted. I understood the Senator from Minnesota to say that the gross expense per annum under the provisions of this bill if it becomes a law will be between forty-one and forty-two million dollars. The estimate made elsewhere he will find by reference to the record is that it will not exceed $35,000,000 per annum.

Mr. President, I have uniformly voted for the most liberal appropriations to the men who served their Government in the Army or the Navy. I believe that there is a consensus of opinion that the men who have so served, and are unable to provide properly for themselves or their wives and dependent children, ought to be provided for by the Government. Therefore, in what I may have to say there will be no hostility to the most liberal appropriations for that class of our fellow-citizens.

But, Mr. President, there is a limit to all things. There must be a limit to the appropriations that are now being made upon this account. We have appropriated and actually paid to the 508,419 pensioners now on the roll since 1861 $1,105,326,017, an amount sufficient, if the Department had been properly administered and the laws properly framed, to provide amply and well for all those who served their country during the last and preceding wars, provided the bounty had been conferred on those who were disabled to such a degree as to prevent them from earning a support. The payments since 1861 to January 1, 1890, are as follows:

Mr. President, the annual expenditures on account of pensions for the year ending June 30, 1861, were only $1,072,461.55, and for the year ending the 30th of June, 1890, now to expire within a few days, the whole amount in round numbers is $109,000,000. That is the amount actually appropriated and which will be expended by the 30th of June, this month. This amount does not include the expenditures on account of the administration of the Department, the pay of the clerks, and everything connected with the administration and the adjustment of these claims. The rate at which the payments are increasing per annum under the operation of the present laws and with the present force in the Pension Office may be safely put down at ten millions; if that be so, then we shall be compelled to appropriate for the year 1891 under the operation of the present law $120,000,000 in round numbers. If you add to that the expense of the Department for adjusting the claims and the payment of them, the gross expenditures will not be less than $125,000,000. There are pending, as I understand, over 450,000 claims. Probably it will take $250,000,000 to pay these with their arrearages. If they are to be adjusted and paid at the same rate as during the past year the expenditures for the year ending June 30, 1892, will be $135,000,000, and so on until they will reach within five years $200,000,000 per annum under the present laws.

Mr. President, this statement does not differ materially from that made by the Senator from Minnesota in his report. That Senator has given this matter great attention and he unquestionably desires to do full justice to the soldiers, but he, I am sure, does not desire to increase taxation to meet the exorbitant demands made. He had the courage to stand as a member of the Committee on Pensions, as its chairman and as a Senator upon this floor, to some extent to stay the effort that is being made to absolutely bankrupt the Treasury. I give him full credit. I believe that but for his courage and that of the members of his committee and the Senate supporting him this bill would have increased our expenditures at least $150,000,000 per annum.

But the bill that he now presents to the Senate, if I am not greatly mistaken—and I have taken some care to have it examined since the matter was last under consideration—largely exceeds the estimate of the Senator from Minnesota. I was led to make this examination or cause it to be made, because of the extraordinary statement which he presents in his report, and which was known to all of us, that when the act of January 25, 1879, was passed it was estimated that $20,000,000 would cover the entire expenditure, and yet up to June 30, 1885, there had been paid by the Government $179,405,872.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Maryland, I am sure, does not intend to convey an inaccurate or untruthful impression to the country.

Mr. GORMAN. Not at all.

Mr. INGALLS. The report declares that the estimate of eighteen or twenty million dollars was for the additional expenditure thereunder up to January 1, 1879.

I speak of this with some interest because I was chairman of the Committee on Pensions at the time when what is commonly known as the arrears bill was reported, and it was on my motion it was passed through the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Kansas is quite right. I would not make an inaccurate statement knowingly or convey an impression that the facts do not warrant. So that the Senate and the country may have the benefit of an exact statement made by the Senator himself when he was chairman, I shall read to the Senate what occurred in the debate in this body, which will be found on page 484, volume 33, of the RECORD, when that bill was before the Senate in January, 1879:

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like the chairman of the Committee on Pensions to indicate to us something as to the amount of money which will be required to pay the pensions here provided for. We ought not to vote blindly on this matter.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, in 1876, when a similar measure was pending before the Senate, I addressed a communication to the Commissioner of Pensions and asked him for information in regard to the amount which would be required to make the bill operative. I received from him a statement which was printed as Miscellaneous Document No. 113, at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, which gives in detail, as far as it could be ascertained from the records of the Pension Office, the amount that would be required to pay the arrears both of invalids and widows and dependents in each year since the adoption of section 4709 of the Revised Statutes. I do not know that it will be necessary to read specifically the annual amounts, but up to the 1st of January, 1876, the Commissioner reports that there were 16,454 invalid cases to which the limitation of the section applied, and the estimated amount of arrears at that time was $9,529,775. The number of widows and dependents was 5,143. The amount required to pay the arrears of those would be $3,867,334; making a total at that time of $13,417,109.

There have been three years since that date, and of course I can only estimate what amount would be required since this computation was made; but taking the estimate for 1875 as an average my judgment would be that this sum should be added not less than $5,000,000 for claims since allowed to which the limitation now applies. Of course these estimates are very largely in the nature of surmises, because we can not tell until the bill is put practically in operation exactly what will be required.

Mr. CONKLING. Making in all how much, as the Senator has it there?

Mr. INGALLS. Making in all up to the 1st of January, 1876, the sum of $13,417,109, and that amount I should judge would be increased by not less than $5,000,000 up to the 1st of January, 1879.

Mr. CONKLING. Which makes about $19,000,000?

Mr. INGALLS. I should judge somewhere from eighteen to twenty million dollars in round numbers. Of course it is impossible to make anything like an accurate calculation upon matters of this kind.

And yet, as is stated in the report of the Senator from Minnesota, up to June 30, 1885, the aggregate paid was $179,405,872.

Mr. INGALLS. Do I interrupt the Senator by calling attention for one moment to the misleading character of his statement?

Mr. GORMAN. I may be mistaken, but I will read what the report of the Senate committee, which is Report No. 989 of the present session, made by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, says of this act:

It was estimated while the act of January 25, 1879, was under consideration that the additional expense thereunder up to January 1, 1879, would be from $18,000,000 to $20,000,000—

Mr. INGALLS. That is right.

Mr. GORMAN—

This was based upon the estimate of the Commissioner of Pensions up to January 1, 1876, and other estimates of $5,000,000 from that date to January 1, 1879. Shortly after the passage of the act of January 25, 1879, the Secretary of the Interior addressed to the President of the Senate a communication, of which a copy is hereto annexed, dated February 18, 1879. This was closely followed by the act of March 3, 1879, imposing the limitation. The legislation requested by the Secretary as to the proper mode of obtaining evidence in claims for arrears of pension was not accorded, but the act of limitation was passed.

Under date of January 25, 1888, in a communication addressed to Hon. Samuel J. Randall, House of Representatives, General J. C. Black, then Commissioner of Pensions, estimated that the said arrears act had up to June 30, 1885, cost the Government $179,405,872.

Now, I ask the Senator from Kansas, who has always been liberal to the soldiers, whether it was in his mind or whether he, as chairman of the Committee on Pensions, had the information from the Department communicating in any shape or form to Congress any estimate that began to cover one-tenth part of this $179,000,000, or whether he conceived it possible that that act would require the expenditure of a tenth part of that amount.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator has the debate before him of January, 1879, he will see that that interrogation was addressed to me, inquiring what would be necessary in the opinion of the Pension Committee to pay what might accrue after the 1st of January, 1879, and the answer was there explicitly made that it would depend upon the number of claims that might be filed after January, 1879, and that there was no more means of ascertaining accurately or computing definitely what would be required than there was of ascertaining how many wild fowl would fly over the Capitol in the course of a year.

Mr. GORMAN. I shall be glad to be corrected if I am mistaken.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator has read from the debate that occurred when the passage of that bill was moved and is endeavoring, of course, to produce the impression upon the country that there was an enormous and bewildering discrepancy between the amount that it was then stated would be required to make this act operative and what has since been paid.

Now, the Senator, I am sure, after reading what he has recited to the Senate, will admit that $18,000,000 was the amount required up to the 1st of January, 1879.

Mr. GORMAN. I think the Senator from Kansas—he and I want to be entirely frank about this matter—will now admit that neither he nor other gentlemen in Congress nor the Commissioner of Pensions ever supposed that that act would require this enormous expenditure. There was no estimate ever made that it would take a quarter of that amount of money. There was no suggestion that it would or could ever reach $175,000,000 or $180,000,000.

But, Mr. President, we are met with a condition. I am not complaining of the Senator from Kansas or any other gentleman who was in either branch of Congress who voted for that act. That is not the question now. A mistake was made, an underestimate was made.

Mr. INGALLS. A mistake?

Mr. GORMAN. I will change it and say an underestimate. An underestimate was made of the cost of that legislation.

Mr. INGALLS. No estimate at all was made about it. The Senator persists in his misleading statements. There never was any attempt to estimate the cost of it. The only statement that was made was that up to a certain date, then under consideration, the amount required to carry the act into operation would be about eighteen or twenty million dollars.

Mr. GORMAN. That is a most extraordinary statement of the Senator from Kansas. Is it possible that these various acts appropriating any amount of money from the Treasury of the United States were passed without the attempt being made to estimate what they would cost the people of this country? I have never supposed that in any of the legislation we have had we had ever been as loose in our methods as that. No such procedure takes place to-day. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], who comes forward with this proposition, comes to the Senate with an estimate, the best he can get, as to what the probable cost will be to the tax-payers of this country.

Mr. INGALLS. Only annually, not the aggregate.

Mr. GORMAN. The aggregate annual appropriation under this bill the Senator from Minnesota fixes at from $41,000,000 to $42,000,000.

Mr. INGALLS. There is no attempt to estimate what the aggregate expense of this statute will be. The Senator from Minnesota furnished an estimate of the annual expense that will be added by the operations of this law.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes; and the Senator from Minnesota and the Committee on Pensions go beyond that. They furnish a table which they admit is inaccurate; they say it is not possible to determine with accuracy the actual annual gross amount carried by this act, nor do they give in figures the total expenditures that will accrue because of this law, but they do furnish a table of the number of persons who will probably be entitled to the benefit of it and the probable life of those benefited, so we can estimate to some extent how long this appropriation will run; but that estimate of the Senator from Minnesota, which he places at forty-one or forty-two millions of dollars, as I have said, I have gone over carefully, with the benefit of some experts, and I find from the best information I can get and from the closest calculations I have been able to make that he largely underestimates the amount.

Mr. President, the principal item of expense under this bill will, of course, be the provision made for disabled survivors by section 2. For the purpose of estimating the cost of the legislation proposed in this section, it is assumed as a very low estimate that three-fourths of all the men accepted into the service during the war served ninety days or more, which I think is an underestimate that will be admitted by the Senator from Minnesota. According to the best estimates which can be made there will be living on July 1, 1890, 812,951 honorably discharged survivors of the war whose service was not less than ninety days and who are either not on the pension-rolls or are pensioned at less than $8 per month. How many of these are disabled, and to what extent, of course there is no means of determining; but if only one-half of them are added to the pension-rolls at $9 per month—the mean between the maximum and minimum rates fixed by this section—the maximum being $12, the number to be provided for under this section would be 406,475, and the cost would be $43,899,300 per annum, that is, if only one-half of the claims of those who are supposed to be entitled to pensions are allowed. But if the additions to the rolls should be equivalent to three-fourths—that is the experience of the Pension Department—of the survivors, at the average rate of $9 per month, then the cost of this section alone would be $65,848,950 per annum.

Of the 331,410 veterans of not less than ninety days' service who have died since the war, it is believed that three-fourths, or 248,557, left widows, of whom 186,746 are now living. Of these it is fair to assume that at least one-half, or 93,373, remain unmarried, are not pensioned, are dependent upon their labor for support, and consequently come within the provisions of section 3, and that one-fifth of the latter number, or 18,675, have each at least one child under sixteen years of age. The annual pensions, then, for dependent widows under this section would amount to $8,963,808, and for minor children $448,200.

There is no basis whatever upon which any reliable estimate can be made of the probable number of dependent parents who would become beneficiaries under section 1 of the act, or of the cost of this section, but if the number thus added to the rolls should only equal the number on the rolls on January 1, 1890, the accessions would number 34,501, and if these should only receive the minimum rate of $8 per month the total cost would be $3,312,096.

From the foregoing the following figures are obtained:

Disabled survivors.....	$43,880,300
Dependent widows.....	8,963,808
Minor children.....	448,200
Dependent parents.....	3,312,096
Total.....	56,623,404

In the foregoing calculations it has been assumed that the accessions to the pension-list under section 2 of this bill will only be equal to one-half the survivors at the average rating of $9 per month. But if the accessions under this section should be equal to three-fourths of the survivors at that rating the annual cost would be increased by $21,949,650, making the total cost of the bill $78,573,054.

Therefore, if three-fourths of the survivors should be pensioned the expenditures under this bill would be as follows:

812,951 survivors, estimating three-fourths of them to be placed upon the roll at an average of $9 per month, would amount to.....	$65,848,950
Dependent widows.....	8,963,808
Minor children.....	448,200
Dependent parents.....	3,312,096

Total.....	78,573,054
Salaries of 500 additional clerks at $1,000.....	500,000

Total cost per annum..... 79,073,054

Then, Mr. President, with the amount that we are to pay under the present laws, amounting this year to $109,000,000 and in the year 1892 from one hundred and twenty to one hundred and twenty-five millions, you have bankrupted the Treasury. There is not money enough from the present revenues of the Government to pay these charges with the ordinary expenses which must be provided for.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator if he thinks that is an argument against this bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GORMAN. I do.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator consider that an argument against the bill?

Mr. GORMAN. Is that the Senator's question?

Mr. BLAIR. That is my question.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, we are face to face with a condition and not a theory. Now my friend from New Hampshire looks only at the theory.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will permit me, I look at the condition of those who have claims upon their country, which is not a theory by any means.

Mr. GORMAN. As I said in the beginning of my remarks, whatever I may say is not in opposition to liberal and fair provision for the disabled and dependent soldiers of the country. The Senator from New Hampshire knows perfectly well that ever since I have had the honor of a seat upon this floor I have taken great pleasure always in voting to make liberal provision for the men who are dependent and who have served their country in the Army or the Navy. But we are to-day confronted with another condition of affairs. The prodigality, the extravagance in the administration of the affairs of the Pension Office, and loose legislation have brought about an expenditure which by the year 1892 will leave your Treasury bankrupt. You insist in largely increasing the amount that must be appropriated to meet claims now pending by this bill, which will take nearly the entire amount received from the customs and internal-revenue receipts.

I say, Mr. President, that there are sixty-five other millions of people in this country who have an interest in this matter, and they will stop to inquire whether we are not bankrupting them to provide, to an extent that they have never contemplated, for the soldiers who served in the late war.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator if he doubts the ability of the Government to replenish the Treasury to the extent of paying the just claims of those who saved the country and the Treasury alike? Is not the real difficulty that the war was too big and we expended too much to preserve our institutions?

Mr. GORMAN. Oh, no, Mr. President; I do not doubt the ability of this country to do anything. But prudence requires that while we vote fair and liberal appropriations on this account we shall not give any such extravagant amounts as will necessitate the increase of the taxes of an overburdened people; and that is the object of my calling the attention of the Senate to the condition of the Treasury, and staying, if I can, this extravagance.

Now, let us see how this matter will stand. The amount of actual revenues, including the postal receipts, of the Government for the current year is estimated at $450,414,377.34. The amounts appropriated in the regular appropriation bills and miscellaneous, as they stand to-day, without any reference to the additions which will be made and must be made, amount to $344,120,313.97. The general deficiency bill will be not less than $5,000,000. The miscellaneous appropriations I placed at only $5,000,000, but they will more probably amount to $10,000,000. The new pension bill, if the entire amount of the estimates which I have presented were appropriated, would be $79,073,054, and the permanent appropriations $101,628,453, making the total expenditures of the Government $534,821,820.97, or a deficit of $84,407,483.63 at the end of the next fiscal year.

But, Mr. President, there will be no such deficit, and for this reason: While you have proceeded to increase the obligations of the Government by extending these pension laws, you have made no provision for the adjustment of the claims which are now pending or for the adjustment of the claims under this bill; and while the obligation will exist the soldier will be without his money, because the claims can not and will not be adjusted, and in that way, and in that way only, can you prevent this large deficit in the Treasury.

I know that when the pension question is presented to Congress, as well as upon the hustings, it is made a political foot-ball. I am perfectly aware that whenever a Democrat opposes these extravagant appropriations, when he tells the other side that he is anxious to make provision for all who are disabled and unable to take care of themselves, but is opposed to this extravagance which will bankrupt the Government, the old charges, the old statements come back, and there is never an opportunity lost to twit the Democratic party with a desire to do injustice to these gallant men. In the consideration of this bill the same charge has been made. I have a right to read statements which I find in the public prints in connection with this bill. I find that in another place Mr. CANNON said:

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, this legislation is not perfect. Nobody claims that it is or that it is possible to enact perfect legislation touching this or any other question. It does not go as far as the House desires to go. The House has gone as far as it could after persistent effort and has gotten all it could get. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] informs us he could not get the Senate to go farther. This is good legislation. It places on the pension-roll 250,000 names that are not on it. It increases the pensions of 50,000 men now on the rolls. The pension-roll under existing law carries half a million pensioners. This increases the number to 750,000. We will have paid out this fiscal year under existing law by the 30th day of June, $109,000,000, and under existing law next year we will pay out $115,000,000, and we will pay out $35,000,000 under this law, making $150,000,000 in all for the payment of pensions next fiscal year.

Our total revenue from customs under existing law is $220,000,000 a year, from internal revenue $135,000,000, making together $355,000,000, $150,000,000 of which will be paid for pensions. For the coming year the Government will pay out $2 of every $5 that it collects, and gladly do it under existing law and under this legislation, for pensions. It is the best we could do now. We will do it and do it cheerfully; and as the years roll round the Government of the United States will enlarge its pension legislation for the benefit of those who served it in the Army and Navy. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. McCOMAS said:

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, although all that was desired by me has not been obtained, although the service pension, for which I voted and for which the Republicans of this House voted, has not been agreed to by the Senate, yet under the lead and guidance and by the devoted labors of the wisest, truest, noblest, and best friend the soldier has had in Congress on either side in eight years, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL], to whom they owe a debt they can never pay, such as they owe no other man in House or Senate [applause on the Republican side], we have gotten a good bill.

Mr. YODER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Maryland will allow me, I desire to state that after serving for four years with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] on the Committee on Invalid Pensions I most heartily indorse every word he has said. The soldiers never had a more sincere, earnest, hard-working friend in the world than the present chairman of the committee, Major MORRILL.

Mr. McCOMAS. We have here a measure that the people of this country who care for the helpless soldiers, widows, and orphans want, because it gives immediate relief. The soldiers who grow older while we debate, the widows who grow more needy will prefer it to hypocritical promises, deceitful pledges, and disappointing platforms. By it we will begin at once to take two hundred thousand men who served our country away from the edge of distress and poverty and give them a pension. By it we will succor thousands of soldiers who were getting from one to two dollars a month pension, and we will have their pensions increased to $5 a month. We give to them all the help that comes from $35,000,000 paid out annually, and not simply an empty utterance of platform and deceit of party. Under this bill proper care will be taken of one hundred thousand widows of the soldiers who helped to save the Government, and under this bill you will begin at once to take ten thousand men out of the almshouses of the country, where they have been allowed to go, carrying an honorable discharge in a ragged coat-pocket, a standing disgrace to my country and your country.

This is a good measure of help, Mr. Speaker, not all that I wanted, not all other men wanted, not all that some Democrats cheaply profess to want here and then vote against. You gentlemen on that side of the Chamber talk and we vote; you declaim and we act; and we now give this large part of the revenue of the nation rather than debate and delay. You do nothing and we do something, and we do it cheerfully and gratefully. The Republican party acts up fully to its platform, and all the good work that has been done for our soldiers has been done by the Republican party, has been done in spite of the continuous opposition of that side of the House. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, said:

The regular pension appropriation bill which passed at this session carried $68,427,461. In the urgent deficiency act which I reported in January we appropriated for pensions $11,613,009. For soldiers' homes we included in the urgent deficiency bill $81,000,000. For artificial limbs there was included in the same bill $60,000; for pay and bounty claims (actual and estimated), $1,123,629.76.

In the sundry civil bill, as reported yesterday, there is provided for soldiers' homes (seven branches) an appropriation of $2,601,785.45; aid to State homes for soldiers, paid out of the Federal Treasury, $400,000; for artificial limbs and appliances (this being the year when that appropriation is called for), $402,000; pay and bounty claims (estimated), $680,000.

In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, which has passed the House, we appropriated for expenses of the Pension Office $2,439,150; for record and pension division, War Department—what is known as Dr. Ainsworth's division—$837,270, a division doing a great work for the soldiers in speeding the examination of all claims.

Then there was the bill which passed this House, and, I think, has become a law. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas whether that bill, known as the "totally helpless bill," has not passed both Houses and become a law—

Mr. FERRISS. It has.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That bill carries $450,000. Then the general pension bill which passed this House yesterday for the benefit of disabled soldiers, their widows, and the old fathers and mothers, carried, as was estimated, not less than $35,000,000. So that we have appropriated by our legislation, including what is covered in the sundry civil bill now pending in the House, the sum of $164,115,894.80. Then add the amount carried by the pending bill, and we have a grand total of $167,824,733.24.

Mr. HILL. How much of that is in direct aid of the soldiers by way of pensions—

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I have given each item as I went along. It is all for the benefit of the soldiers in one way or another.

Then, in order that we may be perfectly fair and frank with each other, because there should be no concealments about this matter, I desire to say that the estimated receipts of the Government for 1891 are $450,414,377.34.

Mr. SAYERS. That includes post-office receipts?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It does, as do the other statements which I will give. The estimated revenues for the current year amount to $439,509,000. The actual revenues for 1889 were $443,148,000. Thus it will be seen that more than one-third of the entire receipts of the Government as provided for in this Congress go for the benefit of the soldiers of the Union. I feel it due to this Congress, and to both sides of it, that these facts should be given here and now.

As I have stated, the estimated revenues for next year are $450,414,377.34, including receipts from the postal service. The amount from the latter service for this year is estimated at $65,414,377.34, leaving all our Federal income from import duties and internal revenues and miscellaneous items, amounting to $385,000,000. Of this sum, as I have shown, we have appropriated this year, and gladly, the sum of $167,824,733.24 for the benefit of old soldiers, their widows, children, and helpless parents. Almost one-half of the revenues of the Government goes to this sacred use, and it is proper that the soldiers should know these facts.

So in the passage of the act the appeal of the partisan comes, and it is urged because it is a party measure. The Democrats who happen to oppose such legislation and ask you to stop and think are denounced and the country is appealed to, the soldiers are appealed to to stand by the "grand old party," because it votes these liberal pensions; and yet, Mr. President, that party, or the members of that party who so talk and so act, know perfectly well that they have refrained from doing the only one thing that they could possibly do to pay the soldiers, and that is to act upon the recommendation of the Department, to give a sufficient number of clerks to adjust the claims already pending. Let me read what the Commissioner of Pensions says upon this subject. There are pending in the Pension Office, the Commissioner says in his last report for 1889, 479,000 claims which have not been adjusted or examined, and he makes an appeal to Congress to give him sufficient clerical force to adjust these claims. I will read what he says on this subject, to be found on page 14 of his report:

CLERICAL FORCE.

The request for additional force that my predecessor repeatedly made, I feel impelled to renew with all the earnestness it is proper for me to use.

The number of pending claims, as shown by the published reports, has been constantly increasing beyond the utmost power of the office to dispose of them for the past four years, and a notable increase since the 1st of last March. From March 1 to the close of the fiscal year there were filed 35,000 original invalid claims, making 112,000 claims of all classes filed in that period. This was again upon the office of over 35,000.

Considering that there are now pending 479,000 claims of all classes and that it is twenty-four years since the war closed, it seems to me there are sufficient reasons for asking that additional force be put upon this work to enable those entitled to pension to get the benefit of it while they live.

I respectfully recommend that an appropriation for an increased force of three hundred clerks be asked for, and that it be made available at once.

That was the statement of the Commissioner of Pensions at that time, Mr. James Tanner. It was made substantially by his predecessor, General Black, when he was Commissioner of Pensions. If instead of appealing to partisanship, if instead of passing an act extending the pension laws, something practical was to be done by the men who professed to be the only friends of the soldiers, then the wise thing, the one thing that would have given them the money which they are entitled to during their lifetime, as the Commissioner of Pensions states it, would have been to increase the appropriation for the clerical force in the Pension Office and elsewhere and have the claims adjusted. But instead of that, upon the great appropriation bills as they came to this body, you find no effort whatever to increase this force and to do the only practical thing by which these claims can be adjusted. A small increase in one bill of thirty medical examiners, cut down by this body to eighteen, is the sum total of the increased machinery which the very men who have promised so much in the speeches which I have read have given for the purpose of dispensing this money. Not a dollar is provided for in this bill—it may be hereafter—for examining the claims, of employing clerks and others to examine claims under this bill. No provision whatever has been made for putting it in force, and the party that is responsible for this legislation, the men who have given utterance in another place to the sentiments which I have quoted—two of them had charge of appropriation bills—have not attempted to make and dare not make sufficient provision to carry out the existing laws or to adjust the claims that will be made under this bill.

Mr. President, if the party in power had done the practical thing to secure the money to the soldiers, your revenues of to-day would be insufficient; there would not have been enough to pay the ordinary expenses of the Government, and you would be forced, as you will be forced before this Congress closes, to so shape your legislation for bringing money into the Treasury that the taxes and the revenues must be increased instead of diminished, as the whole country had a right to expect.

We can not fail to take note of what is going on all around us. The leaders of the Republican party here and elsewhere have made great pretensions of reducing taxation $60,000,000. But the great leader of your party has called a halt. Those in charge of the executive branch know, as those of you do who are in charge of appropriations in this body and elsewhere, that you can not go before the country with increased taxation. You have evidently been afraid to go back to the soldiers, to whom you promised so much, without legislation; but your legislation will not benefit them, says your Commissioner of Pensions, Mr. Tanner, during their lifetime, unless you make appropriations for enlarging the clerical force of the office so as to permit the office to adjust these claims. You can not adjust these claims, you can not make such provision without alarming sixty or sixty-five millions of people who pay these taxes; they will ask you why it is that within two years, since you came into power in all branches of the Government with $100,000,000 of surplus, you have bankrupted the Treasury and increased their taxes.

Mr. BLAIR. May I make a suggestion right there?

Mr. GORMAN. I yield to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. BLAIR. I suggest that if the claims are not adjusted they can not be paid; so that the Treasury is not likely to suffer nor the people to endure much taxation if the claims are not adjusted.

Mr. GORMAN. That is precisely what I stated, and yet you induce the soldiers to believe that they shall have all they are entitled to under the acts prior to this, and that you will now give them seventy millions more, when you deliberately refuse to adjust their claims and pay them what is due them under the laws on the statute-book.

Mr. BLAIR. Is the Senator at all fearful that the claims will not be adjusted and that this law will not be carried into effect?

Mr. GORMAN. I think in the course of time they will all be adjusted.

Mr. BLAIR. Then, does not the Senator really base his opposition to this bill and is not his whole argument simply that this bill is to take money out of the Treasury, and can it do so unless the claims are adjusted?

Mr. GORMAN. I was commenting upon the statements which I quoted, which ought never to have been made, for I never myself on a pension bill brought in the matter of politics; but I say this question has been kicked around as a foot-ball upon every stump in the land, and that afterwards when it came up for consideration, where we ought to have calm deliberation, in the passage of this very act, the men who are responsible for it, who have charge of the purse-strings of the Government in one of its co-ordinate branches, taunt the Democrats with being opposed to these appropriations and tell the soldiers they have given them this and it was all that they could get from the Senate, though they hoped to give them more, and yet at the same time deliberately and knowingly deceive the very men whose votes they are courting, because they have not made provision to adjust the claims already pending and they have made no provision whatever for those included in this bill.

I say it is wrong for either of the great parties to attempt to deceive the country or to pile upon the statute-book provisions which put us under obligation hereafter to pay sums of money beyond what is required to take care honestly and faithfully of the men who served in the Army and in the Navy and who are in indigent circumstances.

Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, you have been driven to stop the adjustment of these claims or else to increase taxation; as I said a moment ago, your great leader in another branch of the Government sees the condition you are in. He knows you can not reduce the revenues. Nobody claims that your revenue bill can be passed to reduce the revenue. Before you have passed through this session, if you deal with the revenue bill here you must so revise it as to keep your revenue standard at the present amount of $450,000,000 or increase it, or you will have a deficit or encroach upon the sinking fund.

Mr. President, in the interest of the millions of people in this country who are bearing burdens now of which they complain, I say that it is unwise, unjust, to increase their burdens. Mr. President, pensions should not be a party question; all acts for the benefit of the men who served their country in the hour of need should be fairly considered and disposed of without political bias. Both sides should in the interest of all the tax-payers of the country, the great mass of the people, overhaul the Pension Office, look at its methods, and inquire why it is with four or five hundred thousand men upon the rolls there are 479,000 unadjusted. Everybody who takes only a cursory glance knows that there has been looseness in the administration of that department. Men are upon the pension-roll who are not entitled to pensions.

Mr. President, this bill, I suppose, will pass. The decree of a great party has gone forth. The responsible leaders of that party have promised more, a better bill, a greater sum in the near future. You may keep the soldier in your party ranks by these promises, but the millions of toilers—the farmers, merchants, wage-earners, all tax-payers—will, if I mistake not, put the pointed inquiry, "Why have you increased our taxes?" And you must answer. That answer can not be satisfactory, because the people know it is only to redeem a party promise.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, this question of pensions, and especially of pensions in the line of the bill under present consideration, has been for the last four years so much discussed in print and by speech that it had not been my intention, after saying what I have said on this subject on frequent occasions, to take up the valuable time of the Senate with any additional remarks. But there are some things in the observations of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] and of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] which do require some consideration.

The Senator from Arkansas, ever since I have been here, with motives which I do not discredit by referring to him in the least, has been a consistent opponent of pension legislation for the benefit of the Union soldier, and what he has said this morning is in the direct line of what he has said upon other occasions. Between persons holding views so diametrically different as his and mine on this question there can be very little debate. He is distinctly opposed to any further pension legislation whatever. He thinks we have gone too far. He criticizes and stigmatizes what has been done, and a consistent pursuit of his argument on its line of logical sequence would require him or his party, if it ever comes into power again, to move a repeal of much that has been enacted by the Republican party in the long time of its ascendancy.

He says the present bill is a service pension. Not at all. The question of a service pension was eliminated from this measure by the report of the conference committee. It is a disability bill pure and simple, a bill which has been demanded by an overpowering sentiment of the North, to say the least, which has met with no dissent in the platform of any political party in that region, and which finds ample argument and justification for its passage in the personal observation of the residents of every community in that portion of the country.

Mr. President, a pension measure was before the Senate some two Congresses ago, and the voice of the Senator from Arkansas was not heard, nor that of the Senator from Maryland, in objection to it. It was a measure of generosity in a large manner from the North to the Southern survivors of those who helped to subjugate a large portion of Mexico. When in that Congress the proposition was made to put the survivors of the Mexican war of the age of sixty-two years upon the pension-roll as a service pension, I do not read that the Senator from Arkansas made any objection to that proceeding; and yet it was a service pension pure and simple. But when it comes to pensioning the Northern soldier for a disability as his old age approaches him, perhaps provably not traceable, and yet according to all experience manifestly deducible from the hardships of military life, then the Senator from Arkansas appeals to this great principle of personal dignity which should make men independent of pensions which are in their nature service pension. If there is the slightest basis of right in the service pension to the Mexican war veterans, then how can he rise and say that this pension bill for a disability merely to the veteran Union soldier does not exceed that greatly in its merit?

The trouble with the Senator from Arkansas is not with the principle or the degree of relief. The trouble is (and it is to his credit so far as its frankness is concerned) that he is opposed to any further legislation for the benefit of the Northern soldier.

Mr. President, the report under present consideration is a conference report. It presents conclusions which were arrived at by the committee after strenuous debate, much difference of opinion, and to some extent unwilling reconciliation of views. Like all measures of this character it does not in a full degree represent the matured convictions of each member of that committee. I do not present or advocate it as the best measure which could be matured, but I do say that it is the best measure attainable in the state of mind of those to whom was delegated the task of endeavoring to produce a reconciliation upon this question.

Now, what does it provide? It provides in section 2—

That all persons who served ninety days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the war of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now, or may hereafter be, suffering from mental or physical disability, equivalent to the grade now established in the Pension Office for the rating of $6 per month, upon due proof of the fact, according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, shall be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States.

Three or four conditions precedent are prescribed by this measure to entitle an applicant to be placed upon the pension-rolls. He must be suffering from a mental or physical disability. It must not be of an acute character, but it must be of a permanent character. It must be not the result of his own vicious habits. It must incapacitate him from the performance of manual labor in such a degree as to render him unable to earn a support. Now, to say that, under these circumstances and with such requirements, this is a service pension, or that 90 per cent., as the Senator from Arkansas estimated, or 75 per cent., as I understood the Senator from Maryland to estimate, of those not pensioned are going upon the pension-rolls is an estimate surely made without any proper consideration of the facts, or of the ordinary rules which guide human experience in such cases.

Mr. President, there are, speaking in round numbers, of the survivors of the war 800,000 not pensioned. Of these, 167,000, or, to be precise, 166,804, have claims pending under the present laws of the United States in the Pension Office which have not yet been considered or allowed. So, in dealing with the round numbers this bill will affect, we have 800,000 men, less 166,000, namely, 634,000 men, from whom all must come who are pensionable under section 2 of this act. Does any man suppose, and can any man who will seriously discuss this question for a moment maintain, that of 634,000 men of that character 90 per cent. or 75 per cent. are suffering from a mental or physical disability of a permanent character which incapacitates them from the performance of manual labor in such a degree as to disable them from earning a support? The question contains within itself the answer. The experience of each of us in the communities in which we live, testing this question by the range of our acquaintance with the soldiers, shows that an estimate of that kind is simply preposterous, absurd, and, if persisted in, made with a motive which can not be to arrive at a true solution of the question.

As I stated the other day, the data for estimates in this matter were exceedingly difficult to obtain with that clearness which is desirable, and while I stated that according to my own opinion this bill would cost from forty to forty-one million dollars, it was difficult for me to give to my own satisfaction the precise details upon which I would make a distributive statement in that respect. Yet I have looked this matter over some and have considered it.

Out of the 634,000 soldiers from whom all must come who are to be benefited by this bill, I estimate as an extreme estimate, and it goes far beyond that of any expert with whom I have talked upon this subject, that 300,000 soldiers, nearly 50 per cent., are at present suffering from a mental or physical disability of a permanent character not the result of their own vicious habits, which incapacitates them from the performance of manual labor in such a degree as to disable them from earning a support. I say that is an extreme estimate. I wish to be safe in this matter and not mislead the country, and when I say that 50 per cent. of these soldiers substantially can claim under this bill, I am going to the very length of conjectural possibility in that respect.

This pension is to be graded from eight to twelve dollars a month according to the degree of disability to earn a support, and I take, as the Senator from Maryland did, the mean of $9, the average between the sums, and at that basis 300,000 soldiers at $108 a year would cost annually $32,400,000. The widows who will claim under this bill according to the best information I can get after consulting the records and those who are best qualified to know in the Pension Office, will be 75,000, making at $96 a year $7,205,000. It is estimated that 25,000 children of these widows will be added to the pension-roll at the rate of $2 per month each until they reach the age of sixteen. That at $24 a year is $601,000. It is estimated that under the provisions of this bill there will be 2,000 children surviving widows who may debase and whose pensions go to such children under the provisions of the bill, which would be $48,000 per year; making the total appropriation $40,254,000.

As I said the other day, it may exceed that, but I do not believe it can largely. The Commissioner of Pensions informs me that he thinks my estimate is more than ample to cover every expenditure which can be conjectured under this bill.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. I ask the Senator if under the present bill a large number of those who are upon the rolls already will not receive an increased pension.

Mr. DAVIS. I have taken that into account in estimating the 300,000 pensioners.

Mr. BERRY. I understood the Senator to estimate 300,000 at a pension of $108 for each one of the 300,000 not on the rolls at all.

Mr. DAVIS. I have taken those into account, and I will give the Senator the figures, for I had anticipated that question. According to the best information I can obtain at the Pension Bureau the utmost increase that can be had to this estimate under that question, if it is a proper one, is about $3,000,000 per year, which would increase this estimate of $40,000,000 by the amount of $3,000,000 were it not for the fact that I have as near as possible included it in my estimate of 300,000 pensioners at $108 a year (for I am not giving analyzed tables), making $32,400,000 a year.

Mr. President, all the experts with whom I have consulted, and there have been several, men of great experience in this matter, have stated that I have placed this amount too high. I can not believe that in a matter which has been so carefully considered by so many qualified persons, acting under a sense of immediate responsibility, any of us could have gone very far wide of the mark.

Mr. SPOONER. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota to state again the total?

Mr. DAVIS. Forty million four hundred and forty thousand dollars.

Mr. SPOONER. Thank you.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the Senator from Maryland. They are in the same line of opposition to measures of relief of this character which we have heard ever since I have been in the Senate, and which were prevalent long before I became a member of this body. It is the refrain of Grover Cleveland's veto message, and, disguised with whatever protestations, it is an array of the Democratic party so far as so distinguished a member of that party can array it, against any further pension legislation whatever, and a complaint against the party in power of all existing methods by which present pension legislation is endeavored to be administered. If this bill contains error of detail or of principle the Senator from Maryland, with all his vast experience in these matters, ventures no correction or suggestion. His opposition is radical and from the foundation, and it is, as he expresses it, that there should be an end to all this; and, so far as he is concerned and is qualified to speak for the party of which he is so eminent a member, it is a declaration by the Democratic party against further or extended pension legislation. He takes exception to the amount which has been paid on account of pensions since the year 1861.

I may remark here, for fear that I may forget it in a more appropriate connection, that if the principle of this measure is right and if this country is performing to this body of men a duty that ought to be performed, the question of expense as an objection to any performance in this direction is of no moment whatever.

Mr. PLATT. Nothing is extravagant that is right.

Mr. DAVIS. As the Senator from Connecticut remarks, nothing is extravagant that is right; and when we reflect with what promises we sent those men out to save this country, and reflect that hundreds of thousands of them subtracted from three to five of the best years of their lives in order that we may sit secure here and perform our duties in this place; when we reflect on all that they did for humanity, for free government, for republican institutions; when we reflect upon the amount of suffering that has followed as an inevitable consequence in the case of almost every man who served through that war and did his duty, we shall not set up as an obstacle to the performance of our duty to them any mere question of the expense which it will be upon the Treasury; we shall provide ways and means to meet all our just obligations to these men, checking them when in their desire they go too far, or further than other interests of the country warrant them in their demands.

The Senator from Maryland—and I have heard that table read almost every session—says that since the year 1860 or 1861 we have expended $1,100,000,000 in pensions in round numbers. Very true; so we have; but, Mr. President, that is only about $33,000,000 a year. It is not such a great sum spread over the lifetime of a generation. Nobody has ever complained of it yet in any manner which has sufficiently impressed the public conscience to call upon that conscience to reprobate the perpetrators of this enormity who in thirty years have paid $1,100,000,000.

The Senator from Maryland takes exceptions to the estimate which was made, or which he states was made, by the Committee on Pensions in 1879 as to the amount necessary to pay the arrears. That committee made the only estimate and gave to the Senate and country the only information that human prescience could give upon that subject. That bill provided that the pensioner should draw his pension from the date of his disability, and outside certain narrow limits it was impossible to state when that date was; and it was also impossible to foresee or foretell the extent of the disability when it should be proved. Nobody ever supposed, I venture to say, that eighteen or twenty million dollars could possibly pay the cost of that bill. But in this particular instance we are subject to no want of data. We know precisely, so far as statisticians can give us, the number of men on the pension-rolls, the number who are not so enrolled, the number of widows, the number of children; and in the long track of thirty years the experience in the administration of that office has been such that it can arrive at results of this character with that remarkable accuracy of statistics which surprises persons who have not had occasion to deal with them. When from all these points these gentlemen come and say that the estimates of the committee are within reason, are ample, and will cover all of the expense, it is in vain to hold up as an argument against estimates of that character what is said to have been an opinion of nearly twenty years ago upon a state of facts illusory, deceptive, and not perceptible by any human cognizance.

Now, the Senator from Maryland claims that there will be no money to pay the pensioners under this bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Unless you make provision for enforcing the law.

Mr. DAVIS. Of course, if this bill imposes an obligation, the country will expect the Committee on Appropriations, of which the Senator is so eminent a member, to provide for carrying out this law, and I presume he will be among the foremost to do it. But he is entirely in error in his statement that there will be no money to pay those who are pensionable under existing laws, because it is perfectly well known that of the appropriation of $98,000,000, which was made the other day for the purpose of carrying out existing laws, at least $25,000,000 of it was for the purpose of paying what are called arrears, namely, the sums which accrue from the time of the filing of applications down to the time when they are finally allowed. So that so far as present laws are concerned and pensions under present laws, the appropriation of $98,000,000 amply takes care of that, and all the Committee on Appropriations have to consider is the amount called for by the bill under present consideration.

Mr. GORMAN. I presume the Senator wants to be entirely accurate about the matter, and I should like to say that he misunderstands me. The amount that was actually appropriated for the fiscal year which ends on the 30th day of the present month is, in round numbers, $109,000,000.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand there was a deficit.

Mr. GORMAN. There is a deficit, and there will be also for the year 1891, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations elsewhere and all authorities do not place the amount at less than $115,000,000 for the year ending June 30, 1891.

Mr. DAVIS. Was not the amount appropriated for the administration of pensions under the present law $98,000,000? That is one item, is it not?

Mr. GORMAN. I will give it to the Senator exactly.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not care for a table, but I understand that $98,000,000 was appropriated to pay the expenses of pension administration during the year, and that there were other items of nine millions (the Senator says fifteen millions) to cover deficits which had come down to us from a former Administration.

So, Mr. President, if the principle of this bill is just, if it is the judgment of the Senate that this measure shall become a law, and it is destined to take $40,000,000 to administer it, of course the Committee on Appropriations will not hesitate to provide the means.

But the Senator from Maryland is very solicitous that the working force in the Pension Office is not and will not be sufficient to give that measure of relief to the soldier which this bill seeks to extend to him. I have no doubt that sound policy will require and justify an increase of the working force of that department, but that is a mere matter of administration and detail, which has nothing to do with the principle of this bill. If the principle of this bill is correct, it will be a malfeasance in the gentlemen who are intrusted with the duty of providing for the administration of the laws not to have it receive their full and considerate attention.

But there is this to say about the present administration of the Pension Office, that the Commissioner reports that within the next twelve months all of the arrears which have plagued, perplexed, and distressed the soldier under the present laws will be brought up. I am firmly of the persuasion myself that with the present able administration of that bureau, and distribution of duties and exaction of more work than seems to have been obtained of employes in former times, the working force of that bureau is ample to carry this bill and all the relief which it is destined to bring to so many suffering people throughout the country.

Mr. President, I have said all I care to say upon the subject of this bill. As I said the other day and stated a few moments ago, it is a conference report. It may not meet the entire convictions of everybody, but it is the result of that average of conciliation and agreement upon which so much of the most important legislation often depends.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, only a word in response to the Senator from Minnesota. He seems to regard the statements that I have made as the usual attack upon pension legislation by the Democratic party. I disclaim any such intention, as I did in the opening of my remarks. I desired to call attention to the condition of this branch of the service, and the condition of the Treasury, and the evident result if this proposed legislation becomes a law and is properly enforced.

It is not a question whether we shall do justice to these soldiers, for that I am heartily in favor of, but it is a question of the amount of ability of this Government to pay. It is a question whether we shall pursue the policy that became operative of a largely increasing pension-roll and increasing taxation which must necessarily follow.

The Senator from Minnesota insists that his estimate of $40,000,000 under this bill is a liberal estimate of the expenditures per annum if it becomes a law. For the moment I will accept the Senator's figures. If he be entirely accurate, if it does not exceed that amount, and the party that is in power in all branches of this Government make provision for the Pension Office by which the claims shall be audited that are pending, and will make reasonable provision to enforce this proposed act, you will find by the year 1892 from seventy-five to one hundred million dollars deficit in the Treasury.

I charge, and I again repeat, that up to this hour, with nearly all the appropriation bills passed one or the other House, no attempt has been made to make provision by which the claims now pending may be adjusted, and none whatever has been made or will be made for administering this law; and you can not do it, because you know that it would bankrupt the Treasury, and you would be compelled to face an indignant people.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator submit to an interruption?

Mr. GORMAN. With great pleasure.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator states that no attempt has been made to provide for the adjustment of claims pending under present laws. I assert that the attempt has been made in this way: That of the appropriation of $98,000,000, in round numbers, $64,000,000 are for regular appropriations and that $25,000,000 are for the arrears, namely, the amounts that are being carried up to the time of adjudication. The Senator is in entire error upon that point.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Minnesota, I think, has not given the matter very much attention, or he would not make that statement. The amount I included when I was up for pensions means the arrears as well as the cases that accrue from now on. That is not the point I make at all. In the legislative and sundry civil appropriation bills, entirely different from this, which all goes to the soldier in the end when the claims are audited, no provision has been made at this Congress and none is likely to be made by which you will increase the appropriation for the Pension Department so that the claims pending there may be adjusted. All that are adjusted are covered by the two items the Senator from Minnesota reads; but no provision has been made to increase the clerical force, the medical examiners, other than the eighteen which I referred to, which is an insignificant number, and there they will lie under your legislation, the soldiers waiting, as the Commissioner of Pensions in his last report says, until they die. As the case now stands, if you did make an appropriation to increase the force and adjust the claims pending and make a reasonable provision for those provided for under this bill, you would find $100,000,000 deficit in 1892.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. When we passed the law to pension all the survivors of the Mexican war, was it found necessary to increase the force of the Pension Bureau in order that those claims might be adjusted, and can not the present force in the Bureau adjust these claims as well?

Mr. GORMAN. In answer to the Senator, I will read precisely what the last Commissioner, Commissioner Tanner, whom all the soldiers of the country, if nobody else, have great confidence in, says, repeating substantially what his predecessor, Mr. Black, had said:

I respectfully recommend that an appropriation for an increased force of three hundred clerks be asked for, and that it be made available at once. It is absolutely necessary that an additional number of messengers, etc., be allowed.

He said:

Considering that there are now pending 479,000 claims of all classes, and that it is twenty-four years since the war closed, it seems to me there is sufficient reason to ask that an additional force be put upon this work to enable those who are entitled to a pension to get the benefit of it while they live.

That is exactly a true statement. If the estimate of the Senator from Minnesota is correct, and I think that time will prove that it is far below the fact of only 300,000 additional claims under this bill, it will make 700,000 claims that will confront us by that Department to be adjusted, and you have not made provision for adjusting those already pending. I repeat that the party in power in holding out this hope to the soldier can not afford to do it. If the estimate of the Senator from Minnesota is correct, and only $40,000,000 are covered by this bill, with the appropriations as they stand to-day without any further additions, with the only estimate of $10,000,000 for the miscellaneous approprition, which is below the average made by every session of Congress, and adding $40,000,000 by this new bill, you will have a deficit on the 30th day of June, 1891, of $40,000,000.

I therefore say, sir, that this whole matter is misleading. My object has been to call the attention of the Senate and of the country, so far as I can, to the condition of the Treasury. I repeat, unless these men are to be deluded, unless you are to proceed as you have in the past by piling up the legislation and piling up the claims in the Department and not paying them while these men live, you are driven to acknowledge that the expenditures of the Government under your administration have exceeded the revenues.

You must remodel the legislation that is pending here. You can no longer boast of a reduction of $60,000,000 of taxation, but you must so frame that measure as to increase taxation and increase the revenues of the Government. That is the responsibility that is on the majority party.

I do not rise for the purpose, as the Senator from Minnesota indicated, of protesting against all fair legislation for pensions to the soldiers. I am in favor of that. But my purpose was to enter a protest against the administration of the office as we have had it, against the loose methods which spend $125,000,000 per annum. It was to enter a protest against these promises which have created great expectations among men who served their country in the time of need that will not be realized in their lifetime. It was for the purpose of emphasizing so far as I could, and calling attention to what your own great leader, the greatest your party has had in his day and generation, brought to your attention—the extravagance in your appropriations—the unthoughtful and unwise legislation which you propose in the matter of revenue. It was for the purpose of aiding my friend from Minnesota, whom I acknowledged has with great courage stemmed the tide of demagoguery throughout the land and the claim agents who had been urging these claims, who now receive, as the Commissioner states, $1,300,000 per annum for the prosecution of these claims and who get three millions more under his bill. I congratulated him and rejoiced that he has stood here and prevented this amount from reaching $150,000,000, as I believe he did. It is for the purpose, Mr. President, so far as what I say may have that effect, of bringing us back to the consideration of the pension matter with a view to fair treatment to the man who is dependent, with a view to liberality, if you please, but not this extravagant and wasteful expenditure that we have had. It is with a view of calling the attention of the majority for the purpose of joining you in preventing again by legislation the rerating of men who are drawing great salaries in the Pension Office while there are 400,000 soldiers who have never received a dollar. It is the condition, Mr. President, and not the general theory of the Treasury and of the country, not the theory that the Senator from Minnesota speaks of, that confronts us.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator answer me a question?

Mr. GORMAN. With great pleasure.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator speaks of these men being deluded. Does the Senator mean to say that we shall not be able to pay these men? Is that what the Senator means—that we are bankrupt, or likely to be?

Mr. GORMAN. I have stated in reply to my friend from New Hampshire that in my judgment this country is able to pay any debt it contracts, and it will pay any debt it contracts; it never has repudiated and never will repudiate a debt; but I mean to say that the manner in which we are proceeding, with the loose administration of the office, with the desire, natural, and it has been so with both parties, to grant every claim that can be brought up, to pension men who are not properly and justly entitled to it, we have reached a point where if you enforce the acts now upon the books and make provision for adjusting the claims provided for under this bill, you are compelled to increase the taxes of the people of this country.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one other question?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator from Maryland think that this bill does any more than justice to the soldiers and the widows of soldiers and the orphan children of soldiers? Does he find fault with the bill itself? Is it too generous?

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Colorado and myself, following the lead of our own committee, voted for one that was not so liberal as this conference report, and we all thought it did exact justice; at all events that it was as far as we could go prudently at this time.

Now, in the interest of the Pension Office, in the interest of these old soldiers, I think it is unwise to go on and make such provision as we are about to make in this measure, to hold out to them the hope of instant relief at from $8 to $12 a month, and to their widows and their dependent children, when we know that we can not make provision for properly adjusting the claims or paying the money without bankrupting the Treasury. I do not want to use an improper expression, but it seems to me we are juggling and playing with them. We had better have gone on, in my judgment, and made provision for the purpose of adjusting the 479,000 claims that are pending, rather than to have extended the law when they can not have any benefit from the measure as it stands to-day; and we all know it. My purpose has been to enter my protest against this class of legislation, against these appeals which I have referred to, that have been made elsewhere for party purposes, and so far as I may to call the attention of the tax-payers of this country to the fact that we can no longer boast of $100,000,000 surplus in the Treasury; but that when we reach the end of 1892 the Treasury will be bankrupt, or increased taxation must follow.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, it seems to me that the argument of the Senator from Maryland, if the protest which he makes may be called an argument, is either a delusion or a criticism of a committee to which he belongs. If it be true that in order to adjust properly and with proper celerity the pending claims in the Pension Office an additional force of clerks should be appointed there, then it is a criticism of the Appropriations Committee, to which he belongs.

I am aware that the Commissioner of Pensions at this session of Congress has asked for an additional force. I am aware that General Black, during his administration of the Pension Office, asked for an additional clerical force. But those recommendations went every year to the Committee on Appropriations during General Black's service and during the service of the Commissioners who have succeeded him, and if it were true that the present force in the Pension Office could not within a reasonable time adjust the claims there pending it became the duty of the Appropriations Committee to increase that force, and it became the duty of the Senator from Maryland, as a member of that Appropriations Committee, to recommend and insist upon an increase of that force. It seems to me it comes with poor grace from him, who, so far as my recollection goes, has never in the Senate, whatever he may have done in the Committee on Appropriations, suggested on the consideration of any appropriation bill that there ought to be any increase in that force. It will hardly do—

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him right there? I have been a member of the Committee on Appropriations, it is true, for some years, but since I have had the honor of a seat upon this floor I have been in a minority, and in no way responsible for the shape that legislation has taken. But, I repeat, now that the Senator's party is in a majority in every branch of the Government, no attempt has been made by the party in power to increase the appropriation for clerical force.

Mr. PLATT. I had supposed that although a Senator might be in the minority upon a committee of the Senate he did not thereby become absolved from suggesting and urging and insisting upon what he thought the proper action of that committee should be, and in a matter so vital as this, in which he says the soldiers of this country are being deluded, I should like to know if it is even an excuse to his own mind, if the duty was upon him as a member of that committee to see that an additional force was provided, to say that he was in the minority of the committee. Has the minority of that committee ever suggested on the floor of the Senate an increase of the force? Certainly not; and if it had been suggested by the majority of that committee we should have been told, I have no doubt, that the force in the Pension Office was amply sufficient to dispose of the business there.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Maryland about the condition of business in the Pension Office is inaccurate and in some respects incorrect. The principal cause of delay in the adjudication of claims pending before the Commissioner of Pensions now is caused by the failure of the applicant to furnish the necessary evidence.

It is an astounding fact, Mr. President, that twenty-five years after the war has closed there are nearly five hundred thousand unadjusted pension claims. But I repeat that the delay in their adjudication results largely from the failure on the part of the applicants to furnish the necessary evidence. It is precisely like the prosecution of a suit at law. Whenever a case is complete under existing statutes it is placed in what are known as the "completed files," and the clerical force in the office at the present time is such that every case that is placed in the completed files is now adjudicated one way or the other within sixty days.

It is idle, Mr. President, it is superfluous, for the Senator from Maryland to attempt to produce the impression on the people of this country, on the soldiers and their friends, that the Republican party has been holding out delusive and impossible promises to them; that we are paltering with them in a double sense, and giving the word of promise to the ear and breaking it to the hope. The force is ample for all ordinary purposes, and whatever difficulty there is, and whatever difficulty there will be hereafter, will not be from want of sufficient appropriations to supply the necessary clerical assistance to pass upon the merit or demerit of the applications, but upon the fact that from one reason or another, the death or absence of witnesses, the failure of memory, the want it may be of medical testimony, or the extraordinary number of special requests while Congress is in session, the claimants are unable to have their cases placed in the completed files of the office. The Senator from Maryland shakes his head. I speak by authority, and I challenge denial from any source competent to contradict me, that there is a delay or will be a delay of over sixty days in the adjudication of any one of the nearly five hundred thousand cases now pending before that bureau after the evidence shall be complete, under the requirements of existing law.

The argument of the Senator from Maryland brings up an old question. He is a patriotic man. He is not the object of censure. He is not the subject of suspicion. There has never been any imputation on him of want of patriotism, of want of fidelity to the interests of the country and the welfare of its defenders. I know that just as much as myself, or as any Senator upon this side of the Chamber, he believes that justice ought to be done to the men who saved the country from destruction, and I think he believes with me that there is no time to be just but the present.

This revives the old controversy, Mr. President. The Senator from Maryland well said that this Government is able to perform any contract into which it enters. Is the pension to the surviving soldier, to the dependent relatives of the dead soldier of the Republic, a gratuity or is it a contract? I ask the Senator from Maryland who has presented this argument to tell me whether he regards the promise to pay pensions as a gratuity or as a contract.

Mr. GORMAN. A contract, of course.

Mr. INGALLS. A contract, of course. I supposed the Senator would answer that. I have no doubt that he thinks, as I think, that the agreement to pension the surviving soldiers of the Union Army and the dependent relatives of those who fell was a contract that was as much a part of the agreement under which he enlisted as the promise to pay him the paltry compensation that he received to furnish the rations that he ate, the uniform that he wore.

Therefore, the question is, Mr. President, this being a contract, upon what ground does the Senator from Maryland claim that it should not now be paid? He says it is a contract that when the soldier enlisted the Government agreed with him as a condition-precedent that if he would serve during the war, or the period of his enlistment incurring the dangers and hazards of battle, the possibilities of death, the privations of the bivouac, the camp, and the march, that if he fell a pension should be paid to his survivor, that if he survived and was disabled compensation should be given him as an equivalent for the loss that he had suffered in his capacity for labor or earning a support for himself and his family.

If this were a charity, Mr. President, if it were a gratuity, if we were doling out these amounts year by year to the surviving veterans of the Union armies or their dependent relatives as we give a crust to a starving beggar, we might properly inquire how much we were able to pay. But if it is a contract, as the Senator from Maryland admits, the only question is not what we shall pay, but how much we owe. I am surprised that the Senator from Maryland, a just man, a patriotic man, should rise here and claim, admitting this to be a contract, that we are to be confronted by the question of not what we owe, but of what we can afford to pay. Mr. President, an honest debtor does not inquire the amount of his obligation, whether it be large or small, but he asks whether it is due and whether he has the means to pay it, and this should be the attitude of the Government of the United States towards its disabled defenders.

It seems a little strange, Mr. President, when we recollect that this is a debt, one of the obligations incurred in consequence of the war and its operations, that we should be met by the argument that possibly it may require more than the surplus in the Treasury to pay it. If I recollect aright, the obligations incurred during the progress of the war itself were frequently more than it was within the capacity of the Government to defray from its surplus revenues from day to day. Suppose these frugal patriots, these parsimonious defenders of the Treasury, had arisen during the war and said, "We will not pay these troops, we will not discharge these obligations for subsistence, and forage, and guns, and ammunition, until there is money in the Treasury derived from taxation with which to pay it," how long would the war have continued? Is that the basis on which we are to discharge this obligation?

I tell you nay, Mr. President. This is an obligation as sacred as that under which the soldiers were paid. The Senator admits it, and yet we are to postpone it. We are to dicker and haggle about it; we are to take out slate and pencil and sit down and compute how much we can spare, how much we can cut down, how much we can save from the ordinary expenses of the Government in order to meet this sacred obligation. I am sure, Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland does not wish to occupy that attitude.

I have another remark to make about that obligation, and that is this: I am in favor of the removal of the limitation in the act granting arrears of pensions, and believe that every soldier should be paid from the date of his discharge or disability, and that the survivors ought to be paid from the death of the person for whom the pension is claimed. Whether it costs $100,000,000 or $1,000,000,000,000, it was a part of the contract. It was so nominated in the bond. It is not for us, twenty-five years after the war closed, to sit down and begin to make mathematical computations how much of this debt we can afford to pay. I believe, further, that every surviving soldier of the Union armies ought to be put on the pension-rolls to-day for service, irrespective of disability. We placed upon the pension-rolls in 1871 every surviving soldier of the war of 1812, fifty-six years after the war closed. We placed upon the pension-rolls for service only, irrespective of disability, every surviving soldier of the Mexican war in 1887, between thirty-nine and forty years after the war closed. If you will shorten the interval between the close of the Mexican war and the close of the war for the Union by the same number of years that you shortened the interval between the Mexican war and the close of the war of 1812, every surviving soldier of the Union armies is entitled by precedent to be placed on the rolls to-day for service, irrespective of disability.

I voted for that measure, Mr. President, with some reluctance and some misgiving. I knew that a large part of those who had served in the Mexican war subsequently served in the Confederate army, and that we were placing upon the pension-rolls of the United States by that act large numbers of Confederate soldiers. I did it because I wanted to remove from the pathway of service pension for the surviving veterans of the Union armies every obstacle in the way of precedent, and I regret that the committee of conference did not incorporate into this bill the service principle that was in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

I am in favor of that, whether it costs, as the removal of the limitation in the act granting arrears might cost, $100,000,000 or $1,000,000,000. I know of no reason why the present generation should be called upon to pay all the expenses incurred in the suppression of the rebellion and the preservation of the Union and Constitution. I know of no reason, if justice to the surviving soldiers of the Republic requires extraordinary expenditures to be made, why the money should not be raised as it was raised to defray the expenses of carrying on the war. Why should we be confronted here on every occasion with this parsimonious cry that there is not money enough in the Treasury to-day, that there may not be to-morrow, that there possibly will not be on the day after that, to pay what may be required to perform this sacred contract and obligation of the Government?

I am not deterred, sir, by the considerations suggested by the Senator from Maryland. I do not believe that those arguments are rightly addressed to the conscience of the American people. That debt is due; it ought to be paid; and if we can not raise money enough from the tax on whisky, from the tax on tobacco, and from the tariff on sugar and other of the necessities of life to pay it we have resources, as we had resources to defray the expenses of carrying on the war. As the Senator from Maryland says, the United States Government never can make a contract that it is not capable of performing.

Upon every occasion, Mr. President, when this question arises we are confronted with the statement that a stupendous amount of money has been paid to the soldiers of the Republic. The Senator from Maryland rolls over as a sweet morsel under his tongue the avowal that more than $1,100,000,000 have already been paid on account of pensions. Very true, Mr. President, very true; and before the pension account is closed, which will be in the course, perhaps, of fifty or sixty years, it will be found that we shall have paid in pensions an amount equivalent to the entire cost of suppressing the rebellion itself. I have no doubt that when this great account is closed, when the ledger has been finally balanced, and when the last survivor of those armies has gone to his account, it will be found that we have disbursed on account of pensions alone not less than $5,000,000,000.

When that has been paid, Mr. President, an entirely inadequate equivalent will have been rendered for the services that they performed. Reduced to a three-year term, there were 2,300,000 enlistments in the armies and navies of the United States. They were paid a paltry equivalent of $15 or $16 a month.

Mr. CULLOM. Thirteen dollars a part of the time.

Mr. INGALLS. A part of the time $13. They were paid in degraded and depreciated currency. The Government gave, in addition rations costing $7.50 per month, clothing worth $42 per year, making a total expenditure for their three years' service of about $1,036. This was $1,000 less than each one of them could have earned, according to the rate then prevailing, of wages in the daily avocations of life. Aside from all that each soldier received in what the Government gave them, supposing they had all survived—the 2,300,000 men presented to this Government in the value of their own services over and above what each received not less than $1,000, or an aggregate of $2,300,000,000 in all. We have paid $1,100,000,000. So, upon the mere question of money compensation, if there were no other element in the problem, after all it has paid for pensions in the aggregate, the Government stands to-day a debtor in cash for services rendered in excess of compensation received more than $1,200,000,000.

So that side of the ledger, Mr. President, is not at all alarming to me; and when this continual onset is made, when this denunciation is made of extravagance and wastefulness and excessive compensation, I repeat that the Government has not paid 50 per cent. of what it actually owes to those men who enlisted in its armies.

There is one other consideration, Mr. President, when we come to the arithmetic of this problem. When the war broke out the assessed valuation of all the property in the country was about $1,600,000,000, real, personal, and mixed. Notwithstanding all the losses and perils and expenditures of war, notwithstanding the enfranchisement and liberation of $400,000,000 of slave property, notwithstanding all that we spent during that period in feeding and clothing the best fed and best clothed people on the face of the earth, during all that period our national wealth went on increasing more and more, day by day and year by year, until in the census of authority of 1890 the national wealth aggregated nearly $50,000,000,000.

Mr. President, for all that increment the people of this country are indebted to the soldiers of the Union army. They saved every cent of it. If it had not been for their services, for their sacrifices, for what they did and endured and suffered, there would have been no nation, and no Treasury, and no accumulations, and no increment, and no valuation. If we are going into the mathematics of it, for this increment and addition to the national resources we are indebted to the soldiers of the Union armies. The amount that we have paid up to this time for pensions since the close of the war does not amount to 2 per cent. upon the amount that they saved and we should have paid a second-rate country attorney 10 per cent. for collecting a doubtful debt. We have not paid 2 per cent., notwithstanding the gigantic summary presented by the Senator from Maryland, upon the actual amount that was saved to this country by the services of the Union armies.

Therefore, Mr. President, when the relation of the soldiers of the Union armies to the Treasury of the United States, to the property of the United States, comes to be considered in its true aspect, the people will not agree with the Senator from Maryland in his estimate that there has been an extravagant equivalent paid either in compensation or in pensions.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I of course shall not follow the Senator from Kansas in his remarks as to what this Government owes the soldiers. He has gone away beyond the declarations of his party. He is the advance guard in the payment of untold millions to these old defenders of the country, and it is not necessary to comment upon it. But I do desire to bring the Senator back to the one proposition which I made, and which he denied, that ample provision had been made for the adjustment of the claims now pending. As I understood the Senator from Kansas, he denied in toto my statement that there were 479,000 claims, nearly 500,000 claims, awaiting adjustment in the Pension Office because of the deficiency in the clerical force to adjust them, and he stated that the reason of the delay was because of insufficient evidence and what not.

Mr. President, I have read before what Mr. James Tanner, the late Commissioner of Pensions, said upon that subject. He asserted that it was impossible to adjust these cases for the want of clerical force. I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which is found in Executive Document No. 153 of this session, conveying to the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions, General Raum, in which the latter asks for an increased appropriation for clerical force. The communication of General Raum, the present Commissioner, is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., June 12, 1890.

SIR: In view of the probable enactment of the bill upon which the conference committee of the two Houses of Congress has agreed and which has passed the House of Representatives, I respectfully invite your attention to the fact that the work of this office is steadily increasing by the filing of new claims in excess of the number of claims disposed of from month to month. In my opinion the official force is performing about all the work that can be expected of it; consequently the prompt execution of this new act will require a large increase of the force of the office. I respectfully recommend that Congress be asked to authorize the employment of the following force:

Twenty principal examiners.....	$2,000
Thirty clerks, class 4.....	1,800
Fifty clerks, class 2.....	1,600
One hundred and ten clerks, class 2.....	1,400
One hundred clerks, class 1.....	1,200
Forty-five clerks, class $1,000.....	1,000
Sixty copyists.....	900
One private secretary to Commissioner.....	1,800
Two stenographers.....	1,600
Ten messengers.....	840
Fifteen assistant messengers.....	720

I also respectfully recommend that the salaries of six of the heads of divisions of this office be increased to $2,500 and six to $2,250, and that the salary of the chief clerk be increased to $2,500. These positions are of such responsibility and importance that there should be attached to them salaries much better than are now provided for by law. This, I am sure, is in the interest of the public service, and I earnestly recommend it.

I also beg to invite your attention to the importance of having a suitable printing office established in the Pension Office building. This can be done at a comparatively small expense, and would materially facilitate the transaction of business. The printing-press could be set up in a room immediately over the steam machinery which propels the elevator, and the power could be taken from that boiler.

Very respectfully,

Hon. JOHN W. NOBLE,
Secretary of the Interior.

GREEN B. RAUM, Commissioner.

Additional estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, by the Bureau of Pensions, Department of the Interior.

Salaries, Bureau of Pensions:
Twenty principal examiners, at $2,000 each.....	$40,000
Thirty clerks of class 4.....	54,000
Fifty clerks of class 2.....	80,000
One hundred and ten clerks of class 2.....	154,000
One hundred clerks of class 1.....	120,000
Forty-five clerks of class $1,000.....	45,000
Sixty copyists at $900.....	54,000
One private secretary to Commissioner.....	1,800
Two stenographers at $1,600.....	3,200
Ten messengers at $840.....	8,400
Fifteen assistant messengers, at $720.....	10,700
Total.....	$71,700

That is to say, General Raum says that now, under the present legislation, there are more claims filed each month than his force can dispose of. Then he makes a recommendation for an appropriation of $571,100 for clerks at this session. That embraces, it is true, the proposed legislation; but I assert again, notwithstanding the statement of the Senator from Kansas that the fact is that the reason why these claims have not been adjusted is because ample provision has not been made, and I assert again that the party in power, with its representative men like the Senator from Kansas making these extravagant promises to the soldiers, going beyond anything that this country has ever thought of heretofore, induces hopes that may never be realized; and that to-day, as the case stands, the one party in power in every branch of this Government can not and dare not make ample provision for the prompt and speedy adjustment of these claims, for the reason that you would bankrupt your Treasury, and you dare not go to the country and ask for increased taxation.

I agree with the Senator from Kansas, as I have with my honored friend from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], a minority member of the Pension Committee, that there is a contract between the Government and the soldier who served his country, that if he is dependent, if he has been disabled, if he can not make a livelihood, if his wife and children are dependent, no such man, or woman, or child should ever be permitted to occupy a poor-house in this country. I would make ample provision for every one of them. But what I complain of is that you have gone beyond that. You have been extravagant in the administration of the office. Men are upon the rolls who are not entitled to pensions. Other provisions have been made that are not necessary for the comfortable support of these people; and now when you have reached that point, as has been shown by the debates which I read in another place, in making an appropriation for $35,000,000 or $40,000,000 or $79,000,000, as I think, per annum, it is a delusion to the soldiers. You are doing it with full knowledge that you have not made provision to pay them the amounts that are already due since 1879, and you can not do it; you dare not do it, because you can not go before an indignant people, as there is in this country, increasing their taxation at a time when you, as well as we, have promised that the burdens shall be taken from them.

Mr. President, for both the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Minnesota I have high regard. The courage of the Senator from Kansas I have great respect for. He states the broad proposition that he would pay every man who was in the service, and pay him now, no matter at what cost. He would issue bonds to pay this so-called debt. Let that proposition go before the people of the country. Let us go before them upon that statement, and there can be but one response, in my judgment, from an already overtaxed people.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland says that he and I voted for the Senate bill, when this measure was before the Senate, upon the theory that it was as liberal as we could afford to be. The Senator may speak for himself on that subject. I stated specially when that bill was before the Senate that I would vote for that bill because it had a certain end in view; that was, taking care of the dependent poor and needy soldiers who were unable under the existing law to make a case in the Pension Office by which they could receive a pension. I said that when a more liberal proposition was presented I expected to vote for that. I stated further that I was not myself frightened at the statement made then that we were likely to face a bankrupt Treasury. I stated then that once when we needed money, when we called on these soldiers, we found a way to get it, and if we needed money to discharge the obligation we owe to these soldiers we should find a way to get it.

Mr. President, I do not propose to prolong the debate. I do not propose to go into any extended speech on the pension question. I only want to say to the Senator from Maryland that I do not think he understands public sentiment when he speaks of the indignation of the people with reference to these pensions. There is no disbursement of the Government that has met with more universal favor and approval than the payment of pensions. It is a distribution of the funds of the Government in compliance with the contract, as the Senator himself says, that we made with the soldiers. It is a general distribution in small sums that go to every portion and every part of the country, and reach the people who need these sums more than any others. It does more good than any other appropriation that the Government could make or ever has made.

Mr. President, there is not any disposition among the American people to repudiate any contract that the Government makes. Burdensome as it may be, unwise as they may think some of the contracts were, there has never been any considerable sentiment among the American people in favor of repudiation. There are thousands and tens of thousands of men in this country who do not believe that our financial affairs have been wisely managed with reference to the payment of the public debt, and criticisms sharp and bitter have been made, yet no considerable number of people anywhere have ever suggested that, unwise as the contract had been or was, there should be a repudiation of it. Much less, Mr. President, do they propose or will they repudiate this obligation on the part of the Government to the defenders of our flag.

The Senator from Kansas called attention to the fact that these men served for small pay. Depreciated money was good enough for them, money that the Government declined to receive for imports, money that the Government did not pay out to the men who held its indebtedness in the shape of bonds, and money that only brought 50 cents and some of the time 40 cents on the dollar compared with what it would if they had been paid in gold, in which the bondholder was paid. They served this country not for the money, they served it because they were a part and parcel of the nation and because they intended to sustain the honor and the integrity of the whole country.

Mr. President, the $1,100,000,000 that we pay to them is an insignificant sum compared with the great outlay that we made to accomplish what they were the principal and chief actors in accomplishing. We have paid to the bondholders of this country nearly $2.50 where we paid $1 to the soldier, and not a soldier has complained of that. It was the contract, it was "nominated in the bond;" and if, as I heard not long since, the business interests of the country would not stand this, the business interests of the country have been willing to stand the payment of $2,500,000,000 nearly of interest money to the bondholders, and I think they will stand with equal equanimity the payment of $1,100,000,000 or twice that amount if it is paid to the deserving and needy soldiers.

Mr. President, I have not any doubt myself that the great majority of men who go on the pension-rolls under this bill would have gone there under existing laws if the laws could be properly administered; but it is impossible for these men to make proof to connect their disabilities with the service. The very men who rendered the most valuable service to the Government, the very men who were the most efficient and kept out of the hospital, who have no hospital record, and find it the most difficult to make the proof which is required under the terms of existing law and which, of course, the Pension Office is bound to exact, it not having the authority to set aside the statute or to change the rule of evidence provided for by law.

This bill lets in a meritorious class of men who are needy now, who are suffering under disability incurred in the line of duty, clearly in the line of duty in many cases, but the proof does not come and can not be had; the comrade is dead, the surgeon is dead, somebody whom he might have known is dead; and we say now every man who can not thus connect his disability with the service, if needy, shall be put upon the pension-roll.

Mr. President, nobody ought to complain of that. We say in the first section, a most beneficent section, too, that the fathers and the mothers of the soldiers, who are in distress, who are dependent on other people, shall have from the Government, not charity, but that which is properly theirs. There is not a father or mother anywhere in this country whose son went into the Army and died who would not have had that son's support if the son had been living, and the Government has been derelict and long waiting to do this act of justice to that class of people, who deserve much of the Republic.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, there is one aspect of this question which has not been discussed, within my hearing at least, in this debate, about which I propose to say a word. As to what is due to the soldiers of the Union, I shall make no argument and raise no issue. I believe that the country should pay them, to the last cent, the most extravagant estimate as to the real services they rendered. I should despise myself if I stood here or elsewhere and caviled in regard to dollars and cents as the price of blood and life in the preservation of the country.

But I shall not be deterred by the fact that I was on the other side in this conflict from doing my duty to my constituents and the country in regard to what I consider monstrous abuses that have grown up under the system and about which it is time now to talk. I know, sir, that the glamour of patriotism may be invoked as an argument. I know that the splendor of military achievement, which I do not propose to depreciate, may be brought here as a defense for great abuses. I know that personal invective even and assaults upon treason and upon those who sought the life of the country may be used as a pander for monstrous outrages, that, in my opinion, have grown up in the United States under these specious pretenses. But I shall not be deterred from stating what I believe to be the truth in regard to it in the interest of the tax-payers whom I represent.

Mr. President, I know no man so narrow-minded, so bigoted, so vindictive as to refuse justice to the Union soldiers of the late war. When any man says to me that I am disposed, because I oppose them, to refuse them justice, I have but one answer: he utters a willful and deliberate falsehood. I have voted for every pension bill that I believed to be just, and I shall continue to do so, and the people whom I represent here will justify me in that action.

But, sir, I believe that this pension system is being prostituted for personal and political purposes. I have evidence of it that to my mind is beyond any sort of question. There are men in this city of Washington whose sole business in life is to originate schemes for increase of pensions and new schemes for pensions in order that they may be the recipients of large fees at the expense of the claimants. The rolls of the Pension Office show that political motives have entered into the distribution of the enormous sum that we are paying to soldiers of the last war.

It is well known that the vote of Indiana controls the election of a President of the United States, and I assert here now, from the rolls of the Pension Office itself, that pensions are being distributed in that State out of all proportion to the number of soldiers furnished by Indiana in the war. There can be but one reason for it, and that is in order to make votes for the Republican party, in order that the distribution of this enormous sum may be made accessory to political purposes. As a matter of course, it is impossible to bring that direct evidence which comes from physical knowledge and observation, but if there be any such thing as a moral conviction it can be shown from the figures. Take the last report of the Commissioner of Pensions, and what does it show? Indiana furnished in the war 195,147 soldiers; Illinois, lying side by side, furnished 253,211. Indiana has upon the pension-roll 42,553 pensioners, whilst Illinois has but 36,595.

There are two States with the same sort of population, sprung from the same stock, Western soldiers, led by the same sort of officers; and why is it that this enormous disproportion exists between these two States? Does any Senator pretend to say that the men who were led by Logan were backward in the contest and upon the battle-field? Does any man pretend to say that the soldiers of Illinois, those iron regiments that were hurled in the Western army upon the Confederacy until they pounded our veterans to pieces, were backward in the fight? Why is this enormous disproportion? Read the report of the examining committees and the evidence taken when Dudley was Commissioner of Pensions and you will find the solution. You will find that it was declared and it was acted upon, "Give pensions freely, liberally; every man that you pension is made or induced to vote the Republican ticket."

Ohio, instead of 195,147 soldiers, furnished 317,133, and Ohio has upon the pension-roll 50,081 pensioners against 42,553 for Indiana. Pennsylvania furnished 368,326 soldiers. Indiana, as I have stated, furnished 195,147, and Indiana has upon the pension-roll 42,553 and Pennsylvania but 46,361, or about 4,000 more pensioners when she furnished two and a half times as many soldiers. Massachusetts furnished 157,785 soldiers against 195,147 for Indiana, and instead of 42,553 pensioners Massachusetts has 20,272. Illinois furnished 63,070 soldiers more than Indiana, yet Indiana has on the pension-roll 5,933 more pensioners.

Mr. President, I care not what plausible excuse may be made; I say that I believe from this and other evidence—and the conviction is steadily growing upon the honest men of this country—that this Pension Bureau is being used for political purposes and that the generous feeling of the United States towards the soldiers who preserved the Government is being prostituted for partisan purposes.

Sir, I do not care to indulge in speculations as to how much money will be paid upon these pensions. I shall not be here to see the end of it, but I prophesy that the people of this country will revolt against this system as at present carried on. I know that this money is being distributed, not only among the recipients themselves, but it goes to country merchants, to petty dealers, and therefore it percolates and permeates every neighborhood in the country and is the largest campaign fund that can possibly be used. But there will come an end to it. The American people are long-suffering and patient, but their common sense and their sense of justice will at last revolt against this abuse of the most generous and holy feeling which a people can entertain towards its soldiers.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, there is one thing that might be suggested to account for the disproportion of pensioners in the State of Indiana which was not suggested by the Senator who has just taken his seat—I have heard it suggested outside of this Chamber—and that is, the fact that for four years the Democratic party administered the pension laws, during which period there was some complaint that they were prostituted for political purposes in the State of Indiana. The subsidiary facts in support of that proposition were pretty generally understood in my intercourse and conversation among public men, and the records of the country show something in regard to it. But we are nearing, I hope, the end of this debate, and I trust that this bill very soon will be a law. Hence I do not feel disposed to occupy time; but the Senate will pardon me one other suggestion which does not partake of a partisan nature, which will account for the disproportions revealed in the Senator's table.

The State of Pennsylvania unquestionably sent five more emigrants to other parts of the country where Indiana has sent one of those who fought in the war. Massachusetts has poured her vigorous population all over the country, and not only in States as far west as Illinois and Iowa, but the great States which have been so recently admitted into the Union are very largely made up of the men who fought during the war of the rebellion and preserved the country intact wherein they have made their new homes. There is no ground, as I believe, to argue—

Mr. VEST. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. Has there not been as much emigration from Illinois as from Indiana?

Mr. BLAIR. I understand so.

Mr. VEST. Very good.

Mr. BLAIR. Indiana has a comfortable, steady population, an agricultural population, and I suppose from Illinois there is a very much larger emigration, which accounts for the smaller number of pensioners which she has, notwithstanding she furnished more men for the war.

There is another corroboration of this theory which does not, in order to account for this discrepancy, necessarily lead to indulgence in acrimonious and partisan debate. I think a Senator with a disposition to account for these facts as they are, upon principles which are honorable to human nature, will be amply satisfied himself upon further examination of the subject.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, whatever may be thought of the purity of the administration of the Pension Bureau as to claims in Indiana, I do not recollect to have heard of any charges against the administration of the bureau during the presidency of Mr. Cleveland and during the official term of General Black.

I have heard in some places serious charges and have seen them in the public prints during the preceding administration, and especially under the service of Colonel Dudley; but I know nothing of them and I am not prepared myself to make any charges against any administration of the Pension Bureau upon that subject, and I do not know that political bias has had anything to do either with granting or refusing pensions to ex-soldiers of Indiana.

Whatever may have been the purpose in the granting or refusal of pensions, neither the grant nor the refusal has had the effect to align the soldiers of Indiana under any one party. The United States pensioners, residents in that State, are very equally divided as to party. The Senator from Missouri has already given the number of them, 44,553. We have not for the last eight or ten years in Indiana had 5,000 majority either way. At the last election there was 2,500 majority, and I believe once or twice in recent years four or five thousand for the Democratic State ticket. But if there had been any considerable political fraudulent issuance of pensions to affect the elections, the vote for the Republican or for the Democratic ticket would have shown it and demonstrated it. I think the pension vote of that State, if not independent, is thoroughly impartial. It follows no party as a leader. The pensioners themselves, as other citizens, make up and decide their political opinions and determine their political action as freely as if they had not been in the Army, as if they had not received the bounty of the Government.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I am not quite willing that the debate should close without at least one or two observations that I shall attempt to submit quite imperfectly. I am afraid, if nothing be said to the contrary, it may be supposed by the great body of soldiers that the Senate of the United States is favorable to the payment of all arrears of pensions.

Mr. INGALLS. We voted directly on that proposition this session, and the ayes were 9 and the noes were between 40 and 50.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator has only anticipated, perhaps, my next sentence. I was about to refer to that vote as showing that there is a difference of opinion upon that subject. Nor do I think that the Senate, either party of it or section or portion of it, is united upon the question of the equalization of bounties. I regard that as a past issue. Nor do I think that anybody will seriously undertake to make up to the soldiers the difference between the value of our paper and gold during the war.

I want to say also mildly and modestly that I think too much altogether is said about what this nation owes the soldier. I think that Union soldiers of the United States or if you choose the Confederacy, bearing in mind their relation to their people, would be very sorry to be called up and have it said to them now "How much do we owe you in dollars? for we want to pay you all." It can not be done, and they would be very sorry to have it done and very much ashamed to have the offer made to them. That is not what they want; that is not what they fought for. One of my old soldiers, a colonel, with two ribs smashed in and one of them grinding in his lungs until he died, and with a broken leg, would not take a pension for some ten or twelve years after the war because he always said he could get along without it. Finally his friends compelled him to take it.

Down here in one of the shops of this town worked a young man who came to me about five years ago and said he had all the proofs of his wounds and sufferings "salted down," and, said he, "I have been able to live this long without my pension; but when I find I lost seventy days in the last year on account of disability I am going to ask for it now, because I need it." These men are typical of great bodies of the American soldiers, great masses of them. One thing they do think we owe them, and that is that no honest, honorable soldier should be allowed to go to an almshouse. Somebody will keep him from it, perhaps the State, or the State should support him there. My State is setting an example and felt it to be her duty by maintaining two excellent hospitals of its own and a soldiers' home to supply what it thinks are deficiencies of the National Government in this matter, for it does not intend that the soldier shall suffer there, a poor or broken-down man; but this is the doctrine, the prevalent feeling of my State, I am sure, and I shall be safe in acting in accordance with it, that the needy soldier shall not suffer, but that nothing shall be wasted on a man who does not need it for his real support and comfort.

That is the only criticism I would make upon this bill, that these new payments provided for are distributed without reference to the wealth or poverty of the man who gets a pension. A man worth a hundred millions may get it and a poor man may get it all the same.

I cannot find fault with that in one respect, though I was very well satisfied with the dependent pension bill; but my friends on the other side will remember that in all the pension legislation hitherto we have never asked a man who had lost a leg or an arm and who had been very much disabled by disease whether he was rich or poor, but we paid him the pension. So this bill is not a departure from the past in that respect, but it does give to the rich as well as to the poor.

We tried to avoid that in the pension bill, justly and fairly, the injury not being one resulting directly from the service. I would say any injury traceable to the service receives now some comfort and consolation and acknowledgment, and hereafter permanent disabilities arising, no matter in what shape, will receive pensions also. If those injuries go to the extent of making a man needy or dependent upon the town or his neighbors, I am quite willing that the Government should pay him, and they ought to pay him. We all believe in, I was going to say generosity, no, in justice and fraternal feeling towards these men; but the true soldiers of the Republic do not want money thrown away upon them or anybody else; they want to have their suffering comrades aided, and then they want the glory of having fought, money or no money.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have been looking over some reports as to the number of pension cases examined and admitted and allowed in some of the years past. I sent for the volumes showing the number of cases in the different States during Commissioner Black's administration, because, if there was anything to be drawn from the censures of the Senator from Missouri as illustrating the alleged overplus of pensions in Indiana above Illinois, it was that it was done by Republicans for political reasons, and naturally there occurred to me, as to other Senators, the question of what the figures showed during the administration of Commissioner Black, who was never suspected of having Republican affiliations or inclinations.

Mr. INGALLS. Who was that?

Mr. HALE. Mr. Black, John Charles Black, as I occasionally heard him called by the Senator on my left [Mr. INGALLS].

I have the figures here in the report of 1887, in which the number of pensions admitted, the cases allowed from Illinois were 4,337 and from Indiana 5,296, and this not by a Republican Commissioner. That was in the report of 1887, as I have said. Then in the report of the previous year it is for Illinois 4,200 and for Indiana 4,604. I have not been able to follow up the other years, because I have not got them, but enough has been shown by the two volumes which I have produced to the Senate to make a complete answer to the Senator from Missouri.

Whatever reasons there may have been why more pensions should be granted to the soldiers of Indiana than to those of Illinois—and the presumption is that there were good reasons—apply to a Democratic administration equally as to a Republican administration. The number carried out here through all the different years in which pensions have been granted would more than make up the deficiency that the Senator found in the aggregate between the two States, so that the proportion of overplus Indiana had above Illinois was greater during those four years than the average could have been during the other years.

Thus falls the whole political argument which the Senator from Missouri sought to make. It is undoubtedly a fact that there are reasons contributory to this that any man can appreciate. The emigration from Illinois is greater than from Indiana. The next census returns I believe will show a very marked distinction in that regard. There are more people in the Western States and Territories from Illinois than from Indiana, and in getting Illinois' support of the soldiers of the war, that represented her in the time of war, you have got to go to more States and find them in greater numbers than in Indiana.

These, with other reasons which have been suggested here, clinched by the citations I have made from the reports, show—and in that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] himself is right—that so far as his State goes the pensions granted to her soldiers over and above those granted to the soldiers of any border or sister State are accounted for by natural conditions, and not by any attempt to make political capital out of them.

Mr. BLAIR. I will illustrate this matter of emigration in the State of Kansas, and as I was just informed by the chairman of the committee of the House of Representatives, who resides in Kansas, that State furnished 20,000 troops to the war and she has now 22,000 pensioners.

Mr. INGALLS. I will add that the State of Kansas furnished more troops during the war than she had voters when the war began.

Mr. BLAIR. Undoubtedly.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to say, so far as my State is concerned, in connection with this controversy, that the largest contribution in the way of emigration filling up the population of my State has been from Illinois, and a very large percentage of that emigration has been of ex-soldiers; and I think of the pension claims that come from my State, and of the pension claims that are allowed, which come to me from soldiers in my State, 10 per cent. at least are from soldiers in that State who came from Illinois.

Mr. DAVIS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the roll will be called.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HAWLEY (when Mr. ALLISON's name was called). A pair has been arranged between the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], both being called away by serious afflictions.

Mr. VEST (when Mr. COCKRELL's name was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. COCKRELL] is called away from the city by a great personal bereavement, and will be absent necessarily for some days. I make this announcement now, so that I shall not be compelled to make it hereafter.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when Mr. CARLISLE's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. CARLISLE] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. By consent of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE], the pair of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is transferred to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and we can both vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. GORMAN (when his name was called). I am paired for to-day with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN]. I transfer these pairs so that the Senator from North Carolina and myself can vote and the other two Senators remain paired. I vote "yea."

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE], and I vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. VOORHEES] is necessarily absent from the Chamber to-day. If present he would vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN]. That pair has been transferred to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DIXON. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. DOLPH. I inquire if there has been a pair announced with my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No pair has been announced with the colleague of the Senator.

Mr. DOLPH. My colleague is necessarily absent. I am not aware with whom he is paired, if anybody. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] to my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL]. I should not hesitate to vote on this question anyway, even in the absence of the Senator from Georgia, but in order that I may feel at full liberty to vote, I make the transfer. My colleague, if present, would vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. SQUIRE]. He is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. My colleague, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." My colleague [Mr. QUAY] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HALE. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], but, by arrangement, I transfer the pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and that enables the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], who is paired with the Senator from Colorado, and me to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. EVARTS. I wish to say that my colleague [Mr. HISCOCK] is called away from the city by illness in his family. He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (after having voted in the negative). When I voted I forgot the fact that I was paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. KENNA. Under the arrangement announced by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS. I inquire if the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] is recorded as voting?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He is not.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] that I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, who is absent. The Senator from Colorado may transfer his pair to the Senator from Vermont, and then the Senator from Colorado and I can both vote.

Mr. TELLER. Very well, that is satisfactory to me.

Mr. HARRIS. I have already voted, but I was going to withdraw my vote unless some such arrangement could be made.

Mr. TELLER. On that statement I vote. I vote "yea." The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 18; as follows:

So the report of the committee of conference was concurred in.

MARY ALICE WHITE OGDEN.

Mr. DOLPH submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6034) for the relief of Mary Alice White Ogden, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same.

J. N. DOLPH,
JOHN B. ALLEN,
S. PASCO,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
L. E. PAYSON,
E. J. TURNER,
THOS. C. McRAE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

REPRESENTATIVES OF HENRY S. FRENCH.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I offer the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 145) for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry S. French.

I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have an explanation of it.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. From the Committee on Claims the bill referred to, which passed here, was reported. There was an omission in the bill conferring power on the Court of Claims to hear the case. It is to correct the omission in accordance with the intention of the committee that I ask that the bill may be returned.

I will state to the Senator from Vermont, if he desires any further explanation, that in drawing the bill there was no provision that the question of loyalty should be considered by the court in hearing and determining the case. It was a mere omission on my part, as I drew the bill, and I ask to have it recalled for the purpose of correcting the bill in that respect.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ANN BRYAN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair) laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 5702) granting a pension to Ann Bryan.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid aside in order that I may move to have the post-office appropriation bill considered by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas. If there be no objection, the motion will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I wish to say—

Mr. PLUMB. I asked that the unfinished business might be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senate might proceed to the consideration of House bill 9856.

Mr. PLATT. It should be done by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That motion has been agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. That should be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. INGALLS. The Chair submitted that as a motion, and the effect of a vote in the affirmative is to lay aside and displace the unfinished business. I hope that it will be regarded as unanimous consent given.

Mr. HARRIS. That should be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be understood that the unfinished business has been laid aside temporarily to take up the bill indicated by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. PLATT. I take this opportunity to give notice that to-morrow morning, immediately after the morning business shall have been concluded, I will ask the Senate to take up and consider the unfinished business, which is the bill for the admission of Wyoming, and I trust, as I have been pretty patient in waiting for this opportunity, that the bill may not be objected to at that time, but that we may proceed with it until it is finished.

Mr. HALE. The Senator means not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. PLATT. Of course I have not that right. I suppose the appropriation bill will probably get out of the way this afternoon.

Mr. HALE. Following that will be the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, which will only take a short time.

Several SENATORS. Let us adjourn.

Mr. PLATT. Can not we go on with the Post-Office appropriation bill this afternoon?

Mr. HALE. If any Senator desires to move an executive session, very well.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE COX.

Mr. EVARTS. Before that is done I wish to make a statement. I have been advised from the other side of the Chamber that several Senators wish to take part in the addresses in commemoration of my late colleague, Mr. Cox, of the House of Representatives, and there are also some on this side who may desire to take part besides the Senators from our State. I am called out of the city to attend the funeral of a friend in New York, and I beg to state, therefore, that, instead of Thursday next at 4 o'clock, the commemorative addresses will be made at 3 o'clock on Tuesday of next week.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 24, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 23, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

PRINTING THE ADMINISTRATIVE BILL.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report.

The report was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby directed to have printed for the use of the House 3,000 copies of public act No. 143, entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues, approved June 10, 1890."

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the House resolution, introduced by Mr. McKIMLEY, to print 3,000 copies, for the use of the House, of public act No. 143, entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," have considered the same, and report it back with the recommendation that it be adopted.

The estimated cost of the publication is $23.

The resolution was adopted.

ELECTION BILL.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That House bill 11045, and the accompanying report (No. 2493) of the House, be reprinted.

Mr. McMILLIN. What bill is that?

Mr. ROWELL. This is a resolution for a reprint of the election bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. It embraces the minority report as well, I suppose. That ought to be included.

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, I desire to have that included.

The SPEAKER. That is understood. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was adopted.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

The SPEAKER appointed as House conferees on the fortification bill Mr. BREWER, Mr. BUTTERWORTH, and Mr. SAYERS.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE FOR CUSTOMS EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 276, an act providing for leave of absence for officers and employés in the customs service of the Government who receive per diem compensation.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all officers and employés of the customs service of the Government who receive a per diem compensation shall be entitled to receive the same leave of absence as is provided for clerks and employés in the several Executive Departments at Washington, District of Columbia, by chapter 128, section 4, of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 22, pages 563 and 564, approved March 3, A. D. 1883.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall make all rules and regulations necessary to carry the provisions of this act into effect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MILLS. Has the bill been considered by a committee?

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been considered and reported by a committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYNUM. I object.

Mr. BLAND. I will ask the gentleman who calls up this bill whether it has been reported by any committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have just stated that has been so reported. The report is at the desk.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the gentleman from Indiana will withdraw his objection to the consideration of this bill. It is a bill that ought to pass. These employés are on duty twenty-four hours out of the twenty-four. There is not a single hour assigned when they can have a leave of absence in case of accident or sickness or for any other reason. The bill passed the Senate unanimously, and it has been unanimously reported by the House committee. It is a bill which ought to pass in common justice, and I hope that our friends on this side will not object to it. I would not favor the passage of the bill if I did not believe it was right and just, and I do believe in extending equal privileges to all.

Mr. MILLS. I understand that the bill has been reported from a committee.

Mr. SPINOLA. Yes, sir; unanimously.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the objection is not withdrawn.

Mr. MILLS. I did not make objection, Mr. Speaker, I only asked whether the bill had been referred to a committee and reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] objected, and the Chair understands that the objection is not withdrawn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, this is a day assigned under the rule for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia—

Mr. GEAR. I ask the gentleman to yield to me a moment.

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] desires to present a conference report. That takes precedence.

Mr. GEAR. No, Mr. Speaker. The bill was referred to a committee of conference, but after consultation we concluded to accept the amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman must submit a conference report.

Mr. GEAR. The bill has not gone to a conference.

The SPEAKER. Then it is not the case of a conference report, and unanimous consent is required. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8296) to allow the erection of bridges across the Iowa River at Wapello, Iowa, with an amendment by the Senate.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that this bill, being already in conference, can not be taken out of it in this way. The House asked for a conference and the Senate agreed to it, and both Houses have appointed committees of conference. There is no difficulty about the case, because the conference report will be privileged when made.

WILLIAM C. SMITH.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The report was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts be, and they are hereby, instructed to provide for the payment, out of the contingent fund of the House, of the sum of $270 to William C. Smith, salary as temporary clerk in the House document-room from January 1 to May 15, 1890, at $60 per month. Your committee find that said Smith was employed by the superintendent during the time set forth in the resolution at the rate named therein, and that his services were absolutely necessary in order to place the work of that office in condition to meet the needs and demands of the members of the House, and were faithfully rendered. We therefore report the resolution favorably.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to ask the gentleman reporting the resolution when this employment began.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I do not remember the exact date, but it was in January last.

Mr. McMILLIN. When Congress was in session?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. An employment without authority of Congress?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. An employment by the superintendent of the document-room at that time, after having consulted with the Committee on Accounts as to the necessity for an increase of his force.

Mr. McMILLIN. But without any authority of Congress, although Congress was in session?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Except as he received authority from the Committee on Accounts at the suggestion of that committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. But, as the gentleman will see, the Committee on Accounts has no more authority to appoint a clerk than has any other committee, and any other committee has no more authority than an individual member, and an individual member no more authority than an outsider. So that this proceeding is wholly without authority. I think it well that if Congress is in session the authority of Congress be obtained before officers are employed.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. In answer to the gentleman from Tennessee I will say this: There was at that time a resolution pending before the Committee on Accounts for an increase of force in that office. The superintendent and the men who were working with him were required to, and did, work until 11 or 12 o'clock almost every night in the week in order to get the business of the office in order so that bills and papers called for by members of the House could be obtained. At the suggestion of the Committee on Accounts that a temporary arrangement might be made, I understand this arrangement was made; and it was absolutely essential in order to get the business of that office in good shape that when members of the House called for bills or other documents they could be obtained at once.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, it may be that additional force was needed, it may be that the service was rendered, but it is a little strange to me that the Committee on Accounts, having authority to report at any time, did not report to the House in favor of the employment of the additional force and let the House take action.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. The answer to that is this: We desired first to consider the condition of that office, to ascertain how much help was required. I have here in my possession at the present time a resolution providing for an increase of one person in that office. There was a request, submitted to us I believe by way of resolution, for a larger increase than that. But we desired to ascertain the facts; and this was a temporary arrangement which was carried out while we were making that investigation.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman says the object was to investigate and see whether the force was needed or not, yet the Committee on Accounts suggested the employment of the additional force.

Now, this in one view is a small matter; but the principle involved is a large one. It is well for this House and all connected with it to know where the appointing or employing authority is and that when the House is in session it is at least respectful to call upon the House for its opinion before any additional officer is employed.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to say a single word on this question. It was, I believe, during the Forty-fifth Congress that additional persons were employed without authority of law by the Doorkeeper of the House on the allegation that it was necessary for the purpose of transacting the business of the House. A great deal of feeling grew out of the matter, and the Doorkeeper concerned was seriously injured at the time. In order to avoid a recurrence of the unauthorized employment of persons in connection with the business of the House, there then commenced, for the first time, the reference of these questions to the Committee on Accounts, in order to prevent the very thing that has happened in the case now before us—the employment of a person without any authority of law. Under the declaration in this resolution this person has been employed from January to May without any authority, and we are called upon at this time to sanction and compensate that unlawful employment. I hold, sir, that this House and the employés of the House and all the members of the House are bound by the law and the rules of the House in matters of this sort.

Now, I do not undertake to reflect upon the Committee on Accounts as to this particular matter, except to call attention to the fact that the employment in this case was not in conformity with any existing authority vested in them or anywhere else. I complain because the principle upon which this has been done may be applied to the Clerk's Office, to the Doorkeeper's Office, to the Office of the Sergeant-at-Arms. I complain because in the past there has been notorious abuse in connection with this very matter, creating scandal all over this country. While I shall not, under the circumstances, object to the adoption of this resolution, I do hope that the attention called to the matter now will prevent any recurrence of anything of this sort. I do not object because of the statement of the gentleman from Ohio that in this particular instance the thing was done pending an investigation, although even under those circumstances it was unjustifiable. I am willing that the resolution be agreed to because it seems to be a matter of public necessity in this particular case; or it seems that is the allegation, which, however, I do not think is correct. I do trust that the Committee on Accounts will not remit us to a practice which at one time obtained and which scandalized the country, and out of which came the very reference of this authority to the Committee on Accounts for the purpose of avoiding its repetition.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment every member of the Committee on Accounts is as anxious as the gentleman from Georgia can be to inaugurate a system that shall not result in unauthorized work in connection with the business of the House. But the condition in which that office was found at the beginning of this session made it absolutely essential that certain work which was not done should be performed. To what extent it was necessary to go the committee was not informed; and the officers then recently appointed could not themselves state.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman will allow me to ask whether it was not possible to make provision from time to time as exigencies arose.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Certainly; and afterward from the date at which these services and appointments were made. In one case which I have in my charge the appointment was made on the 1st day of February, if I remember correctly, and pay will be asked during the month of January for which the help was employed.

The Committee on Accounts, I may say, are not disposed to be extravagant in the expenditures of the contingent fund of the House. We do not desire or intend to expend one dollar more than is necessary to preserve the efficiency of the various offices connected with the House by law, for the purpose of transacting the business of the House; and in this connection the committee feel thoroughly satisfied as to the propriety of the action here proposed, and unanimously report that this help was necessary and also that it had been rendered.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let me state, Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman proceeds, in response to what he has said, that he mistakes the point I make altogether. It is not the extravagance of the appropriation I am attacking, it is simply the matter that this sets a precedent by which a committee of this House, who has no more authority in the premises than any citizen of this Government, undertakes to authorize the employment of officials who are not provided for by law. If gentlemen will examine the room of the Committee on Claims they will find that scores, and I would not exaggerate if I said hundreds, of the claims pending there grow out of just such matters as this. Now, this may not be an extravagance. I do not mean to say that it is. It may be that the service is needed; I do not know anything about that; but it was not because of its extravagance or because the service was not needed that I called the attention of the House to the matter, but simply that I am opposed to the establishment of any such precedent as this.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I desire to say further that I sent a resolution to the Committee on Accounts and could not get even a report from it; and yet in this case the committee seems to have acted upon its own responsibility without the authority of the House.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I ask a vote on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BOOTHMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES H. CLARK.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. We may as well close up all of these now, and I have another report to submit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives to Charles H. Clark the sum of $50, being the amount due him for services rendered as temporary clerk in the document-room of the House of Representatives from January 6, 1890, to February 1, 1890.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BOOTHMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RETURN OF A BILL FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution for immediate action.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 5702) granting a pension to Ann Bryan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LANE. The beneficiary named in the bill is dead, and the President suggests that this is the only thing to do, to have it recalled.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 8831) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans., and not over 10 miles above the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railway bridge at Kansas City, Mo.," approved March 1, 1889.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriation for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes; in which concurrence was requested.

Also, that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 4047) supplemental to the act of Congress passed in March, 1887, entitled "An act amending an act entitled 'An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes,' approved March 22, 1882;" in which concurrence was requested.

Also, that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 209) to authorize the Secretary of War to cause to be mustered William P. Atwell, and asked a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. VEST, and Mr. COCKRELL managers on the part of the Senate.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MCCORMICK, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. PICKLER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. WIKK, indefinitely.

To Mr. YARDLEY, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. SHIVELY, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. ROCKWELL, indefinitely.

Mr. CLUNIE. I desire on behalf of my colleague [Mr. BIGGS], who was called home on account of sickness in his family, to ask that indefinite leave of absence be granted him.

There was no objection.

BALTIMORE AND POTOMAC RAILROAD, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the District business. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8243) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in the District of Columbia."

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Pending that, I move that all general debate upon this bill be limited to one hour and ten minutes.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I hope that will not be agreed to. I think any one who will go down and look over the ground that the Pennsylvania Railroad is claiming here, and see the effect it is going to have upon this capital, will want a full discussion before consenting that this matter shall become a law.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The motion of Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania, was rejected.

The motion of Mr. GROUT was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DUNNELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for consideration of the bill (H. R. 8243) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in the District of Columbia."

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the Chair will refer to the RECORD, on page 6276, recording the conclusion of the proceedings when this bill was last before the committee, he will find that I had the floor and was entitled to ten minutes of unexpired time. My parliamentary inquiry is whether, as general debate has not been closed, I am not entitled to the floor.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, before the inquiry of the gentleman from Kansas is answered, I desire to say that I presume it will be right that there should be an even division of time allotted to each side in this general debate. The friends of the bill occupied one hour, those in opposition occupied an hour and fifty minutes, and ten minutes of their second hour yet remains. I believe that it will be right to allow the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] his remaining ten minutes, to be followed by one hour allotted to the friends of the measure.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, that is a very surprising proposition. The gentleman has just made a motion in the House to close general debate, which motion the House voted down. Now the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] seems to assume that the House agreed to his proposition, and upon that assumption he is talking of dividing time. The House has just refused to close debate, and under that action the committee certainly ought to be permitted to go on so far as it shall see best, and irrespective of what time may have been consumed by the respective sides two weeks ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] for the ten minutes remaining to him, and will endeavor to divide the time equally between the friends and opponents of the bill.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Will the Chair be kind enough to state the question that is before the committee? There is so much disorder that I have been unable to hear.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate is not yet closed on the pending bill, and when the committee rose two weeks ago there were ten minutes remaining, to which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] is entitled.

Mr. MCCREARY. We on this side have heard the number of the bill, but we have not heard the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, when I was about taking the floor two weeks ago to discuss this measure, one of the best lawyers in the House, in whose judgment I have great confidence, suggested to me that this bill would enable the Pennsylvania Company to take about any squares of ground that it saw fit adjacent to the Mall, and I made that statement in my remarks. Afterward on looking at the restrictions of the bill I inclined to the opinion that perhaps I had said a little more than I should have said on that particular point, because the language of the act is, that the company may enter such squares with its turn-outs as shall be approved by the said commissioners, abutting on the line of said railroad on Maryland avenue and Virginia avenue. There were perhaps three or four squares that I named which were not upon Maryland or Virginia avenues, and in justice to the friends of the bill, as well as in justice to myself, I wish to correct the statement to that extent.

But if any one will read the bill he will see that in the first section it conveys to the company, subject to the approval of the commissioners, the right of entrance to sixteen squares in that portion of the city where the main tracks are now laid, and further, that it legalizes and confirms the title of the company to the property which it is now occupying with and adjacent to those tracks. He would ascertain also that by section 2 there is conferred to the company the same right of entry into a large number of squares, and especially by section 3. I have not counted up the different blocks as to which this company, were this bill to become a law, would have the right of entrance, but I find that the first section opens up sixteen squares, and the second might open forty or more, and I would not be surprised if an actual count would show that the company, as the bill stands, might enter sixty blocks, and enter and condemn not less than forty squares in the city.

During the last two weeks I have looked at an original map of the city for the purpose of ascertaining why three different blocks of ground were designated in the bill by the same number. There are some two or three duplicates of other blocks designated in the same manner. Ordinarily, where a city plat is laid out, and where the blocks are numbered, it is done for the purpose of enabling identification of a particular block in the transfer of titles. Certainly there was no lack of figures when the blocks in this city were numbered. And I find the explanation of what is on its face a suspicious circumstance, namely, why so many blocks named in this bill carry the same number, with some modifications as "north," "west," or "south," in the fact that the company is now occupying ground which was originally a part of what is known on the plats as the Garfield Park. And it seems to me that a wise thing for this committee to do would be to refer the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia in order that that committee should give to the House more precise and accurate information than has yet been furnished; in order that it might give us maps showing the original plat of the city, and maps of the present city, and the particular tracks that shall be opened to the company by this bill.

I have some other objections in addition to those just suggested. The first is that in the first section there is a phrase which before attracted some attention and which is not quite explicable to many of us, namely, in line 21:

And the use and maintenance of its shops, stations, and other structures now erected thereon is hereby legalized and confirmed.

I say that in my judgment the committee ought to strike out that clause. It also shows the reason why we should be put in possession of the information of which I have just spoken, because there evidently was in the mind of the Pennsylvania Railroad attorney—and by that I mean no member of the House at all, because the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] told us that he did not draw the bill—there was in the mind of the attorney in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company who drew this bill a question as to whether the company now has legal title to the several tracts of land designated in its first section or some of them, and a desire to heal every defect of title.

I am utterly opposed to enacting this clause, to legalizing by Congress and confirming by Congress to that company under a blanket provision all the ground designated in this first section. And I submit that this committee ought not to pass any such proposition without knowing precisely what it is doing, and that under this bill it can not know, and none of us do know, exactly what tracts of ground are included or exactly what legal defects or titles will be cured or conveyed by this section.

There is another strong objection which I have to the bill, and that is—

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman allow me just a moment?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would rather proceed and conclude what I have to say on this point, and then afterwards I will yield to the gentleman.

There is another objection which to my mind is a very strong one, namely, that provision of the second section which delegates the power of Congress, and a power which Congress alone holds and can wield, to the District commissioners, which vests in three men the power to-day, next year, or twenty years hence to permit this company to enter those squares abutting on Maryland and Virginia avenues, and those other squares in the southwestern portion of the city named in the bill, and to condemn that property and to lay and maintain side-tracks or structures in such streets as they may choose.

Mr. McKINLEY. Are these squares private property?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes, sir; they are private property, and the power proposed to be conferred is simply the right of entrance and of condemnation; but that condemnation should be made by a court, and not by the District commissioners, and it should be limited as to area, and not sweeping. But the specific point to which I am speaking is this: That a street railway company, or, in fact, any other company, can not enter upon any private property except by confirmation of the courts. It can not occupy any street, except Congress so authorize. And for us to-day to give to the commissioners the power to say to the Pennsylvania Company at any future time, "You may enter any street or any square that you require," is an abdication of our power which ought not to be made.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I believe I am entitled to control the time of the friends of this measure, and I will give to the gentleman from Georgia such time as—

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. A point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. But I have the floor.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] has consumed the remainder of an hour in opposition to the bill, and therefore, as the Chairman remarked a little while ago that there should be an equal distribution of the time between the friends and the opponents of this measure—

The CHAIRMAN. That will be done.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I claim the floor now in the interest of the measure.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know how the gentleman from Pennsylvania will get the floor after I have been recognized.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I make the point of order that the gentleman has already occupied the floor on this measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, my attention was casually called on the reading of this bill on the last District day to some of its terms, and I thought certain criticisms in relation to it were proper, and that the bill ought to be amended. I recognize the fact that it is the duty of Congress in this connection to give such legislation as is necessary to this corporation, engaged in the transportation of freight through this city over its lines. I conceive that no gentleman would be willing to take a position that this great artery of commerce should be dammed up in this city and the country be denied the use of this avenue of trade.

I felt that each gentleman of this House would be bound to give respectful consideration to this situation, and at the same time that the public and other parties should be guarded against exactions or anything unreasonable in the way of legislation on the part of this company.

I have given some little attention to it with the view of directing at least my own conduct in relation to it.

In the first section of the bill it will be remembered that in the discussion two weeks ago the following language was objected to by myself and others:

And the use and maintenance of its shops, stations, and other structures now erected thereon is hereby legalized and confirmed.

We were told this language related to the ground whereon the freight depot of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad is located. The confirmation of that title by Congress suggested the fact that there was some defect, and this language was intended to bind the Government of the United States to make perfect what was defective, without any reason apparent upon the record in the debate. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON], in charge of this measure, promptly announced that he was willing that a correction should be made here by striking out this provision, which my friend from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] says he has an amendment to accomplish. The vice-president of the road, Mr. Green, came to my seat, I think it was on Saturday, having noticed the proceedings of what occurred in the discussion, in my inquiries and those of others, to make some observations and suggestions about the bill. I asked why it was that this language was placed in the bill in relation to the freight depot if the property belonged to the company and they had a perfect title to it. The answer was that they had been previously on other grounds near a church and that they were compelled to pay annually a certain sum of money to the church on account of its being a nuisance, and so they moved their freight depot there and they thought that they might be threatened hereafter by a similar complaint where they are now by reason of newcomers settling in that neighborhood. If that be true, Mr. Chairman, I think this part of the bill ought to be stricken out. However good the title may be, I do not believe that it is the duty of Congress to come in and guard this great corporation, which is amply able to take care of itself in a matter of this sort, against litigation on the part of persons in the neighborhood. But if the language is to be stricken out as suggested by the gentleman from Missouri, then I am content with that portion of it.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I would like to know if it is the intention of the friends of this bill to propose to strike out that provision of it to which the gentleman has called attention and which was criticised at the last session.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand from the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] that it is their purpose—

Mr. MCKINLEY. I wish to ask whether it is proposed by the friends of this bill to strike out this feature.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. What feature does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. BLOUNT. The first section.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. That is the purpose of the friends of the bill, and I have an amendment prepared which I will offer as soon as I get the opportunity.

Mr. BLOUNT. If such an amendment should be agreed to, it disposes of so much of my criticism. I am speaking neither as a friend nor as an enemy of the bill, but am simply trying to find out what may be the proper course for me to take in my vote.

It seems to me, further, that after the provision just referred to is stricken out, there should be an amendment in regard to the company's right of way over the tracks in substantially this language: "It is hereby authorized, but Congress may at any time revoke said authority."

The railroad company has already had granted to it by the commissioners of the District of Columbia a right of way over certain streets, revocable at the pleasure of the commissioners. It appears to have been determined, upon a legal investigation in the courts, that the commissioners had no authority to grant such right of way. Now, if the railroad company were content with the grant which they thus had from the commissioners, it appears to me we should not go beyond that, but should simply ratify or confirm the right of way which the commissioners undertook to grant, reserving to Congress the right at any time to revoke such authority.

The question being determined in this way in regard to the freight depot and the right of way into it and the right of way to lots connected with it now occupied under the authority of the District commissioners, we shall have escaped the confirmation of any title, while we shall have granted to the company the right to use those streets, a right which they are about to lose by reason of a mistaken supposition that the commissioners of the District had authority to grant them permission in that regard—a supposition which the courts have found to be unwarranted. It seems to me proper not to block the business of this company which is thus threatened by this mistake in reference to the authority of the District commissioners.

The second section provides—

That it shall be the duty of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and they are hereby authorized and empowered, whenever they consider it a public benefit, to grant the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company permission to lay, maintain, and use side-tracks and sidings from the main line or lines of said railroad into any real estate in the said city abutting on the streets or avenues on which such line of such company is or may be situated, which may be used or occupied for manufacturing, commercial, or other business purposes by parties desiring the use of such facilities. Such side-tracks or sidings shall be laid and maintained under the direction of said commissioners, and in such manner as shall least obstruct the use of the public streets for ordinary purposes.

It seems to me this section should embrace a provision to the effect that wherever these tracks of the company go alongside of private property, the owners of which are damaged by reason of the noise, smoke, or other incidents connected with the passage of trains, nothing in this act shall be construed to relieve the company from liability for such damage. I understand from my friend from Missouri that this will be acceptable to the committee.

Mr. HEARD. Let the question be left to the courts.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is much better to put in here a distinct provision, so that no doubt may arise in this regard.

Mr. HEARD. If the gentleman will yield a moment I will say that I do not understand it is the design of the committee or the friends of the bill on this floor to ask that the company have any exemption from any liability now existing. If that does not appear in the language of the bill, let it be made clear. I am sure there can be no objection to a provision of that kind.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then, Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen are willing to accept a declaration of that sort in the shape of a proviso I shall be content in that matter.

There is one further observation I wish to submit in connection with this section and the section following, which I will read:

SEC. 3. That the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company is hereby authorized and empowered to acquire, subject to the approval of said commissioners, for the purposes of its business, any one or more of the squares of ground in the city of Washington south of the line of the said railroad and north of L street and north of the Eastern Branch and east of Thirteenth street southeast, and any one or more squares as shall be approved by the said commissioners abutting on the line of said railroad on Maryland and Virginia avenues, and to extend, maintain, and use tracks from convenient points on the line of said railroad into the said property, and to cross such streets as may be necessary for that purpose, and to construct thereon such facilities as may be necessary for its business.

Now, it was apprehended by some members, myself among the number, that there was such uncertainty in this language that the railroad company might buy a great number of lots for other than railroad purposes, going into sections of the city where they would have no justification for going.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. BLOUNT. I will in a few minutes. It was said by some gentlemen that under the authority of the bill the company might occupy the ground where the Observatory is or ground contiguous thereto; might come up near the Capitol, with the smoke and noise attending the movement of trains. In a conversation with the vice-president of the road, Mr. Green, I suggested to him that this difficulty existed in my own mind and in the minds of other members, and that there was a desire on our part that the area which the company might occupy and which was necessary to be occupied in connection with their transportation should be restricted to definite limits defined on a map, so that there could be no misunderstanding in relation to the matter.

This morning the map came, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] has had it placed in front of the Reporter's desk for the information of members. It shows the lots which the company ask to be allowed to have condemned. From this map it appears that they are confined to lots south of Virginia and Maryland avenues and east of Four-and-a-half street except as to two squares down by the river which are specified and shown on the map. Therefore, any vague apprehensions that may have been entertained in that regard are made specific by this map, and, as I understand from the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] in charge of this bill proposes to offer an amendment confining the provisions of the bill, so far as the purchase of lots is concerned, to the streets and squares indicated on the map. Therefore, there is no danger of any obstruction of the railroad with its depots and buildings into parts of the city where it would be objectionable.

Now, Mr. Chairman, for one, I can not see any objection to the bill with these amendments. We have our duty to discharge as members of the Congress of the United States, to whom this matter is presented as an object for legislation. We are compelled as legislators to take notice of the fact that this road is in the city, and that its transportation has been embarrassed and is embarrassed now by reason of the fact that it has not space enough to handle its freight. I believe, sir, that we should give this company an opportunity to purchase land for the purpose of obtaining increased facilities for its freight and passenger traffic; and if hereafter we find freight blockaded in this city and transportation obstructed by reason of any negligence on the part of this railroad company, let us then exercise the rights that we have over the subject-matter and see to it that the like does not occur again. They have asked the privilege given in this bill and intelligent persons inform me that it is reasonable, and it being reasonable I am willing to agree to it. If, however, the company shall fail to meet the public necessities, then let us legislate in a way to accomplish that end. Furthermore, it is to be remembered that in the last clause of this bill there is a provision by which Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act. Therefore, if this railroad company shall abuse the privileges which we hereby grant, or shall transcend the scope of the power granted by this bill, we shall have the whole subject-matter within our own control.

So far as the Baltimore and Potomac depot is concerned there is no claim that that property belongs to the railroad company. Their presence there is simply by permission. It is thought by some that we had better require that depot to be removed. Possibly that may be the case. It is thought by others that the depot is now at the most convenient point for the public, and the public have a right to have their convenience consulted. But in any case that is a separate matter from this bill, and I have indulged in any observations in relation to it only because some gentlemen seemed to think that if we were legislating in regard to the Baltimore and Potomac road at all we ought to deal with this question of the location of the depot.

I am not prepared to say whether the present location is the most convenient one, or whether the depot ought not to be removed to some other point, but I am not willing to destroy this bill in order to accomplish that purpose, and it seems to me that, as this is a matter that may be determined at any time, as the propositions contained in this bill do not impinge upon that question at all, and as the question of where the depot should be located is a doubtful one, we had better go forward and dispose of this pending matter, provided we are able to bring the committee to the acceptance of the amendments which I have suggested.

Mr. Chairman, I will not occupy time in reading a letter which I have received from Mr. Green, the vice-president of this road, but, as it may at some future time be of interest to see just what is the present attitude of the railroad company as stated by its vice-president, I think it proper to print the letter as a part of my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, I have, in a very brief way, without claiming any knowledge except such as I have gathered from the discussion, submitted my own views in relation to this matter, and if these amendments are accepted I shall give this measure my support. My friend from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] informs me that there are other amendments designed to protect the public against any bad consequences which might possibly arise from the operation of this bill, and of course we shall have an opportunity later to know what those amendments are.

There is one other observation which I wish to indulge in and then I shall be through. The exactions of corporations of all sorts meet with no sympathy from me. Their duty to the public in regard to the transportation of persons and property is a matter in which we are all concerned. The privileges and facilities that they require in order to enable them to perform those duties to the public are matters about which we are called upon to legislate. Our own duty to the public requires that we shall give to these railroad corporations all the privileges that are really needed to enable them to accomplish the objects for which they exist, and finding myself, as a humble member upon this floor, charged with the consideration of a subject of this character, I should feel that I were unworthy of a place here if I hesitated to support this measure in the interest of the public because it happened also to relate to a railroad corporation.

Mr. McCLAMMY. I will ask the gentleman to state whether in his opinion—and I know he has studied the subject closely and intelligently—if this bill is amended as suggested by him and the bill is passed, we shall be giving this company any more or greater privileges than are granted to similar corporations in almost every city throughout the country.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think not. It is simply a grant of the privilege of condemning property with the view of facilitating the transaction of the business of the company and promoting the public convenience.

Mr. McCLAMMY. Giving the privilege of condemning property and paying for it?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes.

The letter is as follows:

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD COMPANY,
OFFICE OF THE THIRD VICE-PRESIDENT,
Philadelphia, June 20, 1890.

MY DEAR SIR: I was very glad to have an opportunity for a frank and full talk with you in regard to the Atkinson bill, giving the Baltimore and Potomac Company the right to condemn property for railway purposes in Washington, and also the power to the commissioners to grant permits for sidings into private establishments located directly on the line of the road.

In accordance with the suggestion made by yourself and others of our friends, I have had prepared a map showing the area within which this power of condemnation would be exercised, and have also restricted the number of blocks abutting on the road so as to remove any ground for the charge that, under this bill, we would have the power of acquiring an undue amount of property in Washington. Of course it is hardly necessary for me to say that a railroad does not spend money unnecessarily any more than a private individual does, and that the Baltimore and Potomac Company will not buy property unless it is absolutely needed to take care of the freight business that is destined to and through Washington.

I have asked Mr. Barclay, who will be in Washington, to talk this matter over thoroughly with Mr. ATKINSON and with Mr. HEARD, who, as Mr. ATKINSON has been called away by a sudden death in his family, may have charge of the bill on the floor of the House on Monday, and have asked him to confer with you and advise fully in regard to the matter. I hope, with the suggested amendments, that you will find the bill in such a shape that it can have your cordial support. I want to say most emphatically that there is not a line in the bill which is intended to give the Baltimore and Potomac road any power which does not fully appear on the face of the bill, and that it is not intended that one foot of Government property of any kind should be used by the Baltimore and Potomac Company except such as it has now full authority under existing acts of Congress to use.

I would like simply to add that the charge made on the floor of the House that we were using certain reservations, some five in number, is utterly without foundation; that there are no reservations except such as were laid out by the General Government at the time the city of Washington was founded, and that the so-called reservations to which reference was made are simply spaces formed by the junctions of streets, and that along these streets we have the full right, of course, to lay our track under the act of Congress of 1873. As the charge may be made that we are unlawfully occupying public property, I would like you to know the facts of the case, and know that it has no foundation at all, but that as far as the charge is made, it relates simply to these junctions of streets which we must cross in getting from the tunnel to the Long Bridge and in laying down the sidings under the permits granted by the commissioners of the District.

Very truly yours,

JNO. P. GREEN, Vice-President.

HON. JAMES H. BLOUNT,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have repeatedly stated that the sole purpose of this bill was to secure facilities for the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company so that it might be the better able to transact the business for which it was incorporated. The bill has been subjected to considerable criticism, and in order to meet that criticism I now desire to offer certain amendments which I think will make the provisions of the bill satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DUNNELL). The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that general debate has not been closed. The bill is still open to general debate.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I will offer these amendments in my own time, and ask that they may be read.

The CHAIRMAN. They may be read for information, but the gentleman has already consumed his time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I do not understand that these are for consideration, but that they are simply read for information, not as pending amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The general debate has not yet been concluded, and of course amendments can not be offered for consideration. They can be read, and they will be read in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk proceeded to read, as follows:

On page 2, line 21, commencing after the word "seven"—

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, before that I desire to ask for information—we could not hear distinctly the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania—but I wish to know if these are the amendments which the committee in part propose to offer, or if these are the amendments proposed by the gentleman in charge of the bill?

Mr. GROUT. They are not the committee amendments.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I stated that they were offered by the friends of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 21, commencing after the word "seven," strike out down to and including the word "confirm," in line 23, as follows:
"And the use and maintenance of its shops, stations, and other structures now erected thereon is hereby legalized and confirmed."

On page 3, lines 8 and 9, after the word "situated," insert "east of Four-and-a-half street and south of Virginia avenue and Maryland avenue, and south of D street and east of Fourth street;" so that it will read:

"The line of said company is or may be situated east of Four-and-a-half street and south of Virginia avenue and Maryland avenue, and south of D street and east of Fourth street, which may be used or occupied for manufacturing, commercial, or other business purposes, etc."

On page 4, at the end of line 27, add "or shall be construed as making a grant or confirmation to the said company of any land now the property of the United States."

Mr. HEARD. Will my colleague yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to offer another amendment in the same line and for the same purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate upon the bill has not been closed by order of the House.

Mr. HEARD. I simply desire to ask to have this read for information, to be offered at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be offered later on.

Mr. HEARD. I offer it in the same line and for the same purpose as the amendment just read by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It relates to the bridging of the tracks, which I referred to in my speech on a former occasion, or providing subways, with a view that persons who have occasion to cross the tracks may be protected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as section 4:

"The company shall, under direction of the District commissioners and subject to their approval, construct subways for the passage of vehicles and passengers under the railroad tracks on Fourth street and on Eleventh street."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Why not make the railroad company itself lay the subway?

Mr. HEARD. They do so under this provision.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was not recognized for that purpose. The Chair has pledged itself to the House to divide the time equally between the friends and opponents of the bill.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. The chairman of the committee yielded to me to take charge of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that the gentleman, as chairman of the committee, can assign the time in the general debate.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. First of all we have occupied an hour in favor of the bill; two hours were then occupied in opposition, and the Chairman has assured me that he will see that the time is equally divided.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Missouri occupied two hours and sixteen minutes in favor of the bill, and two hours have been occupied in opposition; and this morning thirty minutes, practically in favor of the bill, by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I insist there is an error in the record of the Chairman, because we occupied but a single hour, the gentleman from Missouri and myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri occupied an hour and sixteen minutes—sixteen minutes of the time that was not previously occupied—and afterwards, in his own right, he occupied an hour. The Chair is not in error.

Mr. HEARD. I do not pretend to contest the correctness of the time with the Chair, though I did not think I had occupied more than thirty minutes altogether. But I hope my colleague from Pennsylvania will not be captious, but leave the time to be divided by the Chair equitably between the friends and opponents of the measure. So long as this course is adopted, and the Chair equitably divides the time, there can be no cause for complaint. I hope there will be no restriction, therefore, upon the pleasure of the Chair in that regard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to divide the time equally. Several gentlemen have asked recognition. The gentleman from Maine is recognized.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I can say, as my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has said, that I do not discuss this measure with any hostility to this railroad or to any other railroad. I have never been, either in this House or outside of it, one of those men who has what may properly be called "railroadphobia," and who are as ready to fight a railroad at any time as a mad bull is a red cloth shaken in his face. On the contrary, I have as much appreciation, I think, as even the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] himself of the great benefits the railroads have rendered to this country. At the same time, I can not shut my eyes, and I do not believe he can, to the fact that the railroads, quite as much as individuals, are very willing to grasp all they can and hold on to all they can grasp.

Now, taking the case that is before this House: The history, so far as I can find it, is that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company came here and begged of this body the privilege of crossing the Mall, making an agreement that they would run no engines across there, but that they would let their cars run across by their impetus. That agreement has not only been violated, sir, but, at the same time, the friends of that railroad company say absolutely that they have no idea of getting out of the possession there, and that they will contest the right of the Government whenever it attempts to remove them back across the Mall.

Now, how do they come in here? Why, they come into this House as criminals, indicted for assuming privileges that do not belong to them, that have not belonged to them, and they ask the House to relieve them from the position of criminals and to confirm them in rights which will in my judgment spoil or in a large degree injure the south part of Washington and place this Capitol in a very unpleasant position. Now, one of the friends of the company, a gentleman for whom I have a great deal of respect and who is a very strong friend of the railroad and of this bill, invited me to go down there and see the ground which they wish to take and to look at the site, and I was assured that if I did so I would be convinced that this bill was all right. I have simply to say that if other men have such eyes as I have and see things as I do I would advise the friends of the railroad to take nobody else down there to look and see what they want. Why, the first proposition this gentleman made to me was, "This ground is all covered with water and is not fit for settlement." I could not quite understand why a railroad company wanted grounds that were continually covered with water to run its tracks over and do business on. The next proposition made to me was that it is a "malarial district, so much so that a white man could not live there." Why the railroad wants to place its employes down there, in a place so malarial that a white man can not live there, and kill them off in that way, is another proposition that my feeble mind was entirely unable to comprehend.

Mr. CONNELL. At $1.50 a day.

Mr. MILLIKEN. At $1.50 a day, as suggested by the gentleman. The railroad proposes first to take these sidings named in this bill. It proposes to have the power, and it will get it from this bill, to condemn a hundred acres of land right at the south of us. The northern part of it will come within 300 yards of this Capitol.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not yield now. They may put their machine-shops there if they please, they may envelop this Capitol in a great volume of smoke from the beginning of summer to the end of it. You have got the other railroad here on the other side, so that you will have your Capitol situated between two malarial rivers, as our ancestors unfortunately placed it, on the east and west, and between the smoke of two railroads on the north and south, and will make it a place not fit for a white man to live in.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman sees on the map the red block which indicates the territory where they ask the privilege of being allowed to go and condemn lots. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] informs me that the chairman of the committee proposes to restrict this bill to that area, and the gentleman can not claim that they will then be in a position to get 100 acres.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What I have to say is simply this: that the bill as at present worded does not restrict them to that area. And I have further to say that the information I get from the friends of the railroad is exactly what I state to the House. Now, in order to get this bill passed through this House and through Congress it is just as simple to restrict their condemnatory clause to the area that is on that map, it is just as innocent a thing as it was when they begged the right to cross the Mall. They have crossed the Mall, they are running their engines across the Mall, and neither you nor I can get them off the Mall. When they have got that one inch they will take the other ell, and it is a question simply whether the city of Washington will be put entirely in the grasp of this railroad and whether South Washington and the rest of the city shall be as much separated from each other as if the Missouri River ran between them. Now, what do they propose to do? Do they propose to put their railroad under ground, as they could easily do, and stop the deaths that occur there already so frequently? Not at all.

Why, the whole length across there is gridironed with railroads. You can not get from here to South Washington to-day without danger unless you are very careful to look both ways, and there is not a place where you can safely cross from here to South Washington or where you dare send a child across without having somebody to take care of her while she is crossing the track; there is not one place from the point where the railroad comes out of the tunnel to where it goes across the Long Bridge. Now, it seems to me a little amusing that gentlemen should say that Washington ought to give up this property because it is covered with water. Who makes the floods that have caused the covering of this territory down there with water? Who has caused the avenue to be covered with water, as certain gentlemen allege that it has been covered, though it has not been so covered when I have been here? Why, these very railroads that come here, that run over the Long Bridge and dam up the water.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The Long Bridge was there before the railroads were there.

Mr. HEARD. The bridge was built by the Government.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But the railroads maintain it. It is maintained by the railroads.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. They may use it, but the Long Bridge is there as a fixed fact, and was there long before the tracks of this railroad were laid.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The land was here and the hills were here undoubtedly, and the river was here, even before the gentleman was; and a good many nuisances existed here before the railroads came and long before the gentleman and I came to Congress, but that is no reason why we should help to maintain those nuisances now.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I want to relate to the gentleman at some time what I experienced before the railroad came into the city of Washington, and hundreds and hundreds of people beside myself experienced the same thing.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman may discount as much as he pleases upon the improved condition of getting in and out of Washington on account of railroads. That applies to every city or every town in this country where railroads exist, but it is no reason at all why a railroad should be allowed to grasp the whole of this city; and as I said in my remarks the other day, by this bill they can run over the entire city.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman, not for the sake of interrupting him, whether he knows of any city in this country which declines to give a railroad facilities to come into or through it. Is there any city that he knows of—Baltimore, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago—which has not given facilities not only for the transaction of freight business, but also for passenger business, to lines coming to it or going through it?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will answer the gentleman by saying that in his own city this railroad had to buy the streets, and it has had to run its road upon an elevated track and above the street so that it may come in.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is very much mistaken, and I want to take this opportunity to correct him. The city of Philadelphia gave the right to close the streets for this railroad over ten blocks, from Broad street to the Schuylkill River, and the railroad itself expended three or four million dollars on the elevated railroad to bring its road into the heart of Philadelphia. The city council, standing in the same place as the commissioners of this District, gave these facilities to the Pennsylvania road.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not yield to the gentleman for a speech.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I will give you a chance.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me say to the gentleman that the Pennsylvania Railroad was obliged to build an elevated railroad that comes up almost over the tops of the buildings there where the people can go and can drive without being endangered and without being obstructed. Now, if this railroad will build such a way across where they come out of the tunnel as the citizens of Philadelphia did, that they may have voted their money there, that they should make it there, and that they did make it there, then I am ready to vote in favor of the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the Pennsylvania Railroad build that elevated railroad so as to suit the elevation of their road and tracks west of the Schuylkill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And to suit the people of Philadelphia, who would not allow them to lay it on the ground.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Now, the question before the House is whether it shall be allowed to get land for a depot for freight purposes and sidings to accommodate the business of the people.

Mr. MILLIKEN. There is a tunnel that they can come under the ground a long distance.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. And the gentleman from Missouri informs me that there are eighty side-tracks—

Mr. MILLIKEN. I hope the gentleman will not take all my time. Now, I have simply to repeat, for I did not get up here to make a speech, that gentlemen when they vote on this question will vote with their eyes open and know that if this bill passes and shall become a law that the whole place from where the railroad comes out of the tunnel across this Mall down to the Long Bridge will be covered with railroad tracks, so that it will not be possible to pass without danger.

I have to say further, that the railroad comes in here and asks for this great franchise, worth millions of dollars to them, a franchise which I believe if granted this Government could not buy back to-morrow for $10,000,000, and even asking all this they do not propose, neither will they consent to do anything for the convenience of the city. They do not consent to put their railroad under ground from the Long Bridge through that portion of the city where they could do it. That question has been put to them, and they have answered that they can not do it. They say they do not propose to take their depot across the Mall, back where it may be taken, and where it was intended their engines should stop. They do not propose to do anything except to grasp this territory, to grasp this franchise, and make the best use of it they can. Why, Mr. Chairman, we are now paying hundreds of thousands of dollars in this city for land on which to build public buildings, and if such public buildings shall be built within the next twenty-five years as the public service demands, you will have to spend millions of dollars here for land on which to build your public buildings; yet you propose to give away to this railroad company, which is able to pay and which has paid nothing for getting into this city of Washington a franchise worth all these millions, and at the same time put your hand into the public Treasury and take out your own money and buy land on which to put your public buildings.

Mr. McCLAMMY. Can you state that any Government land is granted to the company by this bill?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCLAMMY. Will you state specifically where it is, and I will state that we will accept an amendment so as to grant no Government lands to this company.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Part of Garfield Park is given. That is the smallest objection I have to make. You grant a franchise which will give them control of all the land here at the south, and bring it close up to this Capitol itself. Why, the gentleman himself knows that during these heated days in the summer there is hardly a breath of air that comes into this Capitol that does not come from the Potomac, and you propose to put these railroad shops and railroad depots over there so that every breath of air that comes in for you and me to breathe is charged with coal smoke.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Does it ever come into this Capitol?

Mr. MILLIKEN. It will when you have your shops there.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. That is the most ridiculous proposition I have ever heard. [Laughter.] The gentleman states that this railway is about 300 yards distant from the Capitol, and he never smelt smoke in this Hall wherever he may have been, either at this end or at the other end in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If the gentleman will allow me a part of my own time I shall be much obliged to him.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I will. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will say to my friend that I think every man in this House whose olfactory nerves are in a healthy condition can smell an almighty lot of "smoke" in this bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. There is just where the gentleman is mistaken. This bill states in every line exactly what is needed to give freight facilities to this railroad company, and where would the city of Washington be to-day if it had not been that Congress in 1871 granted a charter to this railroad company? It would be under the control of one railroad company and at its mercy.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Now, I hope my friend will be kind enough to allow me a little more of my own time. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Let the gentleman ask me any question he pleases and I will answer it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. I knew the gentleman would have the courtesy to allow me a little of my own time—for he is speaking in my time, he should understand.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I will give the gentleman all the time he wants. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, I would like a little of my own. Sometimes a man likes his own better than that which does not belong to him, but I am afraid that is not the case with this railroad company. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. It is pretty much the way with me; I do not know how it may be with the railroad company.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I knew that; so it was unnecessary for the gentleman to state it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, all this talk about the facilities which the railroad company has given the city of Washington is mere fustian. What are railroads built for? What do we give them charters for? Why are they laid upon the surface of the earth? Is it simply that the men who build them shall make money out of them? Do we grant a charter to a railroad company simply that certain men may make a good financial investment? Or does the public have some rights in the matter? This railroad has done nothing more than it was obliged to do in order to utilize its charter and its own property and put money into its own pockets, and it has never exhibited any of this generosity towards the city of Washington which the gentleman would imply. The proposition which the railroad company makes to-day in this bill is to take a franchise which, I repeat, if it gets it, it will not be willing to sell the day after it gets it for $10,000,000—the proposition, I say, is to take that charter for nothing, but then when the Government wants property on which to erect its public buildings in this city it takes the money out of its own Treasury and pays for it. I do not believe that so outrageous a bill as this has ever been introduced into Congress since I have been a member of it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman, because he is chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, why he did not favor the location of the new post-office for Washington down upon this flat ground. Why did he not favor putting the new public buildings down in that territory, upon that flat land, which is absolutely useless, which never can improve, never will improve, which never did improve until this railroad company got permission, by act of Congress, to come into the city of Washington in that way?

Mr. MILLIKEN. In answer to my friend, I have simply to say that I voted for such a site for the post-office as I believed would be most convenient to the people for that purpose, but it does not follow, as a matter of course, that because I did not vote to put the post-office down in the region to which he refers, I should vote to give the land away, or to give the railroad company an opportunity to make that land a nuisance to this capital.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Why, Mr. Chairman, you can not get people to buy land down there, and you never could at any time in the history of Washington get people to buy land for the purpose of living there. The gentleman speaks of malaria. There may be malaria down there, and I have no doubt there is, but the men who work for their day's wages there are no more subject to malaria than the employes of the navy-yard farther to the southeast.

Mr. McCLAMMY. Burn some North Carolina tar-knots down there. That will destroy your malaria. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. I stated that the friend of the railroad company who took me to show me the land said that there was so much malaria that white men could not live down there, and I could not understand why the railroad company wanted property for their machine-shops at a place where their workmen could not live.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I am obliged to the gentleman for permitting me to interrupt him. All I wanted to say was that the trouble of malaria applies no more to that locality than it does to the Washington navy-yard, where hundreds of men have been and are employed.

Mr. MILLIKEN. My friend need not thank me for allowing him to interrupt me, because the dulcet tones of his voice are so pleasant that I would make almost any sacrifice for the pleasure of hearing him.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Well, in return I will give the gentleman all the time I have. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the love-feast between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Maine having reached such an auspicious conclusion, I take this opportunity of offering a word or two upon this bill. First, I say that the bill seems to be criticised mainly for those things that are not in it. The objection in the newspapers, the objection upon the street, the objection in this committee, so far as I have heard it, has been mainly based upon matters with which this bill has nothing whatever to do, and it has seemed to me that perhaps interested parties have been raising a smoke under which they could fight to better advantage than if they came out into the clear sunlight of truth.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will ask the gentleman what he means by "interested parties."

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I do not mean the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN]. That satisfies him.

Mr. MILLIKEN. All right.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. In the first place, this bill has nothing whatever to do with the location of the passenger depot. It has nothing whatever to do with confirming any title which the railroad company may have or may not have to that location. That question is left, as was shown here the other day, entirely outside of the province of this bill.

In the next place, this bill does not allow, as was stated, a roving commission to go all over this city and condemn plot after plot of land. Any reputable lawyer that will read this bill and look at that map will so state. But to "make assurance doubly sure," the gentleman from Pennsylvania has prepared an amendment which in express terms prevents anything of that sort being done. The bill does not provide for either the raising or the lowering of the tracks; it leaves that for future legislation. But right here I want to say that if any one will go along the line of this railroad and see these turnouts which have been constructed from the main track into private property, I want to ask him how the interests of citizens of that section owning these squares into which these turnouts run can be subverted if the tracks be either raised or lowered.

What does the bill propose to do in connection with the amendments offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and which he says the friends of the bill are ready to accept? It proposes, as I understand, only this—and if I am not correct I will thank any gentleman to rise in his place and correct me—it provides that as to certain turnouts and tracks which have now been laid the railroad company shall have the right to continue them where they now are. And what are those turnouts?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask under what authority the railroad company laid those tracks and how they happened to be indicted for having done so?

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. If the gentleman wants me to make my speech, all of it, first I will do so. I have not got to that part of the question yet; but if my ten minutes do not expire too soon I will get there, and I think to the gentleman's satisfaction, unless he does not want to be convinced.

There was authority granted to this railroad company to come into this city on the line of certain avenues. As time went on certain gentlemen along the line of those avenues desired to have sidings laid into their property for their own mercantile or commercial purposes, and the railroad company laid those tracks. As time went on, and the commerce of this road increased, and the vast volume of freight poured up from the Southern seaboard, it became necessary to have additional tracks for the accommodation of that freight. As this city grew and its freight business increased it became necessary to have tracks upon which to place its cars, and if any man will go to-day out to Benning's I warrant he will see at this moment siding after siding occupied with cars because there is no room for them elsewhere.

The company laid these tracks; but before it did so what did it do? It went to the District commissioners and asked permission; and it was granted. The matter was carried to the courts, and it was found that the commissioners had no authority in law to grant that permission; that the power was vested in the Congress of the United States; and thereupon, because of this act unauthorized in law, but authorized by what the company supposed was the proper authority, the grand jury of the District indicted the company for the laying of these tracks. More than that, as I understand, the grand jury indicted the commissioners for the act of former commissioners in granting the permission. That is the size of that indictment, and I think the size shows its spirit.

I have gone along this route since this discussion commenced—alone, not convoyed by anybody either in favor of or against the bill—and have looked for myself to see whether the privileges granted by this bill are needed or not. I want to say that as the bill first came before the Committee of the Whole I was not in favor of it. I regarded its provisions as too wide, too sweeping, not guarded enough. But with the amendments offered, or which will be offered, for our vote by this committee, it seems to me the bill will be such as the interests of this city itself, of the shippers to and from this city, of the passengers to and from the city require us to pass.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I have not been present during the consideration of this bill; and I want to ask the gentleman whether under its provisions the railroad company is allowed to put down these sidings that he has referred to and to condemn property? Is that the scope of it?

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Well, the gentleman asks a very wide question.

Mr. CANNON. Do they pay for what they get?

Mr. POST. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Certainly they pay for what they get.

Mr. CANNON. And the bill authorizes them to utilize the ground necessary to operate their railway along the line where it now runs?

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. As to the necessity, that is my judgment from viewing the situation. I am not a railroad man. Sometimes when I look into the smiling face of my friend from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] I am glad I am not, because thereby I retain his friendship. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Well, I thank God that you are not, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. As to the necessity in all proceedings for condemnation of lands for railroad purposes the necessity must be proved as an initial fact or no condemnation can be had. This bill grants no wider power of condemnation than is granted by the general railroad laws of our several States. And this bill, as proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it seems to me, is necessary for the trade and traffic coming into this city and going out of it—

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will you allow me to ask you a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Oh, certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Can you show where the gentleman from Pennsylvania offers any amendment to section 3 which limits the power of this company to acquire any squares that abut on its track on Virginia or Maryland avenues?

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. They abut on its tracks, and that abutment is in itself a limitation.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I am not speaking now of the running of side-tracks into squares owned by other people, but am calling attention to the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has not offered any amendment which limits the power of this company to take, by condemnation, all of the squares adjacent to its tracks on Virginia and Maryland avenues.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Why, my dear sir, if you will look at the map you will see that a large part of the land is owned and has been paid for by the company; and in one instance, to my personal knowledge, after constructing a siding into property that they owned themselves, they have been indicted for doing it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Well, they ought to have been, for undertaking to run tracks on such authority.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Well, if the gentleman from Kansas will say that anybody ought to be indicted for doing that which he was advised he had legal authority for doing, that is his code of morals, not mine.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Why, does my friend believe that the attorneys of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company considered as good legal authority the act of the commissioners of the District of Columbia in exercising a power that Congress could alone exercise? They are not fools.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I know this, that in this case, as in the original-package act, we are much wiser after the court has decided than we were before.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh, no; the Pennsylvania road employs good lawyers.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I do not know anything in regard to that. I neither know whom they employ nor how they employ them, nor do I care.

Mr. CASWELL. Will the gentleman from Kansas point out a single clause in this bill that grants anything to this railroad company that it does not grant to any other company which operates its lines in this city?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. CASWELL. Where is it?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I do not believe that there is any city in this country that will give any company the right to come in and occupy, by condemnation, sixty-eight of its public squares.

Mr. CASWELL. Does the gentleman believe that any such right exists in the bill?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CASWELL. Then I credit that to the gentleman as the reason for his opposing the bill. It is evident he does not understand its features.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh, that is a very easy way to get out of the advocacy of the bill.

Mr. CASWELL. I credit the gentleman with that as the reason for opposing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in reference to this bill that I do not favor the removal of the passenger depot from where it is, nor to obstruct the passage of trains to and from that depot. I think that the people of this city ought to be willing to submit to such inconveniences as may be imposed upon them in that manner, in the interest of the traveling public.

The objection I have to this bill does not come of any objection to railroads in themselves; nor do I propose to invoke any influence of that sort in my antagonism to this bill, because I believe, as everybody else does, that they are the great institution of the present civilization. At the same time they may well be classed among that part of the influences and persons of this country called powerful. There is enough of human nature in railroad corporations of this day to do whatever they can to advance their own interests, and they wield a powerful arm to accomplish their purposes.

This bill, as I understand it, was drawn by a railroad lawyer, and they usually have the best talent in the profession. The bill itself indicates that sort of a brain as having framed it; even the punctuation indicates skill. The first objection I make to the bill is the ratification and confirmation of the Government reservations or squares, Nos. 101, 109, 120, 174, 178, 211, 309, and whatever other Government property is occupied or partially occupied by the companies and now in the possession of this company, and that they shall be ratified and confirmed by Congress; that means a perpetual possession and is equivalent to a fee-simple title, and by implication repeals the clause in the original grant reserving to the Government the right to amend or repeal it.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman submit for an interruption?

Mr. STOCKDALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEARD. There is an amendment pending now, if the gentleman is aware of the fact, proposing to declare substantially that this shall not be construed as a grant of the right to occupy any reservation belonging to the Federal Government.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I understood those lines were to be stricken out, but they have not been stricken out.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Why did not the committee strike them out?

Mr. STOCKDALE. Yes; why did not they do it themselves, and not insert a provision that they shall not be "construed" so as to legalize and confirm the titles to these public reservations in the company? The lines use the words "legalized and confirmed," and we are told now that there is an amendment pending to the effect that "legalized and confirmed" shall not be construed to mean "legalized and confirmed;" then I ask what will they mean? I say that if this is an honest amendment section 1 will mean nothing; and unless there is a dodge in this construction these lines ought to go out altogether, and when they do go out the whole first section is without meaning or force, unless it be that the railroad company will claim that after describing the squares that the words in the bill following the words "legalized and confirmed," to wit, "said tracts to be maintained in such manner" etc., mean the same as to say "said tracts shall be maintained where they are," etc. If that be true, the section will be as objectionable as before.

Mr. HEARD. The amendment now pending negatives the proposition of the gentleman.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Then we will be compelled to charge folly on a committee of the House for inserting lines in a bill of grave significance and submit an amendment to negative their meaning and destroy their effect, and will amount to nothing; that they are negated by something else they propose to add.

Mr. HEARD. I do not say that they are going to do that.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Oh, well, they are just like my friend down in Mississippi, who said his lawyer was affirming on one side and negating on the other.

Mr. HEARD. But I did say that an amendment was pending before the House—

Mr. STOCKDALE. Well, I do not yield for a speech.

Mr. HEARD. I do not mean to make a speech, but simply to correct the gentleman.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Then please let me have a part of my own time.

Now, here is another objection to this bill. They say it is all open and fair. Let us see. I read from the bill:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and they are hereby authorized and empowered, whenever they consider it a public benefit, to grant the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company permission to lay, maintain, and use side-tracks and sidings from the main line or lines of said railroad into any real estate in said city abutting on the streets or avenues on which such line of such company is or may be situated.

When?

Whenever they consider it a public benefit.

No limit upon their discretion; no power to restrain them, but—whenever they consider it a public benefit, to grant to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company permission to lay, maintain, and use side-tracks and sidings from the main line or lines of said railroad into any real estate in the said city abutting on the streets or avenues on which such line of such company is or may be situated.

Now look at that map, you gentlemen who press this bill upon this House, and see where that company can go. It is not "squares or property abutting on the railroad line," but it is squares abutting on any street or avenue upon which the railroad is or may be situated. Why of course it was a railroad lawyer who drew the bill. That road crosses twenty-five streets perhaps; any square abutting on any one of them can be condemned, if there be a manufactory, store, or any business house on it. Any square on any street or abutting on any street that that railroad is upon may be condemned by this railroad company, says the bill.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield—

Mr. STOCKDALE. And for what purpose may they condemn this property? Why, for any purposes that the railroad company may want it—for it may condemn private property and erect upon that private property shanties or houses for residences for its employes, from one end to the other of Maryland avenue and Virginia avenue and perhaps twenty other streets and avenues, provided they can get some one to put up a factory or a store or any business house, however small. There is no escape from that construction if they want to make it, and they are sure to want to make it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will you make that a little clearer?

Mr. STOCKDALE. I make it clear by reading the second section of the bill. It is made the duty, I say, not left in the discretion of even the commissioners of this District, that they shall grant to this company whenever they consider it a public benefit—and it is wonderful how pliant is the consideration of the commissioners of this District for the benefit of the public, sometimes—

To grant the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company permission to lay, maintain, and use side-tracks and sidings from the main line or lines of said railroad into any real estate in the said city abutting on—

On what? On the railroad?

Ah no, the scope is far broader than that. It would not have needed a railroad lawyer to draft the bill if that had been all they wanted, although that would have been too much; but—abutting on the streets or avenues on which such line of such company is or may be situated.

Well now, it is situated on Maryland avenue—

Mr. POST. Read the balance of the section.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I will read it. It is situated on Maryland avenue; it is situated on Virginia avenue; it is situated on twenty streets. Now, I say by the language of this bill they can take abutting property on any of those streets.

I say I will make it plainer at the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas and will read the balance of the section at the suggestion my friend from Illinois [Mr. Post]. Here is the whole section:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and they are hereby authorized and empowered, whenever they consider it a public benefit, to grant the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company permission to lay, maintain, and use side-tracks and sidings from the main line or lines of said railroad into any real estate in said city abutting on the streets or avenues on which such line of such company is or may be situated which may be used or occupied for manufacturing, commercial, or other business purposes by parties desiring the use of such facilities. Such side-tracks or sidings shall be laid and maintained under the direction of said commissioners, and in such manner as shall least obstruct the use of the public streets for ordinary purposes.

I say this road is situated on Maryland and Virginia avenues.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And it may be situated on any other avenue.

Mr. STOCKDALE. That is true; it may be situated on any other avenue hereafter. Now, ever since I have been in Congress I have been importuned to vote to spend the people's money to embellish and enlarge and beautify this great capital city. I have been urged by some of these same gentlemen to lay out avenues, to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to extend the avenues of this great city so that it will embrace the whole District, if you please. There is no end to the money they want to spend for pleasure parks, for pleasure streets, and for a menagerie for the amusement of Congressmen and the people of the city of Washington.

I have no enmity against this railroad company, except that I do not want it turned loose to run over this city without restraint, and this bill is simply a license to do that. They do not need any sympathy; they generally can take care of themselves. But are we to allow them to go without limit into this city, to condemn when and where they please, not for their passenger tracks, but for their railroad shops, for any structure they may want to build? They may put out the people of this city from their own property by condemnation and build rows of houses for their employes in the heart of this city. They ask the right to run their side-tracks into any square abutting on any avenue or street in this city upon which the railroad is, and for what? Why, I will not even attempt to name all the purposes the company may want lands for. If a manufactory is upon any square or upon any street or avenue of this city and it wants a side-track from the main line of this road, the railroad will have the right to put it there and will have the right to condemn private property to get it there. They will have the right to put it on any street they may choose, to get there, and cross as many as they choose. They can cross any street or any avenue, they can keep their trains standing upon these side-tracks and cross these streets or cross these avenues, and every man who has traveled knows enough about railroads to know that when they put their side-tracks in for freight purposes and run the long trains over them and when they have the right to extend them from their depot to the boundaries of this city, it will cut in two the whole of the southwest portion of the city of Washington, as far as the inhabitants are concerned, and will destroy intercommunication. They cross Maryland avenue, they cross Virginia avenue, and they may take any squares that about upon any of them where there is a manufactory or store. By this bill, if it shall become a law, this company can run its road the whole length of these avenues to get to a store at the end of either. I say that it would be a blot upon the city and a reflection on us. This rushing to and fro of these enormous freight trains would utterly destroy the proper use of the streets, as these people have already said. Here is a communication from citizens of this District, and they are entitled to some consideration.

My friend from Pennsylvania, who lives in the beautiful city of steady habits, says that nobody will buy property down there. Why? Perhaps a gentleman living on Chestnut street, Philadelphia, would not, but there are 30,000 people living there, and a large number of them on their own property, in this southwest portion of the city of Washington. They have their humble homes, many of them good homes, there, and they like to live there. They can not go into the northwestern portion of the city and buy a home at $40,000, but their homes are dear to them. And, by the way, I might pause here to say that if this proposition was made to go through the northwestern portion of this city gentlemen in this House would quail before the people that would come here to oppose it. But because it affects people who live on these malarial flats, and because they are powerless to save themselves from the aggressions of this railroad company, which is attempting to run over those people—we are told it does not improve as an excuse—I say it ought to be the very proudest act of the Congress of the United States to protect these people in their humble homes against the tramp of this colossal corporation.

Mr. CASWELL. If the gentleman from Mississippi will allow me, I will state that I understand the people of that locality petition and ask the railroad to extend to them further facilities. The people of that locality want it now for business purposes.

Mr. STOCKDALE. That is not my understanding. They petitioned the other way.

Mr. CASWELL. The company laid their track there, for which they have been indicted in pursuance of a decision of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STOCKDALE. It is not the people of the southwest. Here are a series of resolutions from the citizens of the southwestern portion of the city of Washington condemning all this business, and asking for the passage of another bill far different from this one.

Mr. CASWELL. There is a petition which says that the people want these tracks, and the company have to pay for what they get.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I suppose the gentleman got his information from the railroad company or their attorney.

Mr. CASWELL. I get it from the gentleman who has charge of this bill.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I want to say—

Mr. CASWELL. It is asked for by the business men who want to be able to transact business with the railroad.

Mr. MILLIKEN. They do not live in South Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The gentleman from Mississippi is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STOCKDALE. There are a series of resolutions by these people.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. STOCKDALE. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Are these a series of resolutions of the people?

Mr. STOCKDALE. You have a copy in your hands.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is not the question. I asked you if these resolutions are not resolutions of an association?

Mr. STOCKDALE. Certainly; they are by associations and signed by their officers. Here I find the name of J. H. Johnson, president Citizens' Association, 709 C street, southwest, and then Charles Allen, M. D., vice-president Citizens' Association. O. T. Thompson, secretary, and N. H. Shea, president, South Washington Protective Association, A. M. Fitzgerald, vice president, etc. Now, I do not know what this "Citizens' Association" amounts to, but I say that it must be something.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But it only purports to come from the officers who signed it.

Mr. STOCKDALE. The gentleman says it does not come from any one but from those officers who signed it. These officers must represent somebody.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. They may make themselves officers.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Why, how do you know?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I presume so.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Ah, you presume so, and that is what you always presume when you want the people's land.

You go down to these flats and say to these poor people, "Get out of your houses; a railroad company wants the land." I say that the owners ought to be consulted whether they shall go out of their own homes, and I say that the people ought to be consulted whether the inhabitants in the southwest portion of the city shall be continually endangered by the rushing of freight trains through the city when all freight establishments and facilities can be erected at the edge of the city, and not render the thickly inhabited portions so that people can not pass with safety, and already there have been a number of persons killed and crippled at these crossings. Say the people in these resolutions or this document—I will insert the document in my remarks:

We submit the following facts and conclusions as set forth by the only organizations representing the 30,000 inhabitants of South Washington, to which we ask your earnest attention in view of the pending Atkinson bill, in relation to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad:

In 1871 Congress passed an act giving the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad the right of entrance into this city. By a subsequent act it was allowed to build a depot on the public reservation on Sixth street. This dose was sugar-coated in various ways. The building was to be of such a style, etc. A Senator, Mr. Frelinghuysen, pledged the Senate that no steam was to be used on Sixth street in crossing the public grounds. At the time of the passage of this bill Messrs. Potter, in the House, and Cameron, in the Senate, stated that the authority to use this Mall could be repealed whenever it was desired, and the right to do so was expressly reserved in the bill. This road has seized upon and is now using public squares 101, 109, 120, 174, 178, 241, and 309 for its business.

The law has been persistently violated to the great damage of the Government and the citizens, and in answer to our demand for redress the law-breakers come forward now to ask, not only that its illegal act be condoned, but that it be given a carte blanche to take and to use all the streets, avenues, and squares it may choose, placing the people of South Washington completely at its mercy.

We can hardly believe that Congress will confirm the use of the Mall and grant seven reservations to this company free of cost, while ground is being purchased for Government uses, and yet that such a bill should be reported to the House by a minority of the whole Committee on the District, a bill admittedly drawn by the attorney of the road, awakens our greatest fears.

It was an unfortunate mistake to have given the railroad company the right to occupy the Mall and the two finest avenues in the most valuable portion of South Washington, and we believe that now is the proper time to correct that mistake, and that no measure should be passed for the benefit of the railroad which would not afford relief to that long suffering section.

We submit that the Atkinson bill ought not to pass, for the following reasons: That the railroad should not be allowed to use any of the public grounds, but should be made to remove from all such property at once.

That the Mall should not be any longer disfigured by the depot and trains of the road, nor should be allowed to use the other reservations now occupied by it.

That the use of Maryland and Virginia avenues by this road is not necessary, and its tracks should be taken off these thoroughfares.

That the effect of the present situation of the tracks crossing at surface grade on the principal thoroughfares to the river front has become notorious in causing the death and injury of a great many persons as well as interfering with business communication and travel to and from the river.

That east of Third street there is ample space for the erection of passenger and freight depots, where the evils may be reduced to a minimum, while the road will have excellent access to the public in the transaction of its business.

That for through traffic the route from the tunnel to and along a route lying between I and K streets southwest to Water street and the river is the most direct, and that by elevating the road travel will not be impeded at the street crossings, while the use of the squares by the tracks will leave the streets free and give the road needed space for all its requirements.

We also believe a new elevated bridge as recommended by Colonel Hains should be built for railroad purposes.

A change of route as above will relieve nearly fifty squares, thickly inhabited, and of the most valuable property in this section of the city, from injury now caused by the present unnecessary misuse of our avenues and streets.

We refer you to House bill 9484 for a solution of this question, and ask your favorable consideration of the same, feeling certain that the plan of elevation is feasible, notwithstanding Captain Russell's report, and, in fact, that it can easily and quickly be carried out.

We will be pleased to give you any further and particular information you may desire.

Instead of the passage of the Atkinson bill we ask that Congress will at once repeal the act giving the company the use of the Mall and require the removal of its tracks from Sixth street and Maryland and Virginia avenues as an act of simplest justice.

N. H. Shea, president South Washington Protective Association, 632 Pennsylvania avenue, northwest; M. Fitzgerald, vice-president South Washington Protective Association, 601 Second street, southwest; J. H. Johnson, president Citizens' Association, No. 1, 709 C street, southwest; Charles Allen, M. D., vice-president Citizens' Association, No. 1, 1230 G street, southwest; O. T. Thompson, secretary Citizens' Association, No. 1, 631 Pennsylvania avenue, northwest.

The passenger trains alone go so frequently that the gates across the streets are down and travel blocked a great portion of the time. Of that I do not complain. It is proper to have the gates there; but you pass this bill and have the freight trains and the machine-shops, perhaps, and have all this traffic, with freight-houses and store-houses and switches and side-tracks and long trains standing to unload, and everything of this kind done there, and you will have these beautiful avenues about which gentlemen talk so much and so eloquently, and for which they ask so much of the people's money to be expended, blocked and cut in two by a railroad company, practically, and destroyed for travel. The people will be driven from their homes in that community for the benefit of a railroad company that can have the same facilities elsewhere. It is not opposition to the railroad company that I express; it is simply opposition to the unreasonable and dishonest demand that these people shall be removed from their homes, not for the needs, but for the mere convenience of this company, for as I have said they can have the same facilities a little farther out and damage no one. It is not that a passenger train may come in here; it is not because of the want of a passenger depot and for the benefit of the passenger traffic that these extraordinary demands are made by this company; those they have. It is for other schemes that can as well be done elsewhere; and I want to emphasize the declaration that, in my opinion, it is a palpable and willful violation of the Constitution to condemn people's property when no necessity exists; to take people's property by force and hand it over to a corporation to enrich it is to commit a great wrong.

Therefore I say this company should go outside, to the suburbs of the city, and get what they want for one-fourth of the cost; but instead of that they come in here and make this enormous demand—a demand that the Government in its power and its might shall rally and with strong hand drive people from their homes and give them to this company, at a price it is true; but American citizens, however humble, like to have something to say about selling their homes, and the price. Mr. Chairman, the very fact that this company persist in their unreasonable demands is a suspicious circumstance that there are other schemes than public convenience in their operations.

The bill does not permit school-houses and churches to be condemned; that is an objection to the bill, and why? Whenever there is a school-house or a church there it will be practically destroyed. They will not condemn it, and therefore they will not have to pay for it. Who would send a child to a school-house close to one of these machine-shops or to one of these freight depots with the network of side-tracks, where the switch engine, the yard engine and other engines are continually going backwards and forwards? The people will not send their children to such a school, and therefore the school-house is rendered practically worthless, and they do not have to pay for it because they did not condemn it. Then, again, as to churches. Who is going to a church near which a whistle is blowing every five minutes? Members can easily see that there is no reason in the bill. Let these gentlemen tell us what they want. Let a bill be prepared by some gentleman of this House. Let it be submitted plainly, so that men who are not railroad men can understand it; so that it needs no amendments to construe its terms and tell us what it means. Let it not talk in riddles.

I may not be sufficiently bright to comprehend this bill which these gentlemen see through so clearly. The railroad lawyers and managers can see through it. They know exactly what they will get if this bill passes, and that will be just what they please to take, and I have no doubt that wherever the lawyer is who drew this bill, he is now chuckling over the folly of the members of Congress who can not see what it means nor how vast are the privileges granted by it. I may not be able to understand it in all its phases, but I can see enough to turn me against it. Whatever is necessary for the convenience of the public I am willing to grant this company. But let them come in here with a clear, fair, and honest bill. The English language is easily understood and the majority of us claim to understand that language reasonably well, and surely a bill can be drawn that an ordinary Congressman could understand. Let it define the boundaries of the land they want and let us know why, if they can so far condescend. I am opposed to these blanket grants and unalterably opposed to conferring the power on the District commissioners to make grants.

I have not a doubt that gentlemen who favor this bill do it with pure motives and prompted by an honest judgment. Yet I believe that this bill is either so craftily or so loosely drawn that if it shall pass in its present form we will see operations in Southwest Washington at which gentlemen will blush.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, with the view of completing this bill to-day, I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why not agree to a limitation here in committee?

Mr. GROUT. My object is this: There are amendments to be proposed to the bill, and when they are brought in and the bill is examined section by section, then the members of the House will be able to understand what they are talking about. As it is, this debate is proceeding largely at random, and it seems to me that it will be a great advantage to all gentlemen who desire to discuss this bill to have the amendments introduced and to have general debate limited.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why not propose in committee to limit the time?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not doubt that gentlemen on that side want to shorten the time for discussion. I should, if I were in favor of this bill.

Mr. GROUT. I shall propose that general debate be limited on each side to twenty minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And I shall propose that there shall be two hours debate on each side.

Mr. SPINOLA. Let us have a day on each side. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. There are several gentlemen who wish to speak upon this bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] has the floor.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. GROUT that the committee rise, and there were—ayes 42, noes 27.

Tellers were demanded.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I make the point that there is no quorum.

Mr. BURROWS. It does not require a quorum for the committee to rise, Mr. Chairman, any more than it does to adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not, but tellers have been demanded.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] be allowed a certain limited time for the discussion of this matter. We are wasting valuable time in this way.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. GROUT and Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, to act as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 28.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BURROWS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DUNNELL, from the Committee of the Whole, reported they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 8243) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in the District of Columbia," and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, it is not for the purpose of suppressing debate that I propose this limitation, but it is rather for the purpose of facilitating it by means of a proper understanding of the provisions of this bill. It seems to me that the time that we consume in these general stump speeches ought to be brief and that we had better have the amendments offered, and then there will be an opportunity for full and free discussion of the bill by paragraphs. I move, therefore, that general debate upon this bill be limited to twenty minutes on each side.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And I move to make the time one hour on each side, and I ask the indulgence of the House to the same extent that the gentleman from Vermont has had in stating his motion, in order to say that whenever a bill drawn by the employé of a railroad company is brought before Congress, giving to that company the right to occupy a great part of this city, this House can well afford to spend sufficient time, not in stump speeches, but in getting at the real inwardness of the rascally designs of the railroad company. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, it is suggested to me that the time ought to be thirty minutes on each side, and, with the leave of the House, I will so modify my motion.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Pending which, I move that general debate be limited to two hours, to be equally divided between the advocates and the opponents of the bill.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, and there were—ayes 38, noes 59.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask for tellers, and I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of no quorum is overruled unless the gentleman makes the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I make the point of no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will ascertain whether there is a quorum or not. (Having counted the members). There are 170 members present—more than a quorum. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GROUT and Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, were appointed.

The question being again taken on the amendment of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, to limit debate in Committee of the Whole to two hours instead of one, there were—ayes 36, noes 67.

Mr. LIND. I demand the yeas and nays on this question.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like the privilege to make one statement which I think will facilitate this matter very much if gentlemen will hear me. As the House knows I was opposed to this bill the other day. I am anxious to submit some amendments which I think really cover the question before us. If we consume all our time in general debate, we shall not reach a vote on the merits of the proposition. If we limit debate to one hour, we can then come to these amendments which I would like the House to understand and vote upon. As it is now, the bill amounts to nothing.

The yeas and nays were not ordered—there being, ayes 20, noes 117—less than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

So the amendment of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, was rejected.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. GROUT that general debate in Committee of the Whole be limited to one hour, it was agreed to.

Mr. GROUT. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of House bill No. 8243.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. DUNNELL in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8243) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The House has voted to limit general debate on this bill to one hour, which will be equally divided between the friends and the opponents of the measure. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] will be recognized to control the time upon the respective sides.

Mr. SPINOLA. They are both on the same side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to know whether the gentleman from Vermont, whom the Chair has recognized to control the time against this bill, is for it or against it?

The CHAIRMAN. Against it, as the Chair understands.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like him to say whether he is or not.

Mr. GROUT. Had the gentleman from Kansas been attentive he would have learned on the last District day whether I was for or against this bill. In the most unequivocal manner I stated then to the House that I was opposed to the bill as it now stands. But I said there was just a little kernel of something in the bill that it was suitable to grant this railroad corporation; and that was the privilege to condemn land under proper restrictions for a freight depot in this city. There is no question about that. Those who have informed themselves will not deny it. And when the friends of this bill cry out that we are withholding proper facilities to this railroad company, their cry should be listened to by gentlemen who stand in factious opposition to any consideration of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I do not know of any such gentleman on the floor.

Mr. GROUT. Well, if there are such. I will modify my statement in that way.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. You had better do so.

Mr. GROUT. There are some gentlemen who do not seem willing—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Vermont commence now to use his time?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The gentleman's statement is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. GROUT. It is not quite satisfactory to me; I want to say something more. I say there is just this little kernel in the bill, namely, providing for a freight depot, that should have the considerate attention of this House and should be provided for. There is no question about that. Any fair man who understands the situation must admit it. So I say it is improper to insist that the bill shall be killed outright. But, while that is the case, there are many other things in the bill that are wrong, radically wrong, which this House ought never to approve and never will approve if members rightly understand the provisions in question.

Now, to begin with, here is the first section of the bill which is wrong; and it is not made right by the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON].

This section provides—

That the construction, maintenance, and use for railway purposes of the turnouts and sidings of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, now extending from its line between the Anacostia or Eastern Branch of the Potomac River and the Long Bridge, in the city of Washington, into the several squares of ground known and designated on the plat of the city of Washington as follows.

Here follows the enumeration of certain squares; and after that the following language which the gentleman proposes to strike out:

And the use and maintenance of its shops, stations, and other structures now erected thereon is hereby legalized and confirmed.

Now the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to strike that out, but when that provision had been stricken out the section still provides as follows:

Said tracks to be maintained in such manner as will least obstruct the public streets, avenues, or alleys on which said tracks are laid, and to be under the general supervision of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Thus it will be seen that this section as proposed to be amended will still legalize the turnouts and sidings. It simply proposes to strike out the provision with reference to stations and other structures which have been erected, that is all.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the provision confirming the title to land should be struck out and the right of way as it has been exercised should be legalized subject to the right of the Federal Government to revoke the same at any time, would that be satisfactory?

Mr. GROUT. No, sir. Let it be understood distinctly that it is proposed to legalize the turnouts and sidings; and these words mean two different things. A turnout is where the track runs off into a man's place of business; a siding is a side-track along the main track in some street or avenue; and there are seven or eight of such unauthorized and illegal tracks in Virginia avenue.

Mr. CONNELL. Should not the bill even with the proposed amendments be sent back to the committee, that they may hunt for the "little kernel" to which you refer?

Mr. GROUT. If the gentleman will be attentive he will find the "kernel" to which I refer. I distinctly stated what it was. It is the right of this company to condemn within the city limits (the location being specified) land for a freight station. I say this privilege should be granted to the corporation for the purposes of its business in this city; it should not be driven outside of the city limits for a depot for its freight business, and the people of the city should not be compelled to go outside to get their freight. There are not now sufficient facilities in that respect. This is the "kernel" that should be provided for. The amendments to be proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina makes suitable provision for that. When we reach the different sections of the bill and gentlemen listen to those amendments they will then understand the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What are those amendments?

Mr. GROUT. I can not tell you now; they are numerous and lengthy. I am glad the gentleman is inquiring after the amendments. They will so improve the bill, I think, that even my friend from Kansas will vote for it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly, for a question.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I will vote promptly for anything that is right.

Mr. GROUT. So I understand.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But I never yet saw any bill drawn by any railroad attorney as to which I did not want to take a microscope and four weeks to find the dodges in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROUT. Well, this bill—drawn by an attorney, if that be the fact, although I know nothing about it—will, when remodeled by the amendments proposed by the minority of the committee, be so purged of its present vices that I believe the gentleman will give it his support; for, as he says, he always desires to vote in behalf of the right.

But why should we not legalize these sidings and turnouts? I will tell you why, and the House will understand the reason instantly. There are now tracks across several reservations without any sort of authority of law. From one to four tracks run across reservations 174, 178, 241, and 307, beside tracks that occupy the streets I have spoken of. They run across little triangular reservations in one way and another. I can not now give a better location of these little reservations than to give their numbers and say that the tracks which cross them are other than the main track which runs up the street. The main track has a right to be there. That is a privilege granted under the charter. That is their right. But the bill when amended as proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania would still legalize all these sidings and turnouts; but it is clear that such as cross these little reservations should not be approved, and thus do we see that the gentleman's amendment is as sagacious as the bill itself, for it only strikes out "shops, stations, and other structures erected thereon"—and I do not know that there are any; there may be some, but I have no personal knowledge of it—but is careful to leave the section so that it legalizes all these illegal sidings and turnouts.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir.

Mr. LIND. If this bill legalizes these turnouts in different places, does it not legalize also the use indefinitely and for all time to come of the main tracks? Is not that the logical sequence and does it not follow as a matter of law?

Mr. GROUT. No, I do not think so.

Mr. LIND. Why?

Mr. GROUT. Because this bill should be kept under the control of the Congress to alter, amend, or repeal; and in this respect will be precisely what the original charter was. There will always be the right left in Congress to repeal the act or to amend it so as to cause the removal of any such track.

So much, therefore, for the first section. It should be stricken out, Mr. Chairman, as the amendment which will be offered by the gentleman from South Carolina proposes when we come to it—and that is the reason why I moved to limit debate, it was to make some progress and not fritter away the time of the House in stump speeches on the question of railroad usurpation generally, speeches that may be well timed at home or here, but they do not help forward the action which the House is now engaged in—I say that the amendment proposes to eliminate the objectionable features from this section.

Mr. RAINES. Does the amendment propose to strike out all of the first section?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir; it will be read in due time.

Mr. RAINES. I thought it only amended by striking out certain words from that section.

Mr. GROUT. That is the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON]. I am referring now to the amendment proposed by the minority of the District Committee. They have prepared amendments which will be submitted in due time by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], which will put the bill in shape, so I think the House not only can afford to pass it, but ought to pass it.

Now, on the last District day I stated my objections to the second section of the bill, that the commissioners of the District of Columbia may hereafter authorize this railroad company to make its sidings and turnouts at pleasure here and there throughout the city as they choose. I deny in the first place the right of Congress to delegate to the commissioners of the District of Columbia that power. If it could be legally done, I do not believe that it ought to be done as a matter of policy. Let the railroad company say first what they want. Let it be understood by the law-making power exactly what they are doing, and let the law-making power make provision for what the railroad company want, if they think they are entitled to it, and then we know where we are and the railroad company know where they are. That is business; that is the common-sense way of doing it. I think that section is objectionable because it embodies a feature which is indefinite and uncertain and leaves everything at loose ends.

In regard to the other section, the third section, I spoke fully the other day, and I need not repeat now the arguments I made then. This section authorizes the taking of land anywhere. Now, they should have land and the right to condemn it, if necessary, for freight purposes. But they should specify where they want it, and then be authorized to go forward and take it, pay for it, put their station on it, and the business is settled. I am in favor of that proposition. I think they should have proper freight facilities. That feature of the bill really needs modification, because it justifies this clamor about a factious opposition withholding what the company wants: necessary facilities for its freight business.

Mr. MILLIKEN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Do you not think the railroad company should first specify what it wants?

Mr. GROUT. Yes; I say so.

Mr. MILLIKEN. So when Congress comes to act upon it it will know what it is granting?

Mr. GROUT. That is what I have just said, that it should be specified. They have stated what they want in this bill, but the gentleman from Maine and myself do not agree with them, and so if we can substitute something which we think they ought to have, it is our privilege, of course, and not only our privilege, but our duty, to substitute it.

I have said that unless we do this there is just ground for the clamor that Congress is withholding from the company suitable facilities for the transaction of its legitimate business in this city. But they should not have these side-tracks through our public streets, seven or eight, trenching on the sidewalks, occupying up to a narrow limit all of the street, as I think, in Virginia avenue, where my eye rested on it the other day—I would not be quite sure of the avenue, but that was the condition. Now, they have no business doing that; they are not entitled to that occupancy; they have no right to it under their charter. They have simply done it without authority. The people are entitled to the occupancy of the streets, with, perhaps, the passage of a single track through it; but in place of that the streets are filled with sidings which are kept for empty cars, where they back in their cars and unload them, and in some instances where they make up trains, as I am told. This should not be allowed.

The railroad company should go outside of the city limits, where land is cheap, where the people do not want to occupy the line of the road with their places of business, and where the railroad company can go without interruption, transact its business, put down its sidings, make up its trains, store its empty cars, and transact its business without interfering with the public. That should be done. They have done it in part, but they should be required to do it altogether. As trains are made up there for the north all they would have to do would be to quietly draw the train through the city on a single track, and it would not then require the occupancy of all the streets on the line of its track for the transaction of this kind of business which should be kept outside the city limits.

Now, I do not want to put myself, Mr. Chairman, in the attitude of being uncompromisingly opposed to this bill for the reasons stated, but I say, let us come to an early understanding in the light of the proposed amendments. If they are not agreed to, then I am opposed to the bill, but I have no doubt these amendments will be adopted.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will my friend allow me to ask a question?

Mr. GROUT. Yes.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Do not you think that when the Government has anything that anybody else wants, and it needs something in return, it would be a good deal better to trade off what it has and to get something in return than to give away all it has?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir; I certainly do.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And let me say then—

Mr. GROUT. I can not yield to the gentleman for a speech, for I want to make the speech, sir. I say yes, and I say before we grant these privileges to this railroad company we should have a time fixed when they shall get off the public property with their station and railroad tracks, which now cut a public park in the heart of the city in two pieces, and which they have occupied for eighteen years without price, as a free gift from the Government. They should set their station back to the very place where by the original charter it was to be placed, which they thought was a good place then. The friends of the road say it is not a good place now. They thought it was a good place then, and its charter provided for its location there.

As I stated on the last District day, after the road was constructed the president of the road, Tom Scott, came here and coaxed from Congress the privilege of coming up across the reservation 800 feet further and sitting down upon the public property, cutting the public reservation in two. Since then the city has become populous. People are over there in South Washington by the hundred, where there were then only here and there a stray house. We are buying land for a public park up at Rock Creek, and is it not time that this other public park was no longer severed by a railroad with half a dozen tracks across it, over which are passing every five or ten minutes locomotives and trains? There are scores of trains, more or less, coming into or leaving this city every day, such has become the great business of the road and the great population of the town. Now they say they do not want to move back, and some gentlemen upon the floor here say they do not want to move the depot back, because they want it convenient. It will go back 800 feet, and in the bus they take to go to their hotel when they come to town it will take a minute longer, perhaps, with no additional charge—

Mr. MILLIKEN. And it will be quite as convenient to this Capitol as it is now, and nearer.

Mr. GROUT. Yes, certainly. And it will cost no more. To the gentleman who wants to take his carriage it is a minute, more or less, and to a man who takes a street car it is no more than two minutes more, and we as a body shall no longer suffer the reproach of letting a private corporation occupy the public property with its railway stations and its tracks. I say it is not right; it can not be right in our own eyes, nor in the eyes of the public. We go down across Pennsylvania avenue for a city post-office site and condemn property, a square or two, and pay our money out for it, half a million or so, but we graciously fold our arms and let the Pennsylvania Railroad Company occupy public land which we should have asked them to step out from long before this and put our post-office right there. It is a good place for it, better than the other. But, as a gentleman from New York remarked to me—and I do not mean to steal his thunder—he said, "As good a man as Sam Randall, who has gone to his reward, tried for years to get some place upon some public reservation in this city whereon to erect public buildings, and he was unable to do it, and many another gentleman has tried to accomplish the same end and failed, but yet we sit silently by and let a private corporation occupy without compensation the public property."

How does it look when it comes to be stated fairly and squarely? I say it is a public scandal. I am not going to call to account those gentlemen who eighteen years ago saw fit, through Tom Scott's plausible methods, to let them in there, because the situation was different then. The city was sparsely populated. That whole section now known as South Washington was a vacant tract. But it is densely populated now, and that railroad company should now go back across the reservation, right where their original charter planted them, and leave that reservation for the public use.

Another thing is the depression of the tracks which the amendments of the minority provide for when we reach them. The amendments provide for putting the tracks under ground, so that human life shall not be put in jeopardy. Something less than a hundred lives have gone out as the result of the occupancy of the public streets by these railroads within the last eighteen years, and between one and two hundred persons have been maimed. The amendment provides that the tracks shall, as in other large cities, be depressed where they can be, and they can a portion of the way. Then the river front will be accessible and the south part of the city can communicate with the other part of the city. They will no longer be practically cut off, as they are now, by this railroad with its many tracks, in many places between northern and southern portions of the town, and that part of the city can thrive as well as the rest of it.

Mr. Chairman, I have spoken longer than I intended to. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SPINOLA. How much time is there remaining—a minute?

The CHAIRMAN. Ten minutes remain to that side.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I suppose it does not make a great deal of difference about the quality of a bill pending in Congress, whether it was drawn by a lawyer, or a preacher, or a politician without any profession, or an ordinary sort of common countryman. Most of the lawsuits that have grown up in this country by reason of the misconstruction of statutes have grown up by the misconstruction of statutes drawn by some of our people who always shy at anything a lawyer does.

Now, I take it that this House need not be afraid of this bill because it is said a lawyer draughted it. A lawyer draughted the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, and I believe everything else on the statute-books or organic law of the country that we consider worth having. [Laughter.] This bill grants to this railroad company, Mr. Chairman, exactly what every railroad company in the State which I have the honor in part to represent has absolutely without any enactment of the Legislature. There is nothing new in this bill whatever, except the proposition to legalize certain occupation which I know nothing about and care nothing about, and which I understand is to be stricken out of the bill. So that there is absolutely nothing in this bill but what is granted by the organic law and statute law of almost every State in the Union as a matter of right.

A corporation is not such a deadly weapon against the prosperity of the country after all. Suppose you take this corporation out of Washington. I suppose that the gentleman from Vermont would cheerfully walk from here down to the Chesapeake Bay somewhere and get into a dug-out and row his way towards Vermont. [Laughter.] There are a great many people who are not willing to do that. Here is a railroad company that has come to the city of Washington. We are told by the official representatives of the railroad that up to this time they have not made any money, but have actually lost money by coming here. Now it is solemnly proposed that in this year of our Lord, when we expect to discover a population of nearly a quarter of a million, or perhaps more than that, in this capital city of ours where the population is drifting away out miles from here, that a railroad company is to be driven out of this town, and for what purpose? For the purpose of making better a piece of city property of certain individuals living down here in the southwest part of the city, and whose property is constantly becoming affected by the presence and the operation of a railroad company that has been going on for eighteen years without any protest and against every aggression, and that, too, while that population has a perfect right in the courts to enforce their claims and demands against the corporation.

Gentlemen say that it is a terrible thing to allow a railroad to cross a street. Why, the courts of every State in this Union, where the question has been tried, have held that every abutting property owner upon every street has a right to prosecute a railroad company for damages even as to the air, the light, sound, and dust, and everything of that kind. This is one of the greatest appliances of modern civilization. Railroads must come, and the only question is to limit them by enactment of the legislative department of the Government to their right, and not to let them have anything for nothing.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Will the gentleman allow me a question there?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; but I believe you refused to yield to me for a question.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I consented that you should ask me a question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And you stated that it was not a question.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield to you for a question.

Mr. STOCKDALE. If you do not think it is a question you can say that. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield to you for a question.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Do you not know that a small property-owner would litigate with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at a great disadvantage?

Mr. GROSVENOR. All the property-owners living along the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad, or any one of the property-owners, can sue for himself and all the rest of the smaller property-owners. He is not limited in any such way.

Mr. LIND. To recover damages?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly not to recover damages; but he can sue against any unlawful occupation of public property which has operated as a damage to the individuals along that line. To abate the nuisance. It does not require that you should have individual suits for that purpose; and every lawyer knows that, and every man who is not a lawyer ought to know it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does the bill, if you will allow me, make provision as to the ground they are unlawfully occupying?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not talking about that; but I understand that part is to be stricken out of this bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not complaining about interruptions, but I have a very few moments to speak.

The city of Washington presents to-day a singular aspect to the people of the country. Property here is commanding a price wholly and utterly fictitious and impossible of being maintained. No man can account for the price that property is selling for by any knowledge of or any comparison with the conditions in any other city in the United States. It is either absolutely fictitious or else there must be the coming of some event that is going to change the whole character of the city of Washington. There must either be manufacturing industries introduced in the city of Washington and made profitable within the next five years, or there must be a collapse of the values of these properties such as we have never seen outside of one of the paper towns of the far Southwest. So I undertake to say at this time that a railroad that is handling three-quarters of a million car-loads of freight in this city of Washington, either coming in or going through every year, ought not to be limited by anything short of its actual necessities for the corporation in the way of property for its necessary uses.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will my friend yield to me for one question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Now, if that be true, ought not the railroad to be made to take that property where it will not become a nuisance to the capital of the nation and the people of the city?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is a relative question; and if that is to be absolutely carried out it must go on the other side of the Potomac, as was done with the old Baltimore and Potomac road, where it was the one and sole arbiter of the question of transportation in this city.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question at this point?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. LIND. Does the gentleman know of any other city except this city, of the size of Washington, where a railroad corporation is permitted to have side-tracks and turn-outs on the streets to go to the establishment of any business man who may desire it in the locality in the manner in which it is done in the southwestern portion of the city?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will state to the gentleman that this bill limits the right of this railroad company to build side-tracks on the streets just where the authorities of this city may grant permission and nowhere else—that is, the commissioners of the District of Columbia, appointed by the President and removable at his will.

Mr. LIND. And they are responsible to nobody.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wish to incorporate into my remarks a statement of the exact question involved, which I cut from the correspondence of a morning paper this morning, and which I adopt as one of the best statements of the whole question.

The extract is as follows:

THE RAILWAY QUESTION—HOW PRESENTED AND PROVIDED FOR BY THE ATKINSON BILL—A MEASURE IN THE INTEREST OF WASHINGTON AND OF THE COUNTRY AT LARGE.

[Major Carson, in the Philadelphia Ledger.]

The Atkinson bill, which is intended to grant certain privileges in the way of terminal facilities at Washington to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, will be resumed in the House on Monday next. There is a local contest over this bill, which includes the newspapers, and which has been conducted with so much feeling and determination by the opponents of the measure as to cause considerable confusion in the minds of many members and create doubt and uncertainty among that class who have no time nor disposition to personally investigate the matter. The question is not difficult of solution. It is a simple business proposition, with all the facts bearing upon and all the merits connected with it plainly revealed on the surface. The present interests involved and the future interests to be affected are not confined to the District of Columbia, because it is a question of facilities in reaching the national capital and of personal comfort and convenience of the strangers within its gates, as well as a question affecting the personal comfort of a comparatively few residents on the line of the railroad and the business interests of the city. The local feeling and prejudice aroused by the contest should not be permitted to stand in the way of necessary and proper legislation.

The Baltimore and Potomac Company has its passenger station located on public property, permission for this occupation having been granted by Congress when the road was constructed. This occupation gives the company no legal right whatever to the land occupied, and Congress can remove it at any time. To reach the passenger station the tracks cross the Mall, which forms part of the public reservation extending westward from the Capitol to the Potomac River. The section of the city thus embraced is not considered desirable for domiciliary purposes. Much of it is in bad repute, and all of it would be greatly improved and the city benefited in morals and business if entirely given over to mercantile purposes. Residents of this section, contiguous to the railroad tracks, who are annoyed by the passage of trains, regard the railroad as a nuisance, and naturally want the tracks removed. In furtherance of this desire sentiment is invoked touching the Mall, the occupation of public property, the destruction of public parks, etc. The question of the location of the passenger station, however, is not involved in the pending bill, nor have its provisions any bearing upon the occupation of the Mall or any other land belonging to the Government.

The question presented by the Atkinson bill is whether the railroad company shall have the required facilities to carry the persons and the property of the people who must depend upon it. To this end the bill provides that the company, subject to the approval of the District commissioners, shall have the right to acquire property along the line of its main roadbed within certain defined limits, to connect the same with sidings, and also to run sidings into such lumber and coal yards and other business establishments at the request of their owners. This privilege is necessary to the prompt discharge of freight by the company; it is demanded by the business men of the city; it is a privilege freely granted by every city entered by railroads, and the withholding of it in this case inflicts an injury alike on the railroad company and the general public.

The bill also proposes to legalize the acts of the company in erecting a round-house and repair shop on certain property acquired by purchase, situated one mile from the public reservation, and the construction of side-tracks to reach these buildings, all of which are on the line of the road. This is made necessary by the fact that not only has the company been indicted for erecting and maintaining these shops, which gave employment to many laborers and mechanics, but the District commissioners have also been indicted because their predecessors in office granted the necessary building permits to construct the buildings and tracks leading to them. The company is indicted for illegally constructing and maintaining side-tracks to its own shops and round-house, and for maintaining a nuisance, and the commissioners are indicted for the issuance of permits to the company to perform an illegal act, the violation of law consisting in erecting and maintaining side-track across the curb line. The effect of a conviction under the indictments would be that the railroad company would be powerless to transact any business whatever. Freight could not be carried into any yard or warehouse erected for its reception, nor could the locomotives be moved into the round-house from the main track either for rest or repair.

This is a fair statement of the controversy. Leaving the railroad company out of the question entirely, Congress owes it to the business interests of Washington and to the people of the country at large, who are entitled to speedy and untrammelled ingress to and egress from the national capital, that the great lines of travel and business shall have proper facilities to fulfill their obligations to the public, and that they shall not be subjected to such annoyances and persecution as the Baltimore and Potomac Company has been so long made the victim.

[S. E. Johnson, in Cincinnati Enquirer.]

With the silver question rampant in the House, nobody can tell how much other business is going to be displaced. Next Monday will be District of Columbia day, and if the silver fight comes to a conclusion before that day there will be another wrestle with the Atkinson railroad bill. This has come to be a matter of national interest, though it directly pertains only to the city of Washington. The bill is for the purpose of giving the Pennsylvania Railroad people facilities for switching their cars and delivering freight, and has nothing to do with the location of the passenger station. That branch of the subject has been "lugged in" for the purpose of furnishing propelling power to the anti-railroad windmills.

Whether the Congressional grants to railroads have always been wise or not, and whether the Government or the railroad company has had the best of the deals that have been made, are questions too old and too complicated to go into here. The railroad company seems to have been obliged to fight over nearly every inch of ground. The local papers are flooded with complaints that owing to the lack of terminal facilities merchants can not get their freight till it has perished, and in inauguration times excursion passengers have been "dumped" out in the country and left to foot it into town. On the other hand, there is a shower of complaints that the railroad is a damage to property on streets with which it comes in contact, and there seems to be a widespread impression that it ought to be abolished as a nuisance.

The object of the Atkinson bill is to confirm the company in the occupation of the ground it now has and to relieve it from the annoyance of harassing legal business, and to allow it to have reasonable access to grounds it may purchase for additional terminal facilities. Congress ought to do something about this, and do it quickly. The people of Washington are suffering more than the railroad company is, and the Senators and Representatives ought to divest themselves of the fear that they will destroy themselves politically if they do something in the interest of transportation.

The quickest way to improve the terminal facilities is to confirm the company in what it holds now and to occupy other property that it may purchase. If the plan presented in the bill is not the right one, let them enact something else—only let it be something effective, immediate, and permanent. The people whose official or private occupation compels them to live in Washington are entitled to a rest from the railroad war. They are also entitled to facilities for getting themselves and their effects into and out of town without ballooning from the Maryland border or traversing South Washington on stilts.

Mr. EVANS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] this question: Will not the location, under this bill, of the freight depot and other buildings of this railroad be at a much greater distance from the Capitol than those of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad now are?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly; they are so already.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I should have been very much pleased if the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] had stated his objections to the first section of this bill when it was before the committee instead of waiting until the present time. If there were found an objectionable expression in this first section it would have been modified then, as we were and are willing to have it modified now. The whole purpose of the bill, as I originally stated, is to legalize the sidings that run into business squares in the neighborhood of the line of this railroad. Out of the sixteen sidings which it is proposed to legalize, ten go into squares that are occupied for private business purposes. The railroad company is not interested in them at all, further than that it desires to afford its patrons such facilities as are given to every business of the kind in most of the cities of this country. It is right that freight cars should be run into lumber and coal yards, because the freight is so heavy that it would add very much to its cost if the expense of transporting it in wagons over the streets had to be added to the other items which make up the selling price. The whole city, as it has been remarked, gets the benefit of the reduction in the price which is the result of the increased facilities that you give to the railroad company. Outside of those ten squares to which sidings are laid for the benefit of private business men, this bill only asks that sidings shall be legalized to the freight-yards and the round-house of this company. That is all that the first section of the bill was ever intended to include. It was intended to save the facilities that this company now enjoys and which are threatened by an indictment which is pending against the company and the commissioners. The company asks for nothing more than this, and it appears to me to be a most reasonable request.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman states that they want to save the facilities that they now enjoy and which they illegally acquired. Now if we confirm them in those facilities that they have already acquired illegally, why will they not go on and acquire other facilities illegally and then come into Congress to have them confirmed?

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. For the reason that we are not to assume that subsequent Congresses will be any more ready than this Congress is to do wrong or to permit it to be done. We are bound to consider that the next Congress and all succeeding Congresses will have as much wisdom as this Fifty-first Congress; although some of our members perhaps may question that proposition and may entertain the idea that wisdom will die with them. [Laughter.]

As to the second section of this bill it is designed exclusively for the benefit of private individuals and for the benefit of the trade of this city. Wipe out that second section if you will and you do no harm to the interests of this company further than to deprive it of the power to give ordinary business facilities to men who may hereafter desire to engage in business in this city. The wonderful growth of the city of Washington has been commented upon during this debate. If such facilities as are asked for in the second section of this bill are not given, the men who already have sidings connected with their coal-yards and lumber-yards will have a monopoly of the coal and lumber business. Nobody else can start a business of that sort because nobody else can get a siding into a square to enable him to transact such business.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Suppose it be held on the trial of the pending indictment that these sidings are illegal and that all the company had the right to construct were its two tracks into the city, would it be possible for this company, as the law now stands, and with the law thus expounded, to land a single pound of freight inside of the city of Washington, except that which would be unloaded from the cars upon its two main tracks?

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. If that indictment is sustained, a part of the judgment will be that these side tracks shall be torn up, and the cars of this company will have access to no place outside of the main tracks of its road, as the gentleman from New Jersey suggests, and every pound of freight must be taken from the cars on the main line.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. It can not even reach its own round-house.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. It can not reach its own round-house.

Mr. MILLIKEN. How does it happen to have a round-house that it can not reach?

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. It bought the ground and built the round-house. That is how it comes to have it.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] the other day quoted something from the statement of the president of this railroad company, from which we were led to infer that Mr. Roberts had said that these sidings were not necessary for the transaction of through business. The statement from which the gentleman quoted was made in 1887 before a Congressional committee, and my attention has been drawn to the fact that the business of transporting perishable freight from the South has doubled or trebled since that time, and has so increased in magnitude that what may have been a fact then is no longer a fact, because of the new conditions which have arisen.

But I have a letter from Mr. Roberts, stating that it was not his purpose to say that the Southern trade did not need the advantages of sufficient freight-yards here. He explains in this letter that trains are brought here with through freight from the South on its way North, but in addition to that the trains are made up with local freight for Washington City; and in order to separate the through freight from the local freight the company must have sufficient yards in which to run its freight cars for the purpose of making the necessary separation. The following is the letter of Mr. Roberts:

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD COMPANY,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT, 233 SOUTH FOURTH STREET,
Philadelphia, June 19, 1890.

MY DEAR SIR: I thank you for calling my attention to the debate in the House of Representatives on the 9th instant, in regard to the bill which proposes to give the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company power to acquire additional facilities in Washington, and especially to that portion of it in which Mr. HEMPHILL, of South Carolina, made reference to certain remarks made by me before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia on the 30th of November, 1887.

In reply to your inquiry as to the subject-matter then under discussion, I beg to say that if you will refer to my testimony, you will find that it was a fact that the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company having no power to purchase real estate in Washington, and lay tracks into it from its main line, had been compelled, to a certain extent, to load and unload its traffic on the public streets; and that we were there, before the subcommittee, to show just exactly the unfortunate position in which we were placed, and to say to them that (as we could not of course use the public streets for that purpose), unless power were given to us to acquire real estate for loading, unloading, and shifting cars, and also power to lay tracks into that property, it would be impossible for us to handle the constantly increasing business to and from the city of Washington.

In response to the inquiry of the chairman of that committee, in November, 1887, as to what portion of our business it was necessary to handle in the city, I stated that the local freight business of the city of Washington had, of course, to be handled on grounds located within the city; but that the interchange of through business did not enter into this question, and that it was unnecessary to make any transfer of through business between the North and the South in the streets of Washington. Of course, since that testimony was given, the business between the North and the South via Washington and the business of the North and the South with Washington have steadily increased. The position in which we are to-day is, therefore, vastly worse than it was at that time.

I find upon looking into the facts of the case that of the cars received at Washington from the Southern roads during 1889, only one-fourth, or 8,800 cars, were delivered to us in train loads, so that they could be taken right through Washington without requiring the use of our facilities at that point for shifting or making up trains in the city; the other three-fourths, or over 25,000 cars, came to us in trains in which through cars and local cars were indiscriminately mixed so that it was absolutely necessary to drill out, in the city, those cars which contained local freight for Washington itself.

You will, therefore, see that while Mr. HEMPHILL's inference would be entirely correct if we were able to get the cars from the Southern roads in such shape that the local and through cars would be in different trains, yet as that is not practicable we must, as the matter now stands, have facilities in the city of Washington to handle, not only the local business received from the Southern roads, but also a very large proportion of the through freight.

I find that the business received at Washington from the North during 1889 amounted to about 47,000 cars, and that while about 26,000 of these cars contained local freight for Washington, the other 21,000 destined to points in the South had to pass through the city, and the trains in passing through had to stop to take on cars which had been loaded in Washington for points in the South, so that it is absolutely necessary for us to have proper facilities in Washington to handle these south-bound trains without obstruction to the public streets.

I think from these statements that you will see clearly that Mr. HEMPHILL's remark "that this matter does not in the least degree affect the through freight which was received from the South and transported to the North" is hardly warranted by the facts of the case, and I am sure that if these facts are stated upon the floor of the House, Mr. HEMPHILL, as well as the other gentlemen interested in the question, will recognize their force and be willing to do what is fair and just, not only to the railroad company, but also to the citizens of Washington whom it is endeavoring to serve.

Very truly yours,

G. B. ROBERTS, President.

Hon. L. E. ATKINSON,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The growth of the passenger business in the past sixteen years has been such as to more than treble the facilities needed outside of the passenger station for storing, cleaning, and repairing the cars needed for the passenger service.

Last year nearly 1,800,000 passengers were carried to and from Washington, with the indications that this year they will approximate 2,000,000. This service alone needs more side-tracks than were originally provided for the entire service, freight and passenger both.

The vast growth of the business of this company is shown in a table which I have here.

Passengers handled monthly at the passenger station, Sixth and B streets, North and South, from the opening of the station in October, 1874, to January 1, 1890.

It is charged that the freight blockade of last fall, which ran into the winter, was not caused by the occupation of terminal facilities for the use of the triennial convalescence of Knights Templars, who came here last fall, and made the largest gathering that there has ever been in the city of Washington. An inquiry made develops the fact that in one month last fall the railroad company brought into this city 92,238 passengers, and returned during the same thirty days 92,948, being the largest business ever done in any similar period since its entrance in the city. The 3,100 cars required to handle these passengers, if they had been put into a continuous train, would have extended 35 miles.

Sidings were needed in the city on which to stand hundreds of sleepers from nearly every State in the Union, some of which remained here for ten days, the occupants sleeping in them at night, to whom it would have been a cold welcome, when the hotels and boarding-houses were filled to overflowing, to have required them to go to Alexandria or Baltimore to find their cars at night, or take the chances of procuring other accommodations in those cities.

I have procured a statement of the loaded freight cars which came into this city and went out during each month in the years 1888 and 1889, which shows that the railroad company not only did not reduce their freight facilities in the aggregate, but for the last four months of 1889 handled in each month more cars than they did in the corresponding month in the previous year, having handled 748 more cars in September and reduced the accumulations in October by handling 2,000 more cars than they did in the previous year.

Five thousand nine hundred and sixty-four cars received in 1889 over 1888. Eight thousand two hundred and thirty-six cars sent out in 1889 over 1888.

In order to enable the company to handle this increased business it is proposed in the fourth section of this bill that they shall be permitted to buy additional squares for the transaction of freight business. That is all there is in the fourth section. If there is any objectionable language there, if there is anything in that section which indicates what my friend from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] so very much suspects, a trick by a railroad lawyer, I for one have no hesitation in saying that I do not want to be misled myself and I do not want this House to be misled; and I want that section pruned of any expression (if such can be found) which indicates that this company has any intention of taking an improper advantage of the people of this city or of the United States.

Subsequent Congresses, I presume, will be as able to care for the people of this District as the present Congress; and we have added to the bill a section authorizing Congress to amend, alter, or repeal the entire bill. Under the circumstances I take it that no danger is to arise from its passage. If there be some hidden trick it will ultimately be exposed; and its exposure, I apprehend, will lead to its immediate correction. Hostile as the sentiments of this House seem to be toward railroads, no member of Congress would willingly permit a railroad company to avail itself of an ambiguous expression without immediate correction.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Five minutes.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I reserve that.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. MOORE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire has ten minutes.

Mr. MOORE, of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, there is a question involved here that seems to have escaped the clear conception of the members of this House up to the present time, and that question is simply this: shall the great Government reservation that stretches from this Capitol to the White House be preserved as a Government reservation, or shall it be cut in two and destroyed as a reservation for all time by concessions to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. That is the question involved in this bill, and it is the principal question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. That was settled eighteen years ago by an act of Congress.

Mr. MOORE, of New Hampshire. My friend says this question was settled eighteen years ago by an act of Congress. I do not wonder at the enthusiasm of our Philadelphia friends for the Pennsylvania Railroad. It is a great railroad, and superbly managed. It is one of the great railroads of this country and of the world, and I am not surprised that the citizens of Pennsylvania, and especially of Philadelphia, come in here as its enthusiastic champions.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I am surprised, and have been for years, that Vermont has always opposed anything that the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company in this city seemed to consider for its interests.

Mr. MOORE, of New Hampshire. I can not permit the gentleman to take all my time as he did the time of the gentleman from Maine. I have only ten minutes, and I propose to occupy that time in presenting to this House some views on which they can base an intelligent judgment on this question.

Now, the gentleman from Philadelphia says that that question was settled eighteen years ago. Well, it was not settled eighteen years ago. What was settled then? The management of the Pennsylvania Railroad came to Congress and secured an act, passed in May, 1872, by which they were permitted to change the proposed location of their passenger station from the junction of Virginia and Maryland avenues to this Government reservation at the foot of the Capitol, and that act subject to amendment or repeal by Congress at any time thereafter. That is the only tenure, my friend from Pennsylvania, by which the Pennsylvania Railroad holds its passenger station on this great and magnificent Government reservation.

The question here, Mr. Chairman, is not directly, but indirectly, whether they shall be permitted to remain there forever, and this reservation, that has cost so many hundreds of thousands of dollars, be cut in twain and probably destroyed. I know that it is not in the bill; but what is in the bill leads to that conclusion, and to none other. It is in that provision of the bill which confirms to the railroad company the present site of its sidings and side-tracks and turnouts wherever they may be located. It confirms the railroad company in the coga of vantage which they now hold, and gives them the authority, with the permission of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, to trench themselves still deeper by further purchases of property. I say to you that if you pass the bill in its present shape it is a virtual surrender of this great reservation to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and it will be a long and weary day before Congress ousts them from that possession.

Now, Mr. Chairman, bear in mind this further fact: The Committee on the District of Columbia referred this question to the District commissioners, who have the welfare of this District in their keeping, and what was their answer? It was this, that if the Pennsylvania Railroad is to be confirmed in its present tracks and stations as now located, then they advise the passage of this bill. What is the implication? Not that the commissioners advise that this bill be passed, but that if Congress, in view of the situation which I have tried clearly and with an unbiased judgment to place before the committee, decides that this reservation shall be given up, and given up forever, then the Pennsylvania Railroad may well be confirmed in its present location; and I say to you, gentlemen of this committee, and it is all I propose to say on this question, that if you are in favor of surrendering this magnificent reservation, surrendering it forever, you will vote for this bill; but if you are in favor of keeping that reservation for the use of the people, and for the adornment of this grand Capitol, then you will vote against the bill, or you will vote to so amend it that the interests of the Government may be protected and the interest of the railroad as well. [Applause.]

Mr. CASWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question, one single question?

Mr. MOORE, of New Hampshire. Certainly.

Mr. CASWELL. A question only for information.

How is it involved in this bill—the occupancy at all of the public park? I am anxious to know. I have heard that suggestion made several times from gentlemen who seem to be driven to a great extreme for an argument. Now, if the gentleman can answer me how that question is involved in this bill, extending freight facilities to the railroad company and to the people engaged in business along the side-tracks of the company, I shall be pleased to know, and I pause for an answer.

Mr. MOORE, of New Hampshire. I will answer the gentleman with entire truthfulness. It was stated in the hearings before the District Committee by one of the leading officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad, when the suggestion was made whether they would agree to their leaving this reservation, that gentleman said that he would not leave the reservation unless compelled.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. But that is not in the bill.

Mr. MOORE, of New Hampshire. I say to this House that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company does not propose to leave that reservation—

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. But you said it was in the bill. Mr. MOORE, of New Hampshire (continuing). Unless Congress compels them to leave.

I know it is not directly in the bill, but still let us not forget that there are some lines of action which by indirection mean more and have more effect often than is indicated by a direct line of action.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HEARD. Will my colleague on the committee yield to me for one minute?

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, nothing is more disagreeable to me than to be obliged to take issue with any colleague of mine on the committee about a matter of fact which occurred in the committee; but I want to state, as a matter of right, that the gentleman from New Hampshire is wholly mistaken in his statement in regard to the statement of an officer of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company who appeared before the committee. I think I was present at every meeting of the committee; I am quite certain that I was, and I was present when an official of the road was before the committee, but he did not state, as I understood him, that they "would not leave this reservation unless compelled to." He stated that it was not a question that was touched by the bill, and he therefore declined to discuss it before the committee. That was what he said, and I put myself upon the memory of the committee for the correctness of my statement.

Mr. MOORE, of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield to the gentleman from Missouri in his memory of facts. What I have said to this House is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, that an official of that railroad did intimate that they did not believe it was to their interest to leave that reservation, and they had no purpose to leave it.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman has changed his statement entirely. He says that an official of the road intimated that it was not to their advantage, and therefore they did not propose to leave it, which is a very different statement from his first one. I say that the gentlemen stated in my hearing—and I was present at every meeting of the committee—that they declined to discuss the question of leaving the reservation, because it was not involved in the bill under consideration.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman think they intend to leave the reservation?

Mr. HEARD. I am not discussing that question. I will say for myself, however, that if they were here petitioning for permission to go away from there, I would oppose the granting of the petition, because I believe the depot is where the interest of the public require it to be, and it ought to be kept where it is. But that question was not discussed, and they declined to discuss it, as they said that was foreign to the purpose of the bill. It is a matter over which Congress has absolute control. As stated by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. MOORE] the provision in the bill which locates them there reserves the right to Congress to alter, amend, or modify the act, and under that I apprehend Congress has the supreme power over them; but it is not a matter pertinent to be put into this bill, nor to be discussed in connection therewith. When that question comes before the House then let every gentleman act as he believes his duty to be in the premises, but let us not anticipate it.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PETERS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who announced the approval of acts and a joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 8555) to authorize the President of the United States to cause certain lands heretofore withdrawn from market for reservoir purposes to be restored to the public domain subject to entry under the homestead law, with certain restrictions;

BALTIMORE AND POTOMAC RAILROAD.

Mr. SPINOLA. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House was in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPINOLA. I beg the Speaker's pardon. The committee rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Simply to receive a message.

The committee then resumed its session with Mr. DUNNELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] has four minutes.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I have no hesitancy in saying that I shall vote for this bill. I shall do this because I believe that the people as well as the railroad company demand increased railroad facilities in Washington.

I have never owned a share of railroad stock, and never have had the slightest pecuniary interest in a road. My experience, my reading, and my surroundings may have prejudiced me against railroad corporations in a measure, but I recognize the fact that railroads are a necessity to great cities, and that all the accommodations necessary to transport passengers, freight, and supplies are imperative, and should be given in the interests of the people. I go no further. Forfeited land grants should be returned to the nation, and all railroads should be held to a strict accountability. This bill gives the Baltimore and Potomac Company no more privileges than are given to railroads in every city of the United States. Side-tracks leading to manufactories, to lumber-yards, to coal-yards, and to machine-shops are found in cities North and South. They aid in the development of said cities. Freight depots and freight facilities are necessary not only to the railroad but to the welfare of the city through which the road runs.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will my friend allow me to ask a question right there?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will, although I have only four minutes' time.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman point to a city in this country which allows a railroad to cut it in two in the middle and go through the heart of the city with its side-tracks?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will answer my friend by a comparison. Take the city of New York. Compare her railroad facilities with those of Washington. The Legislature of New York gave a railroad permission to close certain streets of the city to build a depot for the accommodation of the people. The Legislature also gave a railroad the privilege of erecting a freight depot upon the largest park in the lower part of the city. The park itself was entirely wiped out.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But does she not run her tracks for miles under ground?

Mr. CUMMINGS. She runs tracks from Laight street to Spuyten Duyvil on the public streets through the most thickly populated portion of the city.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But they run for miles under ground.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Not in this case. Here they run for miles along the streets. The tunnel is in another part of the city. New York sets an example for the city of Washington. She knows that increased railroad facilities benefits her people and increases her commercial prosperity. While miles of her streets are in use by railroads, you make an outcry because of a few switches running into manufactories, lumber-yards, and elsewhere here in Washington. There are scores of these switches in New York. You find them in every city in the United States—Birmingham, Buffalo, Cleveland, New Haven, Providence, and in every manufacturing city. Chicago is gridironed with them. Why, it is such railroad facilities that really develop the life of a city. In one street in Philadelphia there are over seventy such switches. The more manufactories the more work for the people, and the more switches the more manufactories.

Now, as to facilities for freighting. You might as well refuse a line of steamers running from Liverpool to New York wharf facilities as to refuse a railroad permission to acquire land for a freight depot.

Mr. MILLIKEN. You do not find anybody walking on the water to be run over by ships.

Mr. CUMMINGS. This bill asks for no more than other cities grant. As to injury to your parks, it is nonsense. Your parks are not and will not be injured. Washington has more parks than any three cities in the United States to-day, and you have already voted $1,200,000 of the Government money to make another one. If you are so sensitive as to your parks, why not tear up all the railroad tracks and turn the whole city into a park? Railroad facilities are needed far more than a Rock Creek Park. I speak not on behalf of the Pennsylvania Railroad or of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company. It is on behalf of the city of Washington that I speak. The needs of the railroad company are the needs of the city. The price of your vegetables depends upon your railroad facilities; the price of your lumber depends upon them; the price of your coal depends upon them; and the price of a thousand and one products of commerce and of mechanical enterprises brought here depends upon them. These are self-evident facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will now be read by sections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the construction, maintenance, and use for railway purposes of the turnouts and sidings of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, now extending from its line between the Anacostia or Eastern Branch of the Potomac River and the Long Bridge, in the city of Washington, into the several squares of ground known and designated on the plat of the city of Washington as follows: Square 737; square 739; square 695; square northwest of square 695; square west of square 695; square north of square 697; square east of square 642; square north of square 642; square 641; square 536; square 493; square south of square 463; square 464; square 596; square 507; and square south of square 267; and the use and maintenance of its shops, stations, and other structures now erected thereon is hereby legalized and confirmed; said tracks to be maintained in such manner as will least obstruct the public streets, avenues, or alleys on which said tracks are laid, and to be under the general supervision of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment of Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania, was read, as follows:

On page 2, line 21, after the word "seven," strike out down to and including the word "confirmed," in line 23.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I wish the petitions which I forward to the Clerk's desk to be read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned petitioners, who are engaged in active business in the city of Washington, respectfully ask that the bill now pending in the House of Representatives known as the Atkinson bill, which provides for additional railroad facilities for handling freight in said city, be passed.

A most urgent necessity exists for such additional facilities to accommodate the daily business of the city. All commercial interests are greatly embarrassed for want of them, and we think that if the said bill shall become a law such embarrassment will be relieved and with less inconvenience than by any other plan.

GOLDSBOROUGH, N. C., June 13, 1890.

We, the undersigned shippers of truck, lumber, and other products, feel a great interest in the passage of the bill known as the Atkinson bill, now pending before Congress. We have heretofore suffered serious loss in consequence of the block of freight-cars at Washington City. This bill gives authority to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to purchase more space and legalize the sidings now used to accommodate our Southern business for Washington and other Northern points. Now we, your petitioners, humbly ask our Representatives in Congress to do all they can to aid the passage of this bill and thereby encourage the infant industries of marketing truck, lumber, and other products in Washington and Northern markets. Give us room for the commerce of the country.

Edmundson, F. H. Piedmont, A. J. Shannon, L. J. Galloway, K. Galloway, A. J. Galloway.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. This amendment that I offer is intended to remove from the bill the expression—

And the use and maintenance of its shops, stations, and other structures now erected thereon is hereby legalized and confirmed.

This expression, it appears, was objectionable. It was not essential to the purposes of the bill, and I therefore ask that it be stricken out. The section then will simply authorize the construction, maintenance, and use of the turnouts and sidings now extending from the line of the road to the several squares of ground known and designated on the plat of Washington as follows, and then come the squares that are designated.

Criticism was indulged in by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUR], chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, because of the ambiguity of the expression "turnouts and sidings," he saying they meant different things, and that a turnout was something parallel to a road, as I understood him; but this section limits these turnouts and sidings entirely to those tracks which go to the squares in question. It legalizes no other turnouts or sidings, but only those which are intended for this one definite purpose that is fully disclosed by the bill. I take it that with this amendment every ambiguous expression of this section will have been removed and an interpretation of it such as a school-boy might make would indicate that there is no trickery that a railroad lawyer could conceal within it; that it is straight forward and direct, expressing its purpose clearly and without any need of interpretation.

Mr. MOREY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me for a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I now offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, has my time expired?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has one minute remaining.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Then I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, who desires to ask me a question.

Mr. MOREY. I desire to ask the gentleman if this amendment is adopted whether or not the section would not be meaningless and without any operative words whatever?

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I propose to offer an amendment, to insert in lieu of the words stricken out, "are hereby authorized, and;" so that it will read:

Are hereby authorized, and said tracks to be maintained in such a manner as will least obstruct the public streets.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to offer the following amendment: In line 27, after the word "seven," insert "is hereby authorized; but Congress may at any time revoke said authority."

Mr. Chairman, the object I have in proposing the amendment is to meet this situation: It appears that on a supposed authority in the District commissioners heretofore, the company have located its tracks by virtue of the permission given by the commissioners, which permission contained a provision reserving the right on the part of the commissioners to revoke the privilege of running these tracks designated in this first section of the bill.

These tracks referred to in this section are actually being used by the company at this time, as I said, upon the supposed authority existing in the District commissioners. A question as to that authority has recently been made in the courts and they have held that the commissioners had not the authority. The object of the amendment is to do what it has been supposed was legally done heretofore by the commissioners of the District, to wit, allow this company to lay their tracks there, but to reserve, as the commissioners did, the right of Congress at any time to revoke that authority. Now, there is a general provision at the close of the bill providing that Congress may modify or repeal the bill. Sometimes there has been some difficulty about obtaining an agreement as to the exact meaning of such section, and therefore I offer to insert this specific provision here, which leaves the purpose of Congress, if this shall be adopted, without any room for criticism at all; and it seems to me it ought to be placed here.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman seems to be very plausible, and I have not the slightest doubt that it is made with the most honest purpose, but the objection to it is this, that when you have once by act of Congress allowed this great corporation to get hold of these franchises the chances of ever recovering them back amounts to almost nothing at all, no matter how or what opportunities for revocation you may provide. As evidence of that fact, look at the case of the depot on Sixth street. As has been stated in this House, and has not been denied, a simple privilege of sending their cars across by the impetus of the train without any engines is what was originally granted. But now they have taken that reservation for all the purposes they desire, and, notwithstanding what my friend from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] may say on that subject, I say that the friends of the railroad, whether they be officials of the road or not, have given it to be understood in the most explicit manner that they do not intend to get out of that place until they are driven out.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman pardon a correction?

Mr. MILLIKEN. It is not a correction, because what I have stated is correct.

Mr. HEARD. I want you to correct your own statement for your own sake. You say that the original grant restricted the company to sending cars across the reservation without the use of engines.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I said that it was so stated here and had not been contradicted.

Mr. HEARD. It is contradicted by the act itself, which was reprinted lately on motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, now I hope the gentleman will allow me to go on. My friend from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] is kind enough to say that nothing more is proposed in this bill than is granted in every city in this country. I tell him it is not so in the cities in his own State. Let any railroad company attempt to put tracks across from the East River to the Hudson, right through the city of New York, cutting off one-sixth of the population on one side, and leaving the other five-sixths on the other side, let that company put down four or five tracks through there, with provision for freight depots, and perhaps for engine-houses and machine-shops, and you would hear such a remonstrance against it from the citizens of New York as would be heard around the globe.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The New York Central Railroad Company runs a track from the Lighthouse street depot in New York clean to Spuyten Duyvil, cutting off in some places three or four blocks from the Hudson River front.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I am not so well acquainted with Spuyten Duyvil as my friend from New York may be; I do not dwell in such a region; but I know that the Hudson River Railroad has been made to run its track for miles underground in New York City, and that on top of its tunnel are good streets and fine residences, as a result of the company being compelled to do there just what we ask this company to do in Washington.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will say to the gentleman that that is in another part of the city.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I rise for the purpose of offering an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment which is already pending.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Is it not in order to move to strike out the last word?

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. That can only be done by way of an amendment to an amendment, but there is already one such amendment pending.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Two amendments are in order.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a point of order. My point is that a substitute for a section is not in order where there is an amendment pending. The friends of the bill have a right to first perfect the section.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I thought the amendment had been adopted. I withdraw the substitute for the time being.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia be again read.

The amendment of Mr. BLOUNT was again read.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I have no objection to that.

The amendment of Mr. BLOUNT was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] as amended by the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

The amendment of Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania, as amended was adopted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the first section of the bill as amended.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Amend House bill 8243 by inserting immediately after the enacting clause, as section 1 of the bill, the following:

"That the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall, on or before the 1st day of January, 1894, remove its tracks running north and south on Sixth street west, abandon its station and depot now located on the public reservation at Sixth and B streets northwest in the city of Washington, and in lieu thereof the said company shall, under the supervision of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, construct and maintain, at the intersection of Virginia and Maryland avenues, upon land described as squares 484, 485, 410, and 385, or any part thereof, to be secured by purchase or condemnation, south of said intersection, a passenger station of such extent, architectural design, and arrangements as may be found advisable and necessary. That there shall be paid by the United States to the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, for the depot building and the bridge on the public reservation, such reasonable sum, or the value thereof, as may be agreed upon by and between said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company and the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and in case of failure of the said company and commissioners to agree upon the sum so to be paid, the said commissioners shall apply, by petition, to the supreme court of the District of Columbia sitting in general term, which is hereby given authority and jurisdiction in the premises; and the said court shall, upon such petition, provide for proper notice and hearing of the said company and commissioners in the premises, and shall have power to determine in such manner as it may deem proper the price so to be paid as aforesaid; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, when it shall have vacated its station on Sixth street, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as is herein provided for when the same shall have been ascertained, determined, and adjudged according to the provisions herein."

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I desire to make a point of order against the proposed substitute. I submit that it is not germane to the bill, and I cite as an authority the latter clause of the seventh paragraph of Rule XVI:

And no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

The same rule applies to a substitute as to an amendment, a substitute being practically an amendment. It was decided in the Forty-eighth Congress that a motion to commit with instructions to report a certain amendment is not in order if the proposed amendment is not germane or in order to the pending bill.

The bill presented here is upon a single subject—upon the subject of turnouts and sidings for the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad. It involves nothing whatever but an increase in freight facilities to be obtained by the legalization of sidings to certain lots of ground which are indicated in the bill, and the additional power is given to the company to condemn land and lay additional sidings to the land so condemned.

The bill goes no further than that. The subject of the bill is not the general subject of railroads, but is confined within the narrow limits I have stated. Let me illustrate. A bill granting a pension to John Brown might be introduced here. The subject of the bill is a pension; and it would not be in order under the rule, as I take it, to add to such a bill a clause giving to John Brown a certain sum as bounty. This bill, then, relating only to this narrow subject of which I speak, may not be modified by a substitute, or an amendment in the nature of a substitute, enlarging its scope as this proposition contemplates. What does the gentleman propose? To change the location of the road? He proposes to do more than that—to locate a depot, to remove another depot or station, and to make an appropriation. All these things are foreign to the subject-matter of the bill now before the Committee of the Whole; and therefore I submit the substitute is excluded by the rule I have read, which forbids the entertaining of a proposition on a subject different from that under consideration.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania would be very good if it had any application; but the difficulty is that he has made a speech which suits the pension case, but does not suit the case of this railroad company. What is the proposition in this bill? It is in the first section, to confirm the Baltimore and Potomac Company in the use and occupancy of certain portions of the city of Washington. In addition to that, it proposes to give the company the right to condemn other portions of the property of the people of the District. The proposition I make is that the company shall remove their tracks to a certain part of the District, and that they shall then have the right to condemn other squares in the District. Thus the difference between the gentleman's bill and my amendment is that the bill proposes to confirm the company in their rights where they have already laid their tracks and to authorize them to condemn certain squares which the bill specifies; while my amendment requires them to remove certain tracks and to condemn certain other squares which are specified. For the gentleman to assert that these two things are not akin one to the other, and that the amendment is not germane, shows—I will not say a want of good judgment on his part—but it shows the extremities to which the advocates of this bill are going in order to put it through this House without the slightest opportunity of making any amendments to it for the preservation of the rights of the people of this District.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Chairman, in rising to support the amendment offered by the honorable gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], I do so convinced that the subject under discussion is one of the very gravest and most important. The granting of such a franchise to the railroad company as this bill calls for is of very serious importance to the people of the city of Washington, and a measure that we, the representatives of the people, should meet boldly and intelligently.

The privilege here asked for by the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad is to extend their tracks over and along the surface of the streets and avenues—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will please confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. QUINN. I think that I am confining myself closely to the main question. But if the Chair will kindly indulge me I will soon return to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

One of my colleagues from the city of New York has stated that a railroad runs for miles through the streets of that city, and from the manner of his statement we might take it for granted that this was done with the concurrence and approval of the people. Such, Mr. Chairman, is not the fact, for, living on the line of that railroad, as I do, I can assure you that as my friend, General SPINOLA, has told you, so it is. The whole people are up in arms against allowing the railroad there. I know as a positive fact that not less than 40,000 residents along the line of that railroad in the city of New York are protesting against it every day; and all because it is allowed to continue to use the streets and avenues of that city.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. QUINN. Most certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is it not a fact that one of the Senators from the State of New York advocated striking from the river and harbor bill (and succeeded in accomplishing it) all appropriations for the improvement of the Harlem River upon the ground of the superior necessity of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad?

Mr. QUINN. In answer to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], I will say that I regret very much that the appropriation referred to by him was stricken out, thereby retarding one of the greatest improvements now going on on this continent. This is the railroad which uses and controls the streets and avenues to which I have referred. Why, then, should I not regret the powerful influence exercised by railroad companies, not alone in the city of New York, but also in the city of Washington. It is against this influence here that I protest, and urge my colleagues on the floor of this House to oppose also.

I see no reason, Mr. Chairman, why that portion of the city of Washington mentioned in this bill should be turned over for all time to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. To permit this would establish here a condition of things exactly similar to that which we have on the west side of the city of New York, where for miles through one of the finest and most populous avenues of the city the railroad trains, both passenger and freight, are going night and day, destroying life and property, and all despite the protests of forty or fifty thousand people residing along that line. Yes, fifty thousand of the most respectable people in that great city protesting, and yet the power and influence of that company is so great that they laugh at the women made widows and the children made fatherless by the company's engines of death.

I assure you, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this House—for I know of what I speak—that there is at least one human being, it may be a father, a mother, or one of those dear little ones, who a moment before banished the care from the brow of a parent, sacrificed to the greed of that corporation every week. Then, I ask you, are we going to establish a similar condition of things here in the city of Washington? Be careful, gentlemen, and do not grant privileges of such a sweeping character to this company. If you do the time will come, and at no distant date, when the Baltimore and Potomac Company, otherwise known as the great Pennsylvania Railroad, will have such hold upon, not alone the property, but the rights of the citizens of the Capital of this nation, that Congress, with all its so-called protective clauses, might find it difficult to restore to the people again. In view of these facts, Mr. Chairman, I hope that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] will not be sustained.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PAYSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 8391) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, etc., for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked thereon, and had appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. GORMAN as managers on the part of the Senate.

Also, that the Senate agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House requesting the President to return to the House the bill (H. R. 5702) granting a pension to Ann Bryan.

Also, that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested, namely: A bill (S. 3714) to apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and mechanic arts established under the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862.

BALTIMORE AND POTOMAC RAILROAD COMPANY.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to address the Chair on the point of order alone.

The status of the case is that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] offered an amendment, which has been read, as a substitute for the first section of the bill. Against it the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] makes the point of order that it is not germane to the bill. If the Chair will have the kindness to read the title of the bill he will find it to be as follows:

A bill supplementary to an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in the District of Columbia."

Some years ago Congress passed the act which this bill proposes to amend, and the bill is expressly declared to be supplementary to that original act.

There was nothing in the original act which gave to the Pennsylvania Company, now controlling the Baltimore and Potomac road, the right to lay turnouts or sidings from the streets into the adjacent squares. If I am correctly advised, and if I am not the gentleman from Pennsylvania will please correct the statement, the act to which this is supplementary was the one which gave to the company the right to lay its main tracks through Maryland and Virginia avenues. I believe that to be a correct statement. My friend assents.

That act did not give to the company the right to lay any sidings at all into abutting squares, which it is proposed in this bill by the first section to give to them. The original act did not give to the company the right to maintain any line of railway except upon the two avenues designated by it; nor did the original act give to the company any right to enter or condemn either adjacent property or any other property.

This bill is presented by the committee under the title that I have just read for the purpose, first, of legalizing certain illegal turnouts into adjacent property; second, for the purpose of enabling the company to maintain sidings and main lines in other streets than those covered by the original act; and third, and especially, to enable them to exercise the power of eminent domain as to a great many different blocks therein specified. So, if the Chair please, there is a direct statement in the title of the bill as to what it purports to do. It purports to amend the original act to which this bill is supplementary; and it specifies in three different sections three different things which it proposes to give this company the right to do.

I submit, therefore, the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina is as fully germane, is as precisely relevant to the lines of the proposed bill as any amendment can be that anybody could frame or offer. And for the gentleman to endeavor to prevent the House with a point of order from saying to that company when it comes here, not simply asking that which it has had for years—the power granted by the original act—but when it comes here asking to be relieved from the position and penalties of a criminal before the courts, because the court has declared that it is indictable for the exercise of illegal power; I say when it comes here asking to be clothed with the greatest power any sovereign can wield, that of eminent domain, the power to seize private property (and only for public use) and dedicate it to this private corporation, under these circumstances, for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to attempt to prevent the House from passing judgment upon this substitute by means of a point of order, seems to me to be one of those things which the Chair will not sustain; first, because it is wrong in itself, and secondly, because the amendment is precisely germane to the title, purpose, scope, and effect of the proposed bill.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from Kansas not know that there is a bill pending before the District committee—

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Why did you not report it?

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Because it has not yet received the majority of the votes of the committee.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Ah, because it was not a thing that the Pennsylvania Company wanted brought before this House.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Not only the company, but thousands of the citizens of Washington did not want it brought before the House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. We are not legislating simply for the company, nor for the people of Washington, but for the people of the United States.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. We are the Legislature of the District of Columbia, in session to-day under the Constitution, which gives to Congress the exclusive right of legislation for this District. That is what we are here for.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, a single word upon the point of order.

Replying to the somewhat vociferous reasoning of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] I will say that this first section as it stands has nothing whatever to do with the property of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad north of the intersection of Virginia and Maryland avenues. That part which runs from that intersection north to the Sixth street station is not included in this bill in any way or manner. The substitute offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] only has to do with that part which is not included in this bill. In other words, not only is the subject different, but the properties to be dealt with are entirely different and distinct.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, a word or two on this question on the point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania who makes the point of order seems to predicate it, so far as I can judge from his argument, wholly upon the supposition that the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina is not germane to the first section of the bill. He did not so state in terms, but that was the substance of the argument which he offered to the Chair. I think that is not the test of the question. The question presented to the Chair is whether or not this amendment is germane to the bill as it stands as a whole. Now, what is the meaning of the word "germane?" It is that it must be within the general scope and effect and purpose of the bill. What is the general scope and purpose of this bill as it now stands? It relates simply to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad. It relates to its turnouts, to its sidings as they now stand, as they propose to make them, and also to the condemnation of other property for the purposes of the railroad. How far does the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina extend them? I will admit that if the amendment was offered here to this section to fix railroad rates, either passenger or freight, of this railroad company—if that were sought to be attached to this bill—that it might not be germane, but this company now is proposing by one section of this bill to acquire additional ground for railroad purposes. Clearly a part of this amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina is for the same purpose. Taking it then, Mr. Chairman, as a whole, it seems to me that this amendment is within the general scope and purpose of the bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Pennsylvania makes the point that this applies to an entirely different piece of ground. Why, only the other day we amended a bill coming from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and in the amendment took an entirely different piece of land from that which had been provided in the original bill, and no point of order was raised against it.

Mr. BINGHAM. That was in conference committee.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I think if my friend from Pennsylvania and my friend from New Jersey were to state the absolute truth as it is away down deep in their consciences in this matter, they would say, not that this amendment is not germane to the bill, but that it is not germane to the purposes of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Who made you the keeper of my conscience?

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. The gentleman can keep his conscience and I will keep mine. Any assertion of that sort, so far as I am concerned, is utterly without foundation, and I repudiate it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. So far as the gentleman is concerned, I do not mean any invidious reference to him, but I go far enough to say that I thank God I have not his conscience to keep.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. And so do I, for it would be poorly kept. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. With the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I wish to ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] who has cited a precedent to the Chair upon this question, whether the bill he refers to, containing the change in the location, did not come from a report of a committee of conference.

Mr. BINGHAM. Of course it did.

Mr. MILLIKEN. It came back to the House with an amendment from the Senate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And was agreed to finally in committee of conference of the two Houses.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The change in location was made by the committee.

A MEMBER. It was not done in Committee of the Whole at all.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The bill came back to the House with an amendment by the Senate. It then went to a committee of conference.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And then the change in location was agreed to.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The final location was agreed to by the committee of conference.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I merely wish to send up to the Chairman for his information the bill (H. R. 8903) which is now pending in the Committee on the District of Columbia. I wish to say that it contains almost the exact proposition that is contained in the amendment. I refer to this, although I am aware that the old rule on the subject is abolished.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] is not in order. He might have been in order under the old rule, but not under the present rule.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the Chair understand what the gentleman from Pennsylvania is saying? He calls the attention of the Chair to the fact that the same matter which is sought to be put in here as an amendment is pending in a bill now before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is not in order in debate upon the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. That was the old rule.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask that the question be taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not regard the amendment as germane to the purposes and objects of the subject-matter of the bill under consideration, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I heard some one make a motion to lay the appeal on the table.

The question was put; and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Division.

Mr. PAYSON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. There seems to be a misunderstanding as to what the precise question is, and I will ask the Chairman to be kind enough to state it again to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decided that the substitute offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] was not germane to the subject-matter of the bill under consideration, and therefore sustained the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON]; thereupon the gentleman from South Carolina appealed from the decision of the Chair, and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

A MEMBER. Tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON].

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 31.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the second section.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move to strike out the first section of the bill.

Mr. HILL. On that I want to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HILL]. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. HILL. Five minutes.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to be thought by some members of the committee that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and adopted, striking out parts of lines 21, 22, and 23, leaves this section of the bill comparatively harmless. I do not agree with that. In my judgment the section is almost if not quite as obnoxious now as with those lines in. It is true the southern part of this city—

Mr. McCLAMMY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. I desire to hear what the gentleman says, and it is impossible on account of the confusion.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. HILL. The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company is located there in the southern part of the city, as gentlemen all are aware. It has a legal status there to some extent, and it is illegally there to a much greater extent.

It has a right of way under old statutes of the United States running back to 1867, under which they are entitled to one or at most two tracks there in the southern part of the city across certain Government reservations and parks or parts of parks. They have extended their side-tracks and turnouts until there is a perfect network of railroad tracks, eight and ten, and in some places as many as a dozen in number, occupying a portion of a public park without authority.

In the several reservations, in whole or in part, as I have heard, they have now over 22,000 feet of the reservation of the people of the United States. What does this first section propose to do? It proposes to legalize these sidings and turnouts, as they are in the first section of the bill. It finds them there illegally, and then the first section proposes that they may hold them for all time, or until such time as this bill is amended or repealed. That is the effect. By voting for this first section you will vote to retain this railroad company in its present usurpation, because that is as mild a term as can be used in characterizing its seizure upon lands not belonging to itself, but to the United States. In other words, gentlemen, you are asked by voting for this section to anchor the Pennsylvania Railroad Company where it is and on the ground that it now occupies in large part by usurpation. It is simply a squatter there. It went there without any right; under color of right, it may be, by permission granted by the District authorities, but that has been decided to be illegal, and you are now asked to legalize this usurpation. That will be the effect of a negative vote upon this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MOORE, of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, in order that the House may have an opportunity to vote upon such amendments to this bill as will perfect the bill, and as that opportunity is not now presented, I move that the bill (H. R. 8243) be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be recommended to the Committee on the District of Columbia with instructions to report the same with the following as a substitute for said bill:

Amend House bill 8243 by inserting immediately after the enacting clause as section 1 of the bill the following:

"That the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall, on or before the 1st day of January, 1894, remove its tracks running north and south on Sixth street west, abandon its station and depot now located on the public reservation at Sixth and B streets northwest, in the city of Washington, and in lieu thereof the said company shall, under the supervision of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, construct and maintain, at the intersection of Virginia and Maryland avenues upon land described as squares 464, 434, 410, and 396, or any part thereof, to be secured by purchase or condemnation south of said intersection, a passenger station of such extent, architectural design, and arrangements as may be found advisable and necessary.

That there shall be paid by the United States to the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company for the depot building and the bridge on the public reservation such reasonable sum, or the value thereof, as may be agreed upon by and between said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company and the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and in case of failure of the said company and commissioners to agree upon the sum so to be paid, the said commissioners shall apply, by petition, to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting in general term, which is hereby given authority and jurisdiction in the premises; and the said court shall, upon such petition, provide for proper notice and hearing of the said company and commissioners in the premises; and shall have power to determine in such manner as it may deem proper the price so to be paid as aforesaid; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, when it shall have vacated its station on Sixth street, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as is herein provided for when the same shall have been ascertained, determined, and adjudged according to the provisions herein.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I hope if any instructions are given it will be an instruction to report a bill for a union depot in Washington. That will relieve all this difficulty. It ought to be done now before the railroads get established in various parts of the city and own the property, after which you can not move them.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, I suppose I can speak on the amendment which I have proposed, striking out this section. I stated the other day, and I desire to reiterate, that I have no antagonism to this railroad company, and no desire to prevent it from getting whatever facilities are necessary for the transaction of the transportation business of the people of this District; but from a somewhat careful examination of this question I am satisfied that the railroad is asking for a good deal more than there is any real necessity for, and that, under the plea of serving the people of this city, and the people of the Southern States, particularly with reference to freight and matters of that kind, they are trying to get from this Congress, if matters go on at the present rate, facilities and privileges which the members of this House would never consent to grant if they understood the real situation. I made a motion to strike out that section, not because I desired to see these gentlemen prosecuted, but simply because they have done that which is illegal and unjust to the people of this District by occupying their streets, and putting down upon them their main tracks and their sidings. They have done that in violation of law. Whether they knew it was in violation of law or not, of course I can not say, but now they come here and ask Congress to confirm them in that violation of the law of this country; yet they are unwilling that any concession whatever shall be made to the people of this District, or that any precautions shall be taken which will protect the rights of the people in the future.

The proposition which I submitted, and which was ruled out by the Chair—and I bow to his decision and to that of the majority of the committee—that proposition, I say with all due respect to the Chair, is just as germane to this bill as a man's head is germane to his body. [Laughter.] There is no question about that in my mind. This railroad, which has come here against the wishes of the people of this District and has gone upon the public property of the United States under a solemn promise that it would not put down more than two tracks and that the whistle of an engine should never be heard on that public reservation, comes here now and musters its forces in opposition to the exercise of the plain right and duty which we as legislators have to guard the public property of the United States. And what is their plea? Their plea is that they got that property twenty years ago and that they are going to hold on to it. They got that property on account of the opposition which existed here at that time to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and they got it when the Baltimore and Potomac Company was a poor corporation and when it had not begun to do the great business that it now does. They did not pay a cent for it when they acquired it, and they have not paid a cent for rent of it since that time, and yet gentlemen upon this floor who are willing to vote to let the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company occupy that property would not vote to put a public building upon it for the accommodation of the people of this District.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that the proposition to recommit this bill, as a matter of right as well as a matter of parliamentary law, ought not to come until the bill shall have been perfected in Committee of the Whole. That is the time to make the motion to recommit with whatever instruction the House may at that time feel disposed to give upon the bill as then presented. Several amendments have been read this morning which can not fail to make the bill much more acceptable to every member of this House, because the purpose and effect of them will be to remove most if not all of the objections which have been urged against it.

One word with regard to the remarks of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], who I know always desires to be fair. He says that this railroad came here in opposition to the wishes of the people of this District and occupied this ground upon a promise that no engine should run in there. When the pending bill was before us the other day there was a good deal of discussion about that question, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] moved that the act under which the railroad was permitted to enter upon the reservation should be reprinted. That act was reprinted, and it is now in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and it shows what was done by Congress in that behalf, and I maintain that there is not a word in the act limiting or restraining this company from bringing their locomotives across the reservation. In fact, the purpose of the act was to authorize the company to bring its locomotives and cars in there, and their cars could not be brought in and out of the depot without, because even if you could, by the momentum of an incoming train, send your cars in without a locomotive, how would you get them out again? You might get a car in in that way, but you certainly could not get it out. [Laughter.] But in fact, Mr. Chairman, there is no such proposition in the act, and it is absurd to talk about it. This corporation came here eighteen years ago. There are many people who were then anxious to get the railroad to come here who now oppose giving them the facilities which are needed; and, on the other hand, there are those like myself who would not wish them to go away from their present location even if they desired to do so, believing that it is better for the public interest and the public convenience that they shall stay where they are. Now, what were the conditions of the act under which they came here? It required them to pay the damages arising from the laying of the tracks on Sixth street, and they paid them. It required also that they should take the place of the District of Columbia in being responsible for certain damages due to citizens, and they did that. It required the company to buy out certain squatters then on this ground claiming rights, and it did that.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield—

Mr. HEARD. I can not give way to the gentleman from Kansas. We have had enough of Kansas cyclones, on general principles, to-day. [Laughter.] One word more. This corporation is required by that act to pay taxes on its property, and that money goes into the school fund of this District, and it now amounts, as I am advised, to $3,500 per annum. They also rented a part of an old sewer, an old canal, which they have covered over and used as a storage place for their cars, and they pay a rental there of $3,500 to this District for doing an act largely benefiting the public. This railroad is in its present location by act of Congress. As to how that act was obtained I know just as much as do the gentlemen who have discussed it here, and that is absolutely nothing. But I will not indulge the presumption that it was corruptly obtained, or that that act of Congress did not express the public will at the time. As to the question whether the passenger depot shall be removed or not, let that be reserved for an occasion when this House shall have opportunity to consider it deliberately. In conclusion I want to call attention to the fact that some of the very people who denounce the commissioners for undertaking to give this railroad company permission to occupy two or three squares of ground, and who oppose the provision of the bill empowering the commissioners to authorize the condemnation of ground, are in favor of having the commissioners negotiate with the railroad company in regard to four or five hundred thousand dollars' worth of property on the Mall, and that the Government shall foot the bill agreed to by said commissioners and the railroad company.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Is the gentleman from Georgia willing to yield for a motion that the committee do now rise?

Mr. McCLAMMY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know the status of this matter. I understand that the pending motion is to recommit the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has the floor.

Mr. BLOUNT. As I understand the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina it is to recommit this bill with instructions to report it back with a substitute, the purport of which is a requirement that the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall remove their passenger depot from where it is now located.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is in error.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman from New Hampshire made that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to recommit was made by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. BLOUNT. And that is pending?

The CHAIRMAN. It is, and the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to strike out the first section is also pending.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLOUNT. I should like to know the parliamentary situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has permitted the debate to go on largely upon the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina; but the pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire, inasmuch as it takes precedence.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CASWELL. I submit that a motion to commit or recommit a bill is not in order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BLOUNT. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLAND. I rose to a parliamentary inquiry some time ago, but could not get the attention of the Chair.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope that these observations will be withheld for a few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Do I understand that the Chair entertains a motion to recommit while we are in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is that when the committee shall rise it recommend to the House that the bill be recommitted with instructions.

Mr. BLAND. I want at the proper time to offer an amendment to that motion.

Mr. McCLAMMY. I make the point of order that the Committee of the Whole can not recommit.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, can I proceed now?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I wish to make a point of order against the motion to recommit: that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late to make that point of order now. The motion has been debated for ten or fifteen minutes. The gentleman from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I wish now to move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is on the floor, and entitled to proceed.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania in charge of the bill if he wishes the committee to rise.

Mr. BLAND. Before that is done, I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the motion to recommit with instructions.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow this amendment to be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] will be considered as pending.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to have it read, so that the committee may know what it is.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia with instructions to report back a bill providing a plan for the establishment of a union depot in the city of Washington, with the privilege of reporting at any time.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I make a point of order against that amendment, and I renew my motion that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. I offer that as an amendment to the proposition to recommit with instructions.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order was raised against the amendment and has been sustained by the Chair. The gentleman from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLOUNT. I yielded for the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DUNNELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having under consideration the bill (H. R. 8243) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in the District of Columbia," had come to no resolution thereon.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORROW. I desire to submit a report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 9 and 10 to the bill (H. R. 7160) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

W. W. MORROW,
JOSEPH D. BAYERS,
Managers on the part of the House.
H. L. DAVES,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. MORROW. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the House adjourn.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (S. 1) to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies; which the Speaker signed the same.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DALZELL, for five days.

The motion of Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania, was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following resolutions were introduced and referred as follows:

By Mr. THOMAS:

Resolved, That on Wednesday, June 25, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the House shall proceed to the consideration of bills favorably reported by the Committee on War Claims, to be called up in such order as the committee may direct, to the exclusion of all other business for that day, and at 6 o'clock p. m. of said day and on Thursday, June 26, the House shall take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., said evening sessions to be set apart for the consideration exclusively of bills favorably reported by the said committee to which no objection is offered.

to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. OATES:

Resolved, That Saturday, July 5, immediately after the reading and approval of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of the bill (H. SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 24, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting estimates of additional appropriations for Howard University; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Republican central committee of New Mexico, praying for the imposition of a duty on imported lead ore; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FARWELL presented a petition of certain importers of leather gloves, of New York, Boston, and Chicago, praying for certain amendments to the McKinley tariff bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of druggists of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 279, in relation to the drug trade and proprietary medicines; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Elgin, Ill., praying for the passage of a law prohibiting the mailing of immoral publications; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. ALLEN presented a petition of 16 members of the Society of Christian Endeavor of Pomeroy, Wash., praying for the passage of an act prohibiting the importation of liquors from one State or Territory into another contrary to the laws thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Traders' Council of the city of Spokane Falls, Wash., praying for the insertion of a provision in all Government contracts for public work limiting a day's labor to eight hours; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions of Farmers' Alliances of Palouse City, Guy, Uniontown, Poplar Grove, Johnson, Walla Walla, West Liberty, and Wylloe, in the State of Washington, praying for the passage of what are known as the Butterworth option bill and the Conger compound-lard bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PETTIGREW presented sundry petitions signed by 326 citizens of the State of South Dakota, praying for the passage of a bill making it unlawful to import intoxicating liquors from any State or Territory of the United States into any other State or Territory contrary to the laws thereof; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Redstone Farmers' Alliance of Miner County, South Dakota, praying for the passage of Senate bill 2716, appropriating $6,000,000 for a deep-water harbor at Galveston, Tex.; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Big Lions Farmers' Alliance, of Sioux Falls, S. Dak., praying Congress to pass laws to prevent speculation by dealers in options in farm products; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of a convention of farmers, held at Minnehaha County, South Dakota, praying Congress to pass certain laws for the relief of the farmers of the Northwest; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HOAR. I have been requested by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], who is obliged to be absent at the funeral of a friend, to present in his behalf a memorial of the New York Produce Exchange in regard to the relation between the Harlem River Canal and the various proposed methods of rapid transit. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I present a large number of petitions signed by very many people, residents of Missouri, praying for the free coinage of silver. I move that the petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I present a memorial of certain colored people, of a representative character, on the subject of the improvement of the Mississippi River. I think I have never asked that any memorial which did not emanate from the authority of a State should be printed in the RECORD, but this is a somewhat unique memorial and deals with two very considerable problems, the incidental one of which is the improvement of the Mississippi River. I ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD without being read.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the President and Congress of the United States:

We, the undersigned members of the various Republican county committees of the Mississippi Valley, respectfully represent that there are about 20,000,000 acres of land having a most fertile and inexhaustible soil lying on either side of the Mississippi River which has been, is now, and will continue to be subject to destructive floods occurring in a greater or less degree annually, but which might be made the equal of any, if not the most valuable, section of these United States in point of productions, and possibly superior to any in the known world by the action of the Federal Government, provided this subject is properly considered and appropriate legislation provided for its redemption.

Much has been written and spoken for and against the feasibility or practicability of redeeming this important section of country from the visitation of these annual overflows, and, owing to the imperfect data that have heretofore been available upon which to predicate correct conclusions, the public mind is still undecided as to the practicability or otherwise of protecting this section from floods.

A brief statement of the facts upon which the many conflicting ideas have been based is perhaps necessary in order to have anything like a correct appreciation of the reasons for the many diverse opinions which now exist upon this important subject.

In the first place, it is necessary to state that up to this time there has been no plan of action which was supported by any power adequate to supply either the thought or means necessary to comprehend, elaborate, or carry out any plan on a sufficiently large scale to even give promise of any great success.

It is to be remembered that not even the States adjacent to the Mississippi River, as a rule, have taken action in their capacity as States, but the efforts that have been made toward protection from overflow have been made by the various river counties—at most by a few counties organized into districts under legislative enactment by the several States; and even in these districts, where so organized, they have been made up of counties that would suffer by an overflow of a particular section or locality, and have not been extensive enough to protect all of any of the three or four great basins which lie between Cairo and New Orleans, first upon one and then upon the other side of the river.

It will thus be manifest that it was unreasonable to expect anything but failure in such disconnected and limited organizations, which in the main have been without means, except such small sums as could be gathered from taxation of a district, which, owing to the fact that it has been subject to these destructive floods, is up to this time but sparsely settled. Enough has been accomplished, however, in this very disconnected and limited manner to prove beyond question the feasibility and practicability of redeeming this vast and fertile section at a cost which is very insignificant in comparison to its value to the nation when reclaimed.

Owing to the fact that the portion of the river country subject to overflow lies partly in as many as four or five States, and that owing to the further fact that in none of these States is there a large enough section of such State subject to overflow to give a controlling power in the Legislature, it is almost out of the question to hope that, for at least many years to come, the strength and power of the States can be enlisted in any intelligent system of legislation on this most important matter.

It may be truly said that this is strictly an interstate question, the more so when it is taken into consideration that the water of this great river is derived from the following States and Territories, namely, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, New Mexico, Indian Territory, and Arkansas.

The framers of the Constitution very wisely reserved to the Federal Government the treatment of all such questions, for the simple reason that whatever concerned several States was primarily the concern of all the States. Believing, as we do, that this great subject comes within the province of national legislation, and further believing that when this fact is realized by the people of the United States this vast country can be redeemed, as already stated, at a comparatively insignificant cost through a system of dikes or levees, we earnestly request your attention to this subject as a matter that concerns the people of the United States at large, and as of vital interest to the colored race.

It is peculiarly in this section that the colored people of the United States can, with reasonable chance of success, make for themselves homes and become an independent and self-sustaining population of the country. As already stated, this whole country, owing to the destructive effects of the floods, is up to the present time very thinly settled, and the lands are selling at very low prices compared to their intrinsic value; and it is also a fact that the climate of this portion of the country is better adapted to the colored race than it is to the white race. Within the last five years the population of this overflowed region has been probably doubled, and this increase is made up almost entirely of the colored people. Here they have bought land at from $1 to $5 per acre, on credit, and in hundreds of instances have located in the most primitive way, hastily constructing small houses in which to live, and the man with his children has gone into the woods and cleared eight or ten acres of land, and during the coming season has produced from $1,000 to $1,500 worth of cotton, which has enabled these poor and dependent settlers to make payment for their lands; and in this way, mainly, it is safe to estimate that more than 20,000 families have located homes in this section within the last ten years. And it is a most gratifying fact to note that in five cases out of six families thus located have been successful. But it is to be remembered that the levee systems, although very inadequate and imperfect, have, in a great part of this country, been sufficient to protect from the overflows of the past five years, which, until the present year, have been comparatively light. During the present year, however, we have had a recurrence of the flood of 1882, with all its disastrous effects, except as the country, in the primitive way heretofore mentioned, has been protected by the present levees. But enough has been shown to make it an absolutely demonstrable fact that, with wise legislation on the part of Congress, which would establish a system of levee work extending over half a dozen years or more with a moderate appropriation of, say, $5,000,000 to $7,000,000, to be expended annually, the whole of this vast section of country could, through a system of levees, be made almost if not quite absolutely secure from overflow. And after this system of levees is constructed they could be maintained at a comparatively insignificant cost to the Government.

There is no denying the fact that the confinement of the water within given limits would contribute immensely towards the maintenance of the unobstructed navigation of the river through the deepening of its channel.

In addition to all the foregoing considerations, it may be stated that the annual products of this section of country, which would be produced mainly by the labor of the colored race, would contribute an aggregate sum of nearly $1,000,000,000 per annum to the nation's wealth. This section would become their home, in a large measure, and would remove much of the supposed threatened friction between the races, about which so much has recently been said; and when that race is once in possession of homes of their own, from which so large a contribution to the national wealth annually flows, it is believed that they would no longer be objectionable to the people of any section of the Union, and that if there still should linger in the minds of any portion of the community a prejudice, the very independence of the colored people that would thus be brought about would be sufficient to, in the end, remove such objections and render the race independent and no longer a subject of public consideration any more than would be any other portion of the community.

In view of all these facts, we again earnestly entreat the Congress of the United States to take this matter into consideration and adopt such wise legislation as will bestow upon our people, and especially upon the colored race, the protection which would bring to us such blessings and benefits as we confidently believe would result.

We hereby appoint and constitute the following committee as our representatives to lay this matter before the President and Congress of the United States forthwith: W. H. Allen, L. A. Bell, A. T. Wimberly, Peter Mitchell, T. M. Broadwaters, George W. Butler, John Scates, Frank Hawkins, Isaiah T. Montgomery, G. W. Gilliam, G. W. Gayles, W. E. Mollison, A. J. Oakes, W. W. Cox, T. W. Stringer, J. S. Pratt, A. P. Pollard; and specially request our Representatives in Washington to render them all the assistance in their power.

Very respectfully submitted on behalf of the Republicans of the Mississippi Valley, this 25th day of April, 1890.

L. A. Bell, Jas. A. Scott, G. W. Gilliam, E. H. Humphrey, G. W. Gayles, J. E. Ousley, L. C. Reynolds, A. G. Pearce, W. H. Smith, Gilbert Horton, W. E. Mollison, Henry Scott, Wesley Crayton, F. M. Broadwaters, A. J. Oakes, Geo. W. Butler, D. J. Foreman, Henry Hall, John Scates, Frank Hawkins, Austin Bell, Henry Avant, W. H. Allen, Geo. H. Oliver, A. C. Jackson, I. T. Montgomery, J. H. Bufford, L. C. Moore, Peter Mitchell, Anderson Levy, B. F. Garrett, S. B. Blackwell, N. A. Anderson, T. W. Stringer, Thos. Bell, Dr. James Porter, S. B. Brooks, W. W. Cox, Geo. Cox, John Reed, B. G. Booth, J. S. Pratt, A. P. Pollard.

Mr. McPHERSON presented a petition of the Bureau of Associated Charities, of Newark, N. J., through its officers, praying for legislation for the restriction of immigration; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BLAIR presented the petition of J. A. Thompson, president of Tarkio College, and 11 other leading educators of Tarkio, Mo., and the petition of Rev. W. P. McNary and 12 other leading citizens of Tarkio, Mo., praying for the passage of the Blair educational bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition, officially signed by Miss Frances E. Willard as president, of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the World's Woman's Temperance Union, praying for the suppression, by appropriate legislation, of the immoral traffic in Chinese women and girls at the port of San Francisco, Cal.; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. MORRILL presented a memorial of citizens of Addison County, Vermont, remonstrating against an increased duty on tin-plate, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3734) to increase the pension of E. S. Bishop; and A bill (H. R. 5810) to increase the pension of John B. Davis.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9008) to increase the pension of Zo S. Cook, of Wilcox County, Alabama, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1685) to increase the pension of Zo S. Cook, of Wilcox County, Alabama, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report four amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Three of them have passed the Senate. The other has been reported favorably by the committee. I move that the amendments be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report adversely four Senate bills, but I am so instructed because the same committee have directed me to submit a proposed amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill which relates to the surveys of public lands in the new States of Washington, Montana, North Dakota, and South Dakota. The proposed amendment increases the appropriation to meet the objects of the several bills reported adversely.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed, and the bills will be postponed indefinitely.

The bills were postponed indefinitely, as follows:

A bill (S. 3742) to provide for the survey of public lands in the State of North Dakota;

A bill (S. 3743) to provide for the survey of public lands in the State of Montana;

A bill (S. 3363) to provide for the survey of public lands in the State of South Dakota; and

A bill (S. 3164) to provide for the survey of public lands in the State of Washington.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 578) in relation to oaths in pension and other cases;
A bill (H. R. 6775) granting a pension to A. B. Reeves;
A bill (S. 1473) to increase the pension of Cornelia R. Chandler, widow of the late Rear-Admiral Ralph Chandler; and

A bill (H. R. 7881) granting a pension to Mrs. Martha E. Grant.
Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3183) granting a pension to Amanda M. Smyth, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PETTIGREW, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred a proposed amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, reported it favorably, and it was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying report and papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7885) granting a pension to R. Allen McCormick, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3214) granting a pension to Mary S. Miller, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8201) to amend the Articles of War relative to the punishment on conviction by courts-martial, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MOODY, from the Select Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 4155) to provide for the inspection of live cattle, hogs, and the carcasses and products thereof, which are the subjects of interstate commerce, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am instructed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to report back the message of the President of the United States on the subject of preventive legislation in regard to the destruction of forests by fire, with a bill in pursuance of the recommendation thereof.

The bill (S. 4156) for the protection of trees and other growth on the public domain from destruction by fire was read twice by its title.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 4146) granting a pension to Mary Martin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4147) for the relief of James R. Mullikin, late captain Company K, Thirty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 4148) for the relief of Margaret A. Fithian; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4149) for the relief of the legal representatives of Hartshorne R. Thomas, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VANCE introduced a bill (S. 4150) to increase the pension of Calvin McDaniel; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FARWELL introduced a bill (S. 4151) for the relief of Sarah A. Fisher; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4152) granting a pension to Mrs. Harriet E. Rinker; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 4153) granting a pension to Charles McCauley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 4154) for the relief of George Rushburger; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN (by request) introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 104) to request the President of the United States to negotiate with the British Government for the purpose of appointing a commission to meet at Washington, D. C., to investigate and make awards in satisfaction of all American citizens who had purchased lands from the chiefs of the Fiji Islands prior to 1874, and whose property has been seized and claims for lands disallowed by the British Government at the Fiji Islands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORGAN. In this connection I will move for the printing of a petition which I filed the other day, and which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, relating to the same subject. That petition sets forth the title upon which these American citizens predicate their claim to relief, and it is necessary to have it printed in order to get the matter clearly before the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL UNIVERSITY.

Mr. BLAIR. In regard to the bill (S. 4144) to incorporate the National Industrial University and School of Useful and Ornamental Arts, introduced by me during an interruption of the debate yesterday, I designed to state that it was prepared by me at the request of the Woman's National League of this city. Mrs. Charlotte Smith was particularly active in securing the names of the incorporators and is much interested in the passage of the bill.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PIERCE and Mr. PLUMB submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the Indian appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PIERCE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the amendment reported by Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Public Lands, in regard to surveys of public lands in certain Western States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

NOTIFICATION OF CLAIMS.

Mr. BLAIR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate whether there be due claims and accounts in his possession in favor of soldiers and sailors and other creditors of the United States of which there is reason to believe them to be in ignorance, and whether or not such knowledge of claims and accounts so due is withheld from such creditors by the practice of his Department, and, if so, for what reason; and whether or not it is the practice of his Department to notify such creditors or their legal representatives by mail or by publication, or in any other manner when by reason of long delay or for any other reason there is cause to believe that the creditor is ignorant of the existence of his claim, and especially to inform the Senate as to the subject-matter of this resolution in its application to the settlement of the claims of soldiers and sailors and those of their parents, widows, children, and legal representatives.

SARAH A. BLAKELY.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent that the action of the Senate indefinitely postponing the bill (S. 1208) granting a pension to Sarah A. Blakely, which sometime ago was adversely reported, be reconsidered, and that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ISLAND OF CUBA.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning, at the conclusion of the morning business, I shall ask the Senate to take up for consideration the resolution reported adversely by the Committee on Foreign Relations, offered by me, relating to the independence of Cuba, for the purpose of submitting some remarks to the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8909) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 19, 41, 64, 69, 70, and 75.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 9, 20, 22, 23, 24, 33, 39, 43, 44, 45, 50, 51, 52, 53, 65, 66, 67, 73, 79, 81, 82, and 83; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from said amendment the words "the reception of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "reception;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"Provided, That the moneys heretofore and hereby appropriated for the purpose of erecting buildings and making other improvements on said proving-ground may be forthwith expended upon the acquisition by the United States of the title thereto."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Insert after the word "dollars," where it first occurs in said amendment, the following:

"Provided, That no part of this money shall be expended until the owners of the patents to be tested under this provision shall agree by contract to give the Government the option within a specified time to contract at such price as shall be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy for the exclusive right on the part of the Government to manufacture by contract or otherwise such submarine guns and projectiles without the payment of any royalty on the same; Provided, That submarine guns and projectiles shall prove satisfactory on due test, and be approved by the Secretary of the Navy."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following paragraph:

"Coaling station, Port Royal, S. C.: Toward the construction of a timber dry-dock or floating-dock at the coaling station, Port Royal, S. C., in accordance with the recommendation of the commission to report as to the most desirable location on or near the coast of the Gulf of Mexico and the South Atlantic coasts for navy-yards and dry-docks, $200,000. And the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to make a contract for the construction of said timber dry-dock or floating-dock, the cost not exceeding $500,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "Congress" and insert in lieu of the matter stricken out the following:

"And the President be, and he hereby is, required to appoint a commission composed of two competent naval officers, one competent army officer, and two competent persons from civil life, whose duty it shall be to select a suitable site, having due regard to commercial and naval interests, for a dry-dock at some point on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico, or the waters connected therewith; and having selected such site shall, if upon private lands, estimate its value and ascertain as nearly as practicable the cost for which it can be purchased or acquired, and of their proceedings and action make full and detailed report to the President, and the President shall transmit such report with his recommendations to Congress."

"That to defray the expenses of such commission the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, after the word "ships," the words "which yard is hereby reopened for the repair of vessels of the Navy;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Improvement of machinery plant, navy-yard, Boston, Mass.: For extra tools required to put the yard in condition for repairing modern marine machinery with economy and dispatch, including improvements in boiler-making plant and improved machine tools, $40,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$75,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 77: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert the following: "$68,083.51;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 80: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out in line 6, page 25 of the bill, the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-one;" and the Senate agree to the same.

The report was concurred in.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9856) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the amendments of the committee will be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, in the appropriations for Office of the Postmaster-General, on page 1, line 10, to increase from "$250,000" to "$300,000" the appropriation "for mail depredations, and post-office inspectors, and fees to United States marshals, attorneys, and the necessary incidental expenses connected therewith."

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas who has charge of this bill to make some explanation of this increased appropriation on this account.

Mr. PLUMB. I make the suggestion, if not already made, that the bill be read for amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been so ordered.

Mr. PLUMB. Now I will hear the statement of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. GORMAN. I inquired of the Senator from Kansas what reason there is for the increase of $50,000 on this account for post-office inspectors, mail depredations, etc. I should like to have some explanation of that increased appropriation.

Mr. PLUMB. The increase recommended by the Senate Committee on Appropriations is in excess of the estimates and for that reason, if no other, naturally calls for explanation.

The Postmaster-General, as the Senator from Maryland knows, asked the committee to provide for a new force of persons to perform duties somewhat different from those performed by the post-office inspectors. I think perhaps the Senator has the statement made by the Postmaster-General before the House committee, and it explains his purpose at length in the use of the force in case it should be provided for; but the committee did not indorse wholly the Postmaster-General's idea about the force and concluded not to recommend its establishment, but instead did recommend an appropriation of $50,000 to be added to the appropriation for the employment of inspectors, partly because the work of that force is behind. I think the Postmaster-General stated that there were some seventy odd cases originating now per annum of which at least a third he is not able to dispose of, whereby for a time they were abandoned and the ends of justice were thereby defeated. It was thought also that if this additional force was given him he might enter to some extent upon the field which he desired to enter upon in connection with the other force, and he might see at the expiration of the next twelve months what result was reached, so as to be able to determine whether it was worth while to go on and enlarge the force and give it the scope and personnel which he had in mind and which he urged upon the committee.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I am perfectly aware of the immense increase of the business of the Post-Office Department and the general liberality with which we have treated the Department, practically giving it all it requires and estimates for.

In 1874 there were 34,300 post-offices, length of routes (miles), 270,000, and the gross revenue was $28,500,000; in 1880 there were 43,000 post-offices, length of routes (miles), 344,000, and the gross revenue $33,300,000, and in 1889 there were 58,989 post-offices, length of routes (miles) 416,150, and the gross revenue $56,175,611. This increase, as a matter of course, demands an increase of the number of officers of the Department from time to time, but it seems to me from the statement made by the Postmaster-General that he has, in this matter of special agents and inspectors and detectives, made a recommendation which is very large and far reaching, and it would seem without further explanation unnecessary for the service.

There has been no disposition on the part of anybody, certainly none on my part, to object to the making of ample provision for the extension of the service in every direction, the star-route service, the railroad service, and the provisions for postmasters. I think I am not mistaken in saying that the whole amount of this bill is $71,000,000 or $72,000,000, exceeding the postal revenues some six or seven million dollars.

The Postmaster-General seems to have in his mind a system of detectives and officials to supervise all the postmasters of the country. I find that one of the reasons he assigns for this large increase, larger than the committee allowed him, is that he proposes to have the detectives ascertain and report, among other items, these:

To report whether or not each postmaster is complying with the law and regulations relative to the selling of intoxicating liquors in post-offices, and whether or not such post-office is, from its surroundings and general character, a proper place to be visited by ladies and children, who are in smaller offices the most numerous of any class of visitors.

To ascertain from personal contact with the patrons of the office whether or not service is reasonably satisfactory, and, if not, to locate the cause of complaint and correct it.

I read from a statement made by the Postmaster-General before the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives at the present session. Mr. President, I have no objection, and there can be no objection on the part of anybody, to furnishing the Postmaster-General with enough detectives and special agents to ascertain whether depredations have been made and the general conduct of his business; but when he wants an increase of one hundred more men to ascertain the amount of whisky that is being sold in the little post-offices located in the mountains and by-ways he adopts the theory that all the morals of the people must be directed from this central point by agents selected by him, reversing the policy that the people themselves in each locality are perfectly competent and always ready to see that in this public service the postmaster, the man who is nearest to them, performs his duty properly, and is entering upon a system which I think is unfortunate and unwise. The Postmaster-General desires the country to be divided, and recommended "twenty-six geographical postal districts, and place over each district a supervisor of post-offices to teach the postmasters and clerks, improve systems, and develop the postal business."

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] asks me at what cost. I think the desire upon the part of the Postmaster-General is that we shall begin with an appropriation that amounts to about $200,000 per annum; but that is only a beginning. If we are to have agents sent out from Washington with a chief located in each of the twenty-six divisions of the Union, to inquire into the conduct of all the little cross-road post-offices, to ascertain the morals of the people, to investigate the postmaster, and look into his conduct, and ascertain whether he has a daughter or his wife employed—for that is one of the specifications—or any of his family in these little offices, it seems to me is reaching a point which is entirely ridiculous.

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator for one moment to inquire how these officials are to be appointed according to the scheme of the Postmaster-General?

Mr. GORMAN. The Postmaster-General recommends that these officials be selected from those now within the classified service. During the last Administration and at the close of the Administration, the then Postmaster-General, Mr. Vilas, recommended for the first time that these post-office inspectors and the railway clerks be placed under the classified service, and the President of the United States issued an order placing them all under the classified service. The present Postmaster-General found it, I believe, to be absolutely correct that that system gives him a different class of men from those found to be most efficient for that service; but up to this time he has not succeeded in having that order reversed, so that it stands to-day that all who enter this service as inspectors or railway clerks must have passed the civil-service examination, and from that list are selected. The Postmaster-General—and in that I think he is correct—insists that he shall have the right to select the new appointees from anybody who is now in the service; the fitness of the man and his peculiar qualification for this duty may be ascertained outside of the civil-service rules, as they can not be ascertained by that examination. He says in his report, on page 17:

The civil-service rules became applicable to the inspector division on July 1, 1888. The work to be done by the post-office inspectors relates to depredations of the mail, defalcations, and irregularities in the offices. Their duties are complex and variable, and can rarely be measured by uniform rule. It is a personal and confidential service, requiring a class of men of the utmost quickness and discretion, men with eyes and ears that are always alert and nerves that are always steady, keen to track a stage-coach robber on the frontier or discover the missing mail on the railway post-office routes or at the postal stations, or lost in the street letter-boxes.

Therefore he desires that he shall have a wider scope than that now permitted by the law so as to enable him to select these gentlemen from any that are in the classified service, and to that I have no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. May I again interrupt the Senator and inquire if it is not the fact that when these post-office inspectors were appointed by the Postmaster-General of the late Administration they were all subjected to an examination, whether by regulation of the Post-Office Department or under the civil-service system I do not now remember, but my recollection is that before anybody could get an appointment as inspector of the Post-Office Department he was subjected to a very rigid examination, perhaps, as I say, under some rule prescribed by the Postmaster-General himself?

Mr. GORMAN. That is true. The Postmaster-General required an examination of all the applicants for like positions, but it was a departmental examination which was as broad as that provided for by the Civil Service Commission to-day, with this addition, that the Postmaster-General had the opportunity to inspect the applicants, to ascertain outside of the mere technical examination whether an applicant had the qualities necessary for a detective, and it was a rule absolutely necessary to secure efficiency in that office, in my judgment.

But that did not stop there. That rule was abrogated, and now we are to rely solely upon the technical examination at the civil-service examination. To that the present Postmaster-General, as I think properly, objects, but the order still stands, and to remedy the difficulty to some extent he asks that he may have the opportunity now to select from all the men in the classified service who have passed the civil-service examination. The provision in this bill does not give him that authority. If the increased appropriation of $50,000 is made, as proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, the new appointments that are to be made under it will come directly from the certification of the civil-service board. So in that matter the Postmaster-General has not been gratified, and I think it is a great misfortune to the service that he has not been.

But, Mr. President, it is the increase of these men at this time on the part of the Postmaster-General, as I stated a moment ago, which places every post-office in the country under his supervision and centers everything in Washington, reversing the policy of a hundred years, of relying upon the people in each locality to ascertain whether a man at a little cross-roads post-office is discharging his duty, whether his office is conducted properly, and, if it is not, to state that fact to the Postmaster-General. The old system has worked well in the past, and there is no reason why he should enter upon this question of ascertaining how much whisky is drunk or whether the postmaster has his wife or daughter attending the post-office. Give the Postmaster-General enough officers, enough of these detectives to look after the depredations on the mails and after the men who rob post-offices, and that ought to suffice. Probably there ought to be an increase, as he has now inefficient men compared with those who have been heretofore employed, and for the reason which I have assigned we shall probably have to submit to an increased expenditure; but I want to protest against entering upon the system which he has alluded to in the communication which I will now send to the Secretary and ask to have read.

Mr. BUTLER. Before that is done I should like to ask a question for information, or rather to confirm what I believe to be the fact, whether or not the present post-office inspectors are not charged with that very duty of which the Senator speaks in regard to these appointees for which the Postmaster-General asks.

I have always understood that the purpose and object of the present post-office inspectors was to do precisely what is contemplated by this increase of officials; that is to say, to visit every post-office in the United States if need be, to examine the books, see if they are properly kept, whether order is maintained and the office is properly conducted, and make their report to the Postmaster-General.

I agree with the Senator entirely. I can see no earthly reason for a different class of officials who, as I understand the Postmaster-General to recommend, are to go there to the post-offices and teach the postmasters how to keep books. These post-office inspectors have had that duty in charge as I have understood, and I have understood that to be part of their official duty, so that I agree with the Senator, and I can see no need for this increase of officials to supplement simply what is already being done by the post-office inspector. The principal object of the post-office inspector is to examine the books of postmasters, to see if their accounts are properly kept, to ascertain whether their financial standing with the Post-Office Department is correct or incorrect, and, if incorrect, in what respect. Am I not right about that?

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from South Carolina is quite correct. Wherever a complaint has been made by any patrons of the office or where the returns of the local postmaster to the Post-Office Department show upon their face that there are irregularities in the allowances, where there are specific complaints made by the people of the locality or any of them that the officer is not discharging his duty, where there is a depredation or robbery, the loss of a letter or a shortage in accounts, examination is made by the inspectors. For all these matters we make as ample provision as is possible. It is possible that the growth of the service, as indicated by the statistics I have read, will require that some small addition should be made to the present force.

The Postmaster-General, as I understand, claims that the men who are now appointed are not as efficient as if they were appointed under another system. That we may have to meet and make ample provision for. But what I object to is that, upon the statement which I shall have read in a moment, we are to enter upon a system by which the whole country shall be divided into twenty-six districts, with a chief for each district and a corps of detectives under him whose shall be used, as the Postmaster-General says in this statement, for the purpose of going and visiting and getting in touch with the people.

He has nothing to do with the people except to obey their will so far as a public official ought to obey it. His duty and that of his officers ought to be confined to examining the accounts, as stated by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], of the men who are in office. I do not want a large force of officials, whether they be Republicans or Democrats, who are well paid and whose avowed duty, as stated by the Postmaster-General, will be to go around among the people and come "in touch" with them. The time may come when we may have a Postmaster-General who will be more of a politician than the present Postmaster-General, some man who may take an interest in his party and who may want to promote its success by contributions or otherwise; and I do not want to see such a Postmaster-General, if we should ever have one, with a corps organized in twenty-six districts into which it is proposed to divide the Union, with his men around "in touch" with the people.

I ask that the statement made by the Postmaster-General before the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The statement will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the statement, but before concluding was interrupted by—

Mr. SPOONER. That document will take, I should think, an hour to read.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no objection to its being printed.

Mr. SPOONER. There is not a Senator in the Chamber listening to it, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed without being read.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest that, certainly, if Senators will not pay attention to the reading of the letter they probably will not read it in the RECORD.

Mr. SPOONER. If Senators will not listen to it they probably will not read it. It is taking too much time.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no objection to the document being printed if we have unanimous consent. I think the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] will find a great many people in the country who will read it and will be glad to read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Maryland that the statement may be printed in the RECORD? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

[Argument of the Postmaster-General May 15, 1890, before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of the House of Representatives in behalf of the appointment of postal supervisors.]

Mr. CHAIRMAN: If your committee were to ask me what, in my judgment, was the best thing Congress could do for the postal service I should unhesitatingly affirm that it would be to direct the Postmaster-General to divide the United States into twenty-six geographical postal districts, and place over each district a supervisor of post-offices to teach the postmasters and clerks, improve systems, and develop the postal business.

I have not been fifteen months reaching this conclusion. I reached it nearly a year ago, and my conviction of the wisdom of such a course has been deepened by experience.

We have 62,000 post-offices that are run on paper wheels, or, in other words, by correspondence and report, except that, as misfortune overtakes them, an inspector is detailed to visit them and inquire and report. There are engaged on general mail depredations 58 inspectors; on money-order business, 30; and on free delivery, 10. Last year these inspectors had 73,741 cases before them, one-third of which they could not act upon for lack of sufficient force. Many of these cases were, therefore, abandoned, and became obsolete, by reason of changed conditions, growing out of the great lapse of time. It takes on an average thirty days to get a report on any case, to say nothing of information desired by this Department on a hundred different points, and without which information the Post-Office Department acts less intelligently.

I desire to call your attention to a class of cases serious in character, demanding prompt investigation, and oftentimes a concentration of a number of inspectors at a given point, in order to secure arrest and collect evidence necessary to conviction.

The first in the list of these cases are burglaries of post-offices, of which there were 849 last year. These burglaries are often at points remote from the headquarters of the division inspector, and with his force scattered widely over an immense territory it is often difficult, even with the utmost dispatch, to secure the presence of inspectors before the evidences of the crime are lost or the perpetrator has got beyond the reach of the law.

Scarcely second to these in importance are the losses resulting from the tampering with registered and ordinary mail, money-orders, and other forms of depredation. Add to this defalcations by postmasters, failure to properly deposit funds, delays in so doing, using the mails for fraudulent schemes, forging, counterfeiting, or changing money-orders, and you have arrayed an amount of work requiring the utmost skill and patience, utterly beyond the power of the present corps of inspectors to properly investigate and correct. To this is to be added what might properly be termed emergency work, an enormous number of investigations of lost and mislaid letters.

Take the matter of registered letters. I think the honorable committee will agree with me in the proposition that where a fee of 10 cents is charged for the conveyance of a letter or package, in addition to the full rate of postage due under the law, some increased security should be guaranteed to the sender. Under existing regulations, as you are, of course, aware, the Government does not hold itself financially responsible to the sender for the loss of the package. It simply undertakes to surround the letter with certain safeguards, such as receipts for letters, numbering letters, inclosing same in registered-package envelopes, properly sealed, depositing same in a special form of pouch, and locking same with a rotary register lock, superior, perhaps, to anything in use by any Government in the world at this time, by attending delivery of such letter with certain formalities, in the shape of return cards, and requiring receipt for letter when delivered; but beyond this it does not undertake to go.

It is not flattering to the Government that within the last three years there has grown up in New York a company whose business it was to insure the sender of registered letters against loss by the Government.

This class of cases in a peculiar sense requires prompt, thorough, and exhaustive investigation, and with such investigation there is little doubt that in the large majority of cases the lost valuables will be recovered and returned to the sender of the letter. Every improvement that intelligence and experience have been able to suggest has been thrown about this system to render it perfect. It is growing every year to be of greater importance to the people of this country, and in many sections of the West it supersedes largely every other form of conveyance of moneys and valuables. No class of Government business requires a greater degree of promptness, and with the present force it must be simply an incident to a great system of detecting and punishing frauds.

It will, I think, be evident, even upon a cursory examination, that the work I have outlined above is entirely beyond the capacity of the present limited force of inspectors, even were no other duties intrusted to them, leaving the great work of systematizing the accounts of the various offices, the instruction of postmasters, the supervision of the labor of securing post-office sites eligible and convenient for the public, and the introduction of new and improved methods into the various post-offices of the United States, entirely without intelligent supervision and control. It is a matter of complaint, in many sections of the country, that an inspector has not been there for twelve months or more.

That we have a postal system, in the main intelligent and efficient, is, in my judgment, a marked compliment to the versatility, adaptability, and general business qualifications of our people. That the best results will not be achieved, the work made uniform, and a general system of intelligent advance made, until we have a closer supervision of the work is, I think, a proposition beyond dispute. There are in the United States to-day sixty-three offices of collectors of internal revenue, representing as many districts. Each collector is given a number of deputy collectors, running from two to five or more. Added to these he has a large corps of store-keepers and gaugers, running from ten to a hundred. To supervise these districts, instruct and examine the officers, examine the offices with a view to determining the financial standing of each, to report in disputed cases, where there is an issue between the tax-payer and the collector, there is now a corps of twenty internal-revenue agents.

A few years ago the number of collection districts was greatly in excess of the number above stated, and the corps of officers was correspondingly great. There were, at that time, thirty-five internal-revenue agents. The reports of the internal-revenue office, published from time to time, and not controverted, so far as I know, afford in themselves the best evidence of what may be accomplished by systematic work and the employment of proper forces. Over $700,000,000 was collected, through the various offices of the country, without the loss of a cent, and at an expense of about 8 per cent. of the total amount collected. It is believed, all things considered, that this service attained to a degree of efficiency never excelled, and perhaps never equaled, in the history of governmental taxation.

Although differing widely from the Post-Office Department in its operation and the laws and regulations governing it, it is useful in this connection, as affording an illustration of what may be attained by a systematic and direct application of personal intelligence and experience, in the operation of an important Government office. As it is with the collector of internal revenue, so should it be with the larger post-offices of the country. There should not be a month in a year when they might not anticipate the visit of an inspector, whose duty it should be not merely to make a hurried call and superficial examination, but should be charged with the specific duty of counting every cent in money and every stamp and stamped envelope in his office, and should examine the amounts deposited to the credit of the office, verify certificates of any fund said to be in transit to the Department, and generally make such examination as would satisfy the financial office of the Post-Office Department that every dollar charged to that postmaster was either deposited or represented in stamps and funds in possession of the postmaster.

The ex-postmaster of one of the largest offices in the United States advised me a day or two since in conversation that during the five years that he held the office of postmaster his office was counted up and balanced three times, and that two of these three counts or examinations only were complete.

That defalcations exist, that public funds are used by officials with impunity, growing out of the fact that they know that their offices will not be critically counted up and balanced oftener than once in a year or two, or perhaps not that often, is not strange, and we may reasonably expect that it will continue under the present system.

There is also an urgent demand in the various large offices of the country, and in the smaller offices in a lesser degree, for a uniform and complete system of bookkeeping. It is true at this time that there is very little uniformity in the system of bookkeeping in vogue in the larger offices of the country. These books, usually kept by the cashier, and in some instances by the assistant postmaster, are after a system of their own, often difficult to be understood and in many cases misleading. There should be, as in the internal-revenue offices of the country, certain books and forms prescribed, which should be rigidly adhered to. I can not think of any single thing that would tend to a greater degree to secure the absolute safety of the funds and simplify the work of examining the various offices than would such an improved and uniform system of accounting in the offices.

To-day the efficiency of the various post-offices of the country depends largely upon the intelligence, zeal, business ability, and character of the postmaster, and while it is conceded that a fair average scale of merit is reached in the matter of appointments, it is confidently believed that the strong and able men can be added to do even better work, and the weak and inefficient can be encouraged by help, instruction, and the benefit of experience, to attain to a much higher level. I feel strongly on this subject, as I realize more and more how thoroughly the post-office is the people's office, and that they may come more and more, every year, to depend upon it, and to watch with anxious eyes any deterioration in any branch of its service. In many districts of our country it is about the only evidence of the existence of a government that comes palpably before them. To set up offices and let them get on the best they can without oversight, is unbusinesslike and differs from the usual order. A railroad company has every mile of track under trackmen and superintendents, and the sections under managers, and managers grouped under vice-presidents, so that the entire road is touched at every nerve with life and force.

To return to the illustration cited above, the collector of internal revenue, who is new in his office, is given for three or four days, and, if necessary, for a week, the services of an agent of large experience, who instructs him thoroughly, not only in the system of accounts of the office to which he has been appointed, but who accompanies him to the distilleries and breweries and other large-paying establishments, and he is there instructed in the practical work necessary to the protection of the Government and the proper collection of its revenues. On the other hand, a postmaster starts in without experience, with a volume of Postal Laws and Regulations, and a volume of rulings, more or less abstruse, which he is expected to master and apply at once to the numberless interests that arise in his office. In the large number of removals made, it will often happen that the out-going postmaster, from feelings of personal or political ill-will, will afford his successor very little if any aid or instruction, and he starts upon his important work literally trusting to luck to enable him to pull through the first few months of his administration.

To pursue this line of thought further, there is no doubt that, as a matter of dollars and cents, the Government will be the gainer and not the loser in considering favorably the recommendation I have the honor to make, and that expenses can be lessened and the revenues of the offices increased by intelligent supervision and by arousing throughout the country an esprit de corps among the 62,000 post-offices, there can be no question.

Not only in the direction of decreased expenses and increased revenues will great good result, but I desire to direct your attention to another important matter. There are attached to the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, who has control of star and steam-boat service, as well as the ordering of all new and increased railroad service, but two inspectors. It is needless to say that these inspectors are unable properly to investigate complaints of bad service and important applications for new service, changes of routes proposed, etc.

It would be the duty of the supervisors on the spot to look carefully into the transportation question, especially in the matter of star and steam-boat service, and there is no doubt in my mind that they would be able to report to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General such constant revision, pruning, and protecting of the service as would result in the saving of large sums to the Government, during a four years' contract term, without in any way delaying or decreasing the frequency of the delivery to the people of the country, but on the contrary greatly improving the service.

I would specify among other duties of these supervisors that they should see carried into effect the system of accounts to be prepared by the experts I had the honor to urge upon you when I appeared personally before your committee last week. Notwithstanding the unparalleled growth of the service, and the multiplication of new offices, and the increase of business of the old ones, I am satisfied that the supervision I contemplate will soon demonstrate that order and uniformity can be established and an infinitely higher degree of intelligence attained.

The supervisors recommended to your honorable committee should be chosen from the very best talent to be found in the classified service, selecting for appointment only such men as have had demonstrated their fitness to guide, direct, and instruct others, and to impress their individuality upon this great system, of which so much may reasonably be expected in the future. The educating and refining influences of the post-office, properly directed and stimulated, can not be overestimated.

In the matter of compensation, I have the honor to recommend that these supervisors be appointed by the Postmaster-General from the classified postal service and be paid $1,800 a year and $4 per diem.

To restate briefly and succinctly the work of these supervisors, if it shall please your committee to recommend and Congress to pass a law authorizing them:

To visit personally and examine carefully, at regular but not stated intervals, the physical conditions of each office, to ascertain as to the responsibility of the bondsmen of postmasters, and to report deaths, insolvency, or removals of such bondsmen, which under the present system often remain unknown to the Department during the greater portion of the term of the postmaster.

To instruct each new postmaster in the postal laws and regulations, methods of work found from experience to be most effective, and to give special supervision and instruction in the matter of making up and dispatching mails, forming carriers' routes, and aid to expedite and tone up the service.

To examine and report upon the general efficiency and intelligence of the postmasters, and what degree of personal attention is given, habits, etc.

To report upon the location of each post-office, state whether or not it accommodates the public and whether or not the public or private interests are served in the matter of rent, selection of site, and general adaptability of the building.

To report whether or not each postmaster is complying with the law and regulations relative to the selling of intoxicating liquors in post-offices, and whether or not such post-office is, from its surroundings and general character, a proper place to be visited by ladies and children, who are in smaller offices the most numerous of any class of visitors.

To see whether or not the appointments made by postmasters are in the interest of the service, and that the places are not filled by the relatives of the postmaster to the detriment of the public service.

To see that the post-offices are kept open for the accommodation of the public a reasonable number of business hours.

To ascertain and report whether or not the office is safely and suitably fitted up to secure proper privacy and security of the mail.

When remote from depositories, to see that proper and safe receptacles are afforded for the security of moneys and stamps.

To advise Department of regularity and punctuality of contractor's work and character of railway mail work.

To see that the schedule of departure of carriers in the various offices is made to conform to the arrival and distribution of important mails, and to see that collections are made with a view to sending out all mails to the first departing trains.

To revise the list of undeliverable letters, and see that every effort is made to forward same, failing in which, to see whether or not they are promptly sent to the Dead Letter Office at the Department.

To ascertain and report whether or not stations are needed and substations are so arranged as to meet the wants of the public.

To ascertain from personal contact with the patrons of the office whether or not service is reasonably satisfactory, and if not to locate the cause of complaint and correct it.

To make a stated report to the Postmaster-General on each office upon which the offices, both Presidential and fourth-class, should be graded according to merit of condition and growth.

It would be an unnecessary intrusion upon your valuable time to enumerate further the wide scope of work that could properly and profitably be performed by the class of officials I have indicated. I have certainly not stated any aspect of the case too strongly. The value of a steady and constant touch upon the work of each office is beyond estimate.

In the matter of the appointment of a Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, I concur most heartily in the recommendations to that end made by my various predecessors in office. The arguments made many years ago could be made at length with increased force, as time demonstrates every year more thoroughly the absolute necessity of this additional official. To this office should be transferred the direct care of the various bureaus, Railway Mail, Money Order, Free Delivery, Foreign Mail, Dead Letter Office, which are now running in a sense independently and without that vigilant supervision that is important in securing the best results. This subject has been discussed so fully before, and its necessity impressed upon your honorable committee, that it would seem that further elaboration would be a work of supererogation at this time.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, there is a great deal of force in the criticism which the Senator from Maryland makes upon the plan of the Postmaster-General, but the Senator will observe that the committee did not yield to it, but took up another branch of the subject which is represented by the recommendation for the increase of the appropriation. After careful reading of the statement of the Postmaster-General, which has just now been ordered to be incorporated in the RECORD, I have come to the conclusion that that official entirely misconceives the status of the postmasters of the country and their relations to him and to the public service. They occupy a dual position. They are his subordinates in every proper sense; that is to say, in the sense that he is entitled to require of them that they shall keep their accounts in a certain way and perform the functions which relate to the postal business of the country according to law and under such direction as he may from time to time make. But in another sense they are local officials, men possessing a representative character, and justifying themselves, as they have done, I am glad to say, under whatever Administration they may have been appointed, to the confidence and good-will of the people whom they particularly serve.

I know the American people better than the Postmaster-General does, if he thinks, as he seems to do, that, if there is any lack upon the part of any one of these officials to properly discharge his local duty, his duty to the patrons of the office, or if there is any conspicuous defect in his character which is offensive to the moral sense of the community, they will not complain so that thereby he will find out all these facts concerning him; and I think myself that his view of a force whose duty it should be to make private inquiry in the various neighborhoods as to the character of the postmaster, and as to whether the people are satisfied with the transaction of the public business by the postmaster, entirely misconceives his relations to the officials and their relations to the people of the community where they reside and whose business in connection with postal affairs they transact. It would set in motion every element of scandal, of backbiting, and everything else that was hurtful to the peace of communities and to the proper transaction of the public business. It would be an unwarrantable intrusion, something which finds no parallel in private business, and which ought not to be for one single instant tolerated in the public service.

The American people are alert. They know how to write; they know that a complaint lodged with the Postmaster-General in regard to the postmasters will be investigated, and that Congress furnishes a force for the purpose of investigating such charges as may be made, and it is expected that the force of inspectors which have been the accompaniment of the postal service for many years will be used for the purpose of investigating complaints which will be made, and for that purpose only as they relate to depredation upon the mails. Of course, in connection with that, it is entirely proper that they should consider cases which involve no turpitude, as for instance failures to render accounts, which of themselves come to the attention of the Department in the ordinary course of business, and suggest the necessity for investigation, carelessness in regard to the handling of the mail, which comes to the attention of the Department rather than that of the individual whose mail is handled, being the subject of investigation as it properly ought to.

The entire scope of the relation which the Department now exercises to the various postmasters throughout the country is not only properly based upon common sense, but upon a long course of experience. It does not need enlarging in the direction of any inquiry as to the habits or personal character of the postmaster, or in regard to the minor details of the management of the office which relate to the convenience and comfort and well-being of the patrons of the office. In fact that is a domain which the Postmaster-General may well keep out of unless he is invited into it by the people who are served. His entrance into it could not be helpful to the service, but undoubtedly it would be hurtful as well as to private character. It would assimilate the post-offices of the country to him or would put them in relation to him, just as a business man has related to him the force which takes care of his store or whatever business he may attend to, to whom he occupies the relation of employer in the direct sense, and who, as they deal with his funds and with his own relation to his own customers, has a right to make the most keen and searching inquiry as to everything which affects their character and qualifications.

I do not mean that the Postmaster-General might not properly establish a standard to which persons should conform who are to be appointed as postmasters, but, whatever he may do properly or improperly, the fact still remains that they are local officers in all that great amount of dealing which they have with the patrons of their respective offices, and he can not enter into that domain without doing more harm than good.

For these reasons, Mr. President, and for some others which I do not think are worth naming, the Committee on Appropriations did not agree to give the Postmaster-General this force which he asked for. They felt, however, that in view of his statement that the inspectors had 73,741 cases before them last year of mail depredations and other matters involving irregularity or worse in the transaction of the public business, and that a third of those cases had to be abandoned because there was not force enough to attend to them, they might properly enlarge that force of inspectors to enable him to bring that work up, just as under the preceding administration of Mr. Vilas, and on his request, we added 50 per cent. to the force of post-office inspectors in order to enable him to thoroughly inspect at the beginning of his administration all the post-offices in the country, that he might be able to know the manner in which the business was carried on and dispose of all prosecutions or otherwise act on the various charges which had been made in regard to the irregularities in and depredations upon the mail service.

Mr. GORMAN. A temporary force.

Mr. PLUMB. That was a temporary force. Since that time the business of the Post-Office Department has increased. The first time I had charge of this bill, some six or seven years ago, as I recall it now, the appropriations for the postal service were about $40,000,000. They are for this year over $70,000,000, and the increase is going on at about the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, with the probability that that increase will be maintained for an indefinite period.

Mr. GORMAN. What is the exact amount appropriated in this bill?

Mr. PLUMB. The exact amount of this bill as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations is $72,461,698.99.

Mr. INGALLS. Will that leave a deficiency?

Mr. PLUMB. It will leave a deficiency in the revenues of $7,017,261.65.

Mr. GIBSON. Does the Senator mean to say the expenditures will exceed the receipts to that extent?

Mr. PLUMB. The expenditures will exceed the estimated revenues of the Department by the amount which I have named.

Mr. GIBSON. How are the estimates made of what the revenues are to be?

Mr. PLUMB. That is estimated upon the basis of a certain increase, determined by experience, over the preceding year.

Mr. INGALLS. What were they last year?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not remember, but about 8 per cent. less.

I think, Mr. President, that the addition made by the Senate Committee on Appropriations is conservative and proper. I do not have any fear that it will be misused. I do not mean that the Postmaster-General might not extend to some extent the inquiry that he now makes through inspectors, enlarging their functions to some extent. I am very sure that, on account of the limitation contained in this appropriation and for other reasons, he will not enter the field which has been properly characterized by the Senator from Maryland.

I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a letter of the Postmaster-General, directed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in relation to the application for supervisors of postal districts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be so inserted, in the absence of objection.

The letter is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 20, 1890.

DEAR SIR: Pursuant to your request of yesterday, when I appeared before your committee to ask for an amendment to the appropriation bill to enable me to more efficiently organize the postal service, I beg now to present formally this application for an appropriation of a sum not to exceed $78,000 for the payment of twenty-six men, at $1,800 per year and $4 per diem for expenses, who shall be selected from the men now in the classified service and be known as supervisors of postal districts, whose duties shall be to educate postmasters and improve and grade post-offices, according to regulations prescribed by the Postmaster-General.

I do not know any other scheme that will do as much good for the postal service as the organization which can be effected by the plan proposed. In my judgment it will not be any increase of numbers to the service, but will lessen numbers and appropriations for each year after it goes into operation.

This subject was presented to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the House after the bill was reported, and the argument there made by the Postmaster-General—copy of which is herewith—contains many reasons in its favor.

I earnestly ask your committee to give me their confidence and support in this measure for economy and better service.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, yours,

JNO. WANAMAKER,
Postmaster-General.

HON. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "Office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General," in section 1, on page 2, line 17, to increase the appropriation "for compensation to clerks in post-offices" from "$7,200,000" to "$7,590,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 2, line 20, before the word "sum" to strike out "that" and insert "this," so as to read:

"For rent, light, and fuel for first and second class post-offices, including rent of city post-office at Washington, D. C., and of this sum not exceeding $900 may be paid for rent of a branch post-office on Capitol Hill, in the city of Washington, D. C., $665,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General," in section 1, on page 4, line 13, to reduce the appropriation "for mail locks and keys" from "$50,000" to "$35,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Office of Superintendent of Foreign Mails," in section 1, on page 6, line 11, to increase the appropriation "for transportation of foreign mails" from "$664,000" to "$712,000."

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that the addition to that paragraph, made by the committee inserting what appears in the bill in italics after the word "dollars," in line 12, may be read before we act upon the amendment in line 11.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the same clause on page 6, line 12, after the word "dollars," it is proposed by the Committee on Appropriations to insert:

And from this appropriation the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $45,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to cover one-half of the cost of transportation, compensation, and expense of clerks to be employed in assorting and pouching mails in transit on steam-ships between the United States and other postal administrations in the International Postal Union.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. These propositions will be treated as one amendment, if there be no objection.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to favor the Senate with an explanation of that increased appropriation, and also of the additional words which have just been read.

Mr. PLUMB. That is to be found stated as succinctly as it can be stated in the letter of the Postmaster-General, which I will read. It is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 20, 1890.

DEAR SIR: The mails from foreign countries arrive mainly at New York, and reach that post-office unworked, where, under the present system, all the work of assorting and distributing takes place. This necessitates delays, governed by the volume of current domestic business at the New York office, and also by the number of steamers arriving concurrently.

In order to expedite the foreign mails, important to so many interests, but especially to the financial world, I desire, as the commencement of a better system, to establish international marine post-offices for a tri-weekly service upon the fast ships of the North German Lloyd and Hamburg-American Steam-Ship Companies, sailing for New York from Hamburg and Bremen, touching at Southampton, England. The marine system proposed is similar to the railway post-office service on the land.

Your attention is called to the accompanying report of William Potter, esq., of Philadelphia, who officially represented this Department in investigating this subject in England, France, and Germany. To enable the Department to establish sea post-offices as above indicated, and facilities for handling the foreign mail, I respectfully ask that the appropriation bill be amended as follows:

Amend by striking out of lines 5 and 6, page 6, of the bill the words "six hundred and sixty-four thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "seven hundred and twelve thousand." And also by adding after the word "dollars," in line 6, the following: "out of which appropriation the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $45,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, to cover one-half of the cost of transportation, compensation, and expense of clerks to be employed in assorting and pouching mails in transit on steam-ships between the United States and other postal administrations in the International Postal Union."

So that the clause when amended will read:

"For transportation of foreign mails, $712,000; out of which appropriation the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $45,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to cover one-half of the cost of transportation, compensation, and expense of clerks to be employed in assorting and pouching mails in transit on steam-ships between the United States and other postal administrations in the International Postal Union."

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully yours,

JNO. WANAMAKER,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

The report of Mr. Potter is here and I will ask that it go into the RECORD without reading it, unless some Senator desires to have it read. I think, perhaps, it had better be read as it treats the subject somewhat comprehensively, and I will state that Mr. Potter was employed by the Postmaster-General, who, having no funds for the purpose, practically imposed upon Mr. Potter the friendly office of the performance of this duty without charge to the Government, and the Postmaster-General stated to the committee—which I have read and speak of here—that Mr. Potter performed a very satisfactory service, indeed, in connection with this matter of a sea post-office to correspond with the post-offices which are provided for now upon railroad trains. I ask that the report of Mr. Potter be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 18, 1890.

SIR: As per your letter of instructions, dated January 2, 1890, authorizing me to enter into negotiations with the authorities of the English, French, and German Governments, with a view of establishing marine or sea post-offices on transatlantic mail steam-ships, I proceeded to London, leaving New York January 4, by Cunard steam-ship Etruria. Upon my arrival in London I forwarded my crediting letter from the Secretary of State to Hon. Robert Lincoln, American minister, asking him to deliver my credentials from you to the postmaster-general of Great Britain, to arrange for an appointment. The favor of an immediate interview was granted, and the entire question of sea post-offices between New York, Queensdown, and Liverpool was laid before the English post-office department. After many interviews, lengthy correspondence, and careful research into the subject, the English postmaster-general reported that, owing to the mail from New York being discharged at Queensdown, and assorted in transit on train and boat to London, there appeared to be no appreciable advantage to be gained in establishing sea post service. They presented me the estimate of the Cunard and White Star Steam-Ship Companies for the cost of a semi-weekly service amounting annually to 26,442*l.*, or $123,772.54 (see Exhibit A), and stated that while they could appreciate the saving of such a service to our Department, we having no port of entry corresponding to Queensdown, it was however no advantage to them; but as an earnest of their desire to see established between the United States and Great Britain a parcel-post system, they submitted a proposition (see letters of Sir Arthur Blackwood, dated 21, 1890, March, marked Exhibits B and C) offering to contribute 5,935*l.* 10*s.* or $23,905.98 annually to the cost of the sea post-offices, it being a condition, however, that we adopt the parcel post. While I had no power or desire to discuss this new question which brought in tariff complications, I have submitted the papers concerning the subject, marking them Exhibit D.

I proceeded thence to Paris, and through Hon. Whitelaw Reid, American minister, presented my credentials and arranged for an interview with the minister of commerce and industry and the director-general of post and telegraphs in France. The question of the advantage to be obtained by both countries in the establishment of the sea post-offices between New York and Havre was carefully and I think forcibly placed before the French department. After investigating the matter thoroughly and receiving an estimate of the cost of a weekly service on the General Transatlantic Company amounting to 166,100 francs, $32,057.30, annually (see Exhibit E), the French director-general reported that while there would be a considerable time saved to them in the adopting of this service, it would require legislative authority for the necessary appropriation, and that their tenure of office being at all times uncertain, they did not care in the beginning of their administration to incur the risk of unpopularity in asking for an additional appropriation for this service. They would therefore postpone the subject for the present, hoping later to take it up and conduct the same to a favorable termination.

Proceeding to Berlin and arranging for interviews through Hon. William Walter Phelps, American minister, I was gratified to find that the German Government was not only favorably inclined but most anxious to establish the marine post-offices between New York, Bremen, and Hamburg. In their communication to your Department, dated Berlin, September 13, 1889, they stated that they had entered into preliminary arrangements with the North German Lloyd and the Hamburg-American Steam-Ship Company, according to which these companies will place at the disposal of the postal administration on each steamer a space of 10 square meters, 107.58 square feet, which should be arranged in such a manner as to provide office room for the distribution of the mail and a place for the officials to sleep. For furnishing these spaces and for the conveyance and board of the officials the company to receive for each round trip $2.25 marks, $335.50. If the steamer carries a sea post-office only in one direction, however, half that amount will be paid to the company. I stated to the imperial secretary of state of Germany that these figures, though satisfactory to the German post-office, would not for a moment be entertained by you, and that (see your letter of November 8, 1889) you had stated that while you fully appreciated the advantage of the sea post-offices as to expediting the delivery of articles in the two countries, you were of the opinion that the rate named was entirely too high, and that you felt satisfied that the transatlantic companies will be disposed to furnish facilities for sea post-offices at more reasonable and equitable rates of compensation, and to that end had commissioned me to see the German post-office department and to endeavor through them to accomplish the desired result. The German officials, while not hopeful of being able to obtain any satisfactory results, named the Messrs. Fritsch and Kratke as their commissioners to accompany myself as the representative of your Department, and visit the directors of the North German Lloyd at Bremen and the Hamburg-American Steamship Company at Hamburg, and to endeavor to obtain from them a more favorable estimate of the cost for this new service. I have great satisfaction in saying that the result of our interview was to obtain in writing (see Exhibits F and G.) from the directors of both steamship companies an agreement to make the cost of furnishing space and conveyance and board of two international officials 1,500 marks a round trip, this amount being 33 per cent. less than the offer of 2,250 marks which had been accepted as perfectly satisfactory on the part of the German post-office. (See their letter to you dated September 13, 1890.)

According to the memorandum made by the German secretary of state, and marked Exhibit H, the total cost of a semi-weekly service on the German steamers will be 243,288 marks, $67,008.94 per annum, or 121,144 marks or $23,504.47 for each country; and for a tri-weekly service, which is much preferred by the German Government, 363,432 marks, $95,513.41, or to each country 181,716 marks, $42,756.70. These figures are supposed to include every expense, and should be about the total cost of the service. In the appointment of officials, in order to avoid any future complications, it is suggested that international sea post-offices be established; the officials, one-half American and one-half German, to be appointed as international officers, and the total expense of the service to be divided equally between the two departments.

The imperial secretary of state of the German Empire, Dr. Von Stephan, supplements the negotiations with a final letter to you, dated 17th of May, 1890 (see Exhibit I), in which he expresses the hope that the sea post-office service may speedily be inaugurated, as he is positive that it will not only save time and money to both departments, but that it will be a mutual advantage, "and greatly facilitating and improving communication between the United States and Germany," and therefore be the means of bringing the countries nearer together in peace and unity.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM POTTER.

Hon. JOHN WANAMAKER,
Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I have no special objection to adopting an amendment authorizing the Postmaster-General to make provision for postal clerks on ocean mail steamers, but I think the condition of our mail service on the ocean requires a thorough overhauling and a radical change to make it a success. We have struggled for a great many years to see how it might be improved, but all the efforts we have made in the last six or eight years, since I have had the honor of a seat on this floor, have been rather in the direction of extending our mail facilities to the countries south of us. It has been admitted on all sides, while our mail is carried in foreign vessels on the Northern Atlantic, that that service is equal to any in the world. Those great vessels which are owned by foreigners come and go with the regularity of our fast mail service on our own railroads, and the hour of arrival and departure is as well understood as the arrival and departure of trains from the Baltimore and Potomac depot. It is a splendid service, made now in a time that ten years ago would have been supposed impossible—less than seven days. The amount of mail that comes, immense as it is, I understand is promptly distributed by the officials at New York where they have a corps of admirable men trained for this special service.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator kindly tell us what it is in minutes and hours? My impression is that between the time when it arrives and leaves New York, if the mail is very heavy, there is considerable delay.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand there is from twelve to twenty-four hours' delay on some of the mails going west, which is a great consideration. I have no objection, as I said or intended to say when I began, to making ample provision for this service, but here is a partial provision; here is a provision for only two lines of steamers, the German lines.

The English Government, as it appears by the document just read by the Secretary, declined to enter into an arrangement by which the transatlantic mail should be facilitated and expedited, because of the cost to them. Their mails landing at Queenstown can be distributed upon the railway trains before they reach the principal ports; and for that reason and on account of the expense they declined to enter into the arrangement. The French Government, because of the increased expense and also because of the uncertainty of the appropriations, declined to enter into it.

Now, to begin this matter with simply the two German lines, it seems to me, is unfortunate and unwise. The whole scheme ought to have been perfected, in my judgment, before we were asked to enter into it at all. But my principal objection is not to this small appropriation. I think before we take the matter up and expend any more money upon this almost perfect system in the Northern Atlantic we ought to consider the question as to the countries south of us that our attention has been so sharply brought to by the recent conference of the countries south of us and by the President and Secretary of State.

It appears that the total expenditure on account of the mail service in all the American steam-ships the last year was $109,829.14. That is the amount of postage upon the letters. Now, instead of expending our revenues for the purpose of increasing this trade south of us (and I would only pay fair compensation to the vessels in that trade, as we do to vessels on our inland waters), we are asked to expend one-half of the amount we pay to all the American vessels for a few postal clerks to run upon two lines of German steamers between New York and Hamburg. We had better devote that money to extending our facilities elsewhere, where our trade will be increased, and let this matter of the Northern Atlantic wait for the time being until we shall have entered into negotiations and arrangements with the English and French lines as well.

Why, Mr. President, during the last Administration we began the experiment in a small way of encouraging the enterprise south of us, and while some of our friends on both sides of the Chamber insisted that a fair compensation was a subsidy, nevertheless under the last Administration we did, in connection with the fast-mail service running from New York to Tampa, Fla., make a specific appropriation for carrying the mails thence to Havana. The result of that appropriation (and it was a specific appropriation for a small steamer plying between Tampa and Havana of about $58,000—I do not have the exact figures before me) has been not only to increase our mail facilities, but, as I understand, all the Spanish mails come to-day by the way of Tampa, and thence to New York, and thence by steamer to Spain.

It seems to me that it would be better to strike out this provision, or rather not to agree to this appropriation at this time, and wait until the Post-Office Committee or the Committee on Appropriations, either one of them, may formulate a proper proposition covering the entire mail service upon the ocean. I do not understand what we are to gain, how much the commerce of the country is to be benefited by having this expenditure of $48,000, nearly half the amount we pay to all the American vessels, expended on two German lines of steamers. I should like the Senator from Kansas, who has been foremost in the endeavor always to make proper provision for this service, to agree to strike out this provision.

Mr. BLACKBURN. With all deference, I am inclined to dissent from the conclusions of my colleague upon the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Maryland. This matter was very thoroughly inquired into, the Postmaster-General was before the committee and made a full statement in his interview with the subcommittee, and then filed an argument, which has been, I believe, read at the Secretary's desk.

The object of this amendment is simply to do for the mails upon the sea what we are already doing every day for the mails upon our lines of railroad in this country. The objection made by the Senator from Maryland, at first blush, is well taken, when he calls the attention of the Senate to the fact that if this amendment shall be agreed to and incorporated in this bill it will simply establish this postal-clerk service on two lines of steamships. That is true. The Postmaster-General was unable to make any arrangement reciprocally as to the sharing of expenses either with the British or with the French Governments. It is true that the North German and the Hamburg lines will be the only ones upon which this arrangement will go into operation should this clause become a part of the bill.

But, Mr. President, that is not all of it. These ships touch at Southampton. The mails that they carry would thereby get at least one day in advance of their present delivery going from this to the older countries, and it is but fair for us to conclude that it would not be long until the English and French lines of steamers would find themselves compelled and forced to come into this arrangement or else see all the mail drift to these two German lines.

Now, as the mail comes here it is landed in New York. If one of these great mail steam-ships lands, only one a day, the chances are that twelve hours or twenty-four hours will suffice for the distribution of that mail and the scattering of it over the railroad lines to the different sections of this country. But suppose two or three mail steamers come in on the same day. That is not an elastic force in the post-office at New York City. It can not be enlarged or reduced at pleasure. If two or three mail steam-ships come in there on the same day and dump their mails—

Mr. HAWLEY. Suppose they deliver their mails during the night. Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir; that may be. These mails under the present arrangement must all be carried to the New York City post-office. There they must wait until the force which they have on hand shall be able to go through them, distribute and scatter them over the country by the different mail service that we have over the different lines of railroad.

This amendment proposes to do for our mail on the sea precisely what we have already done and are every day doing for the mail over our lines of railway.

What would be thought if we were at this day without postal clerks upon the different lines of railway over this country? It must involve an average delay of at least twenty-four hours. It may be a loss of twice that; it may be of thirty-six or even forty-eight hours in the distribution of these mails in the post-office at New York City. If it was good policy to adopt the system of distribution of mails on the trains in order to save time in delivery at the places served by the railways of the country, I do not see that that argument is in any wise lacking when you apply it to the sea service as proposed here. If we can shorten the delivery of the mail in coming from Europe to this country twenty-four hours by an appropriation of $48,000, and shorten the delivery of our mail matter going to European countries to the same extent, it seems to me that it goes without argument that the investment is a good one; at any rate it is exactly similar to the postal service we have upon the railways of the country, and I can not bring myself to oppose the incorporation of this amendment in the bill. That it is an experiment I agree. It is the first time it has been suggested; it has never been tested; but by parity of reasoning we are forced to conclude that results warrant the expenditure and warrant the undertaking in the light of what has come from the employment of this system of mail distribution on the railways of the land.

For me, I indorse the suggestion made by the Postmaster-General, and believe we ought to agree to this amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. The fundamental proposition at the bottom of all this mail service is the cost of it as compared to the efficiency. More than any other branch of the public service it concerns all the people of the United States; and the entire tendency of administration and of legislation concerning it has been, while keeping the expenses within proper bounds, to increase its efficiency and make it more and more answer the purposes of its establishment in the facilitating of intercourse between our people on land and between our own people and those of foreign countries by sea. We have a good service, and yet it can be made better. I think it does increase in efficiency every year somewhat. We can have the same efficiency on the sea that we now have on the land, and we ought undoubtedly, as the Senator from Maryland has said, to increase our facilities with the people south of us. He and I, notwithstanding our chronic party differences, have always united upon measures of this kind. I agree now, as always, that the Government pursues a niggardly policy in regard to that service, and that without reference to the incidental benefits to be derived to our commerce from the extension of our mail facilities with South and Central America, but as a matter of decent obligation to the persons from whom we practically require the carrying of our mails in their ships, and in order that we may treat them as we treat other persons who deal with the Government and as we treat with railroads who carry our mails upon the land, we ought to pay them for rendering the precise service which they do render. Now, whether that shall be twice as much or three or four or five times as much as they now get, I will not stop to discuss.

It ought to be greatly enlarged without any reference to the increase of facilities, certainly where that increase would result in increased cost to the ships rendering the service; but we ought of course to go further and provide some way of increasing the facilities. We do that in a comparatively generous way on the land. This bill contains an appropriation of nearly $300,000, and it has carried a similar amount for the last six or seven years, to increase the facilities between Boston and Tampa by rail in order that the intervening communities may be benefited by the quicker transit of the mail, and also that we may have more rapid communication with Cuba from which we have expected to derive and from which we have derived commercial advantage.

If we were to carry that system into our ship service with South and Central America we should derive still greater advantages, no doubt. A proposition of that kind, looking to that end, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations from the Committee on Commerce by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who has always taken a great deal of interest in this subject and has given to it probably more thought than any other member of this body; but it was a very elaborate system, so elaborate and so comprehensive that the postal service was a mere incident of it. It related to the building of ships which could be made to serve in time of war for offense and defense, which should be built after specifications to be provided by the General Government and under contract at the time of construction, whereby the Government should have the right to acquire the title to those ships or the use of them at its will in time of national peril.

Mr. GIBSON. Is not that the system which the British Government has adopted?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Louisiana asks if that is not the system which the British Government adopts. Substantially it is, and under it its merchant marine is convertible at very short notice into a naval establishment, having merits of its own in regard to speed not possessed perhaps by the more powerful war-ships of the British navy.

I do not now criticize that system, because I did not have time to examine it thoroughly. I have no doubt it would be admirably adapted to accomplish the purpose the Senator from Maine has in view, and which I have no doubt is in accordance with the views of the nation as connected with this great subject. But, as I said, the postal service was a mere incident to that system, and it did not seem proper to put such a system on this bill. It either belongs on a bill by itself or a bill having a purpose different from that of the mere carrying of the mail; and for that reason the committee ignored it, and the Senator from Maine, I think, has been persuaded that it is not wise to offer it as an amendment to this bill, and will allow it to take some other course at a more convenient season.

Now, if the $48,000 carried by this appropriation could be wisely expended upon some such project as that on which the Senate has heretofore passed and which the Senator from Maryland has always supported, and if we had but $48,000 in addition to what the bill otherwise carried to be expended for any purpose whatever, I would agree that it would be far more important to give it to the lines carrying our mails to South and Central America than it would be to establish this sea post-office upon the lines carrying the mail between the Atlantic ports and the ports of England and France and Germany. But no such proposition is presented. The country has the money or the means of getting the money whereby ample aid can be given if the Congress is so minded for the establishment of new and better service between our country and the countries to the south of us. There is no necessity, therefore, of making any choice. We have this service now carrying a much larger proportion of all mails which are sent from our ports to foreign countries. It is the most important service in its present condition of the external mail service of the country in existence at this time.

If it is important that the mail which starts from Washington and New York for the West should not be deposited at Chicago and St. Louis for distribution there because of the delay, it is of equal importance, in character if not in degree, that the mails which arrive in New York from Europe from points in the interior shall be distributed before they arrive in New York, in order that there may be no delay in placing them upon connecting trains in order that they may go forward to their destination in the interior.

But, Mr. President, I believe this will also result in the more prompt distribution of the mail local to New York and Boston. There must inevitably be some delay. There can not be at all times a force which can be placed upon this mail to work it as rapidly as is required, because the service is comparatively infrequent. These mails do not arrive every day. The force, therefore, which works them must be either detached from somewhere else or doing it in such a way as to prolong the operation, and thus make a delay, it may be an hour, and to the people of New York sometimes an hour is a question of a day, because if the mail is not deposited in the box and delivered until after business hours it might as well not be delivered until the next morning; but I have no doubt the delay oftentimes will be many hours, and all this affects the business relations which are represented in the carrying of the mails. I know within my own limited experience that it often happens that bankers and other business men in New York, desiring to make perfectly sure that the letters which they send shall be delivered as promptly as possible, send them by individual messenger or arrange otherwise for their special delivery, so as not to run the risk of the delay which naturally occurs from sorting the mails after their arrival at the first point on the land.

I believe that the Postmaster-General in taking up this subject has done wisely, and he has resolved it wisely, I think, so far as he can resolve it at all. The British Government interposes what is a very fair objection from their standpoint. They say their mails are delivered at Southampton, and there is abundant time to work between there and their delivery at Liverpool or other points in the interior. But the Postmaster-General says that under the operation of this system, while it will apply only to the German lines, every letter which is addressed via those lines will be sent by them and distributed on board, and therefore will gain time in delivery over those sent by British lines in such a way as to finally divert the mails from the British lines; and he anticipates, and it seems to be reasonable, that under those circumstances the British Government itself will very soon come into it. Of course that will mean some increased cost, but it will mean a very considerable shortening in the time of the delivery of the mails; I think, therefore, that this measure is wise by itself.

I do not see that there is any necessary connection between that and the other proposition which the Senator has spoken of, and which has heretofore received the concurrence of the Appropriations Committee and of the Senate, but I will call his attention to the fact that after all the efforts which have been made for the purpose of increasing the mail-pay of the steamers plying between our ports and those of South and Central America, finally, just at the incoming of the late Democratic Administration, a provision of that kind was by the concurrence of both Houses incorporated upon an appropriation bill and $800,000 was placed at the disposal of the incoming Postmaster-General for the uses of which I have spoken. He declined to expend the money, as I am persuaded that a Republican Postmaster-General would not have done, with the result that nothing came of it. Not only that, but so much friction grew up between him and the various steam-ship lines doing this service for the United States Government as, to some extent, at least, to impede the proper operation of that service. Meanwhile things have somewhat changed, and I am not so thoroughly persuaded now as I have been heretofore that the large compensation which we had in contemplation at the time is now necessary. When the subject comes up before the Senate in the regular way, I shall have occasion to say something on that point, indicating wherein I think we may, with the certainty of getting what we seek, do less than we have heretofore proposed and with the assurance that the proper result may be reached.

At all events, the committee, for the reasons which I have stated, did not think it worth while to put it in this bill, but they did believe it was worth while to increase the efficiency of the service we already have, and which has the largest and most conspicuous relation to the business of this country of any portion of our foreign mail service.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I am very glad to see this provision in the bill. I think it is one of the most sensible and progressive steps that the Department has taken in a long time. I am also glad to hear the reasons given why something does not appear in the bill in relation to the extension of our postal service southward, and the encouragement, incidentally, of our merchant marine.

The whole world rejoiced when the Bessemer rail came and with it accompanying improvements in steam-engines, safer and cheaper travel, so that railway freights were reduced three-quarters. Everybody rejoiced when the telegraph came; everybody rejoiced when the telephone came; for time is money. Every one of these things had a great influence, not immediate, perceptible, and measurable, but a large influence in facilitating the business of the world. The whole world has been greatly interested and even excited from time to time by the struggles of the steam-ships to make shorter trips across the Atlantic, and every time an hour was gained it was thought to be something gained for civilization. It is something to find the average time reduced from seven and a half days to six or six and a half. In the mean time we have been going on, not to say stupidly, because if we can practically reduce that time from twelve to twenty-four hours by the measure here under consideration it is equivalent to shortening the voyage of the ship. It is wonderful that we have permitted ourselves to bring these enormous piles of mail-bags across the ocean for six or seven days and dump them unsorted, and in the middle of the night, perhaps three or four steamers at a time, and leave the whole commercial city of New York anxiously awaiting for its mails, and the people all over the United States observe the delay and not understanding why, after seeing the arrival of the steamer announced, their letters do not come.

I can see very easily why Great Britain is not so very anxious on her end of the line, because she gets her mails at Queenstown, and while they are going from Queenstown to London or while going from Southampton to London they are assorted; but Great Britain will find out that she has an interest not only in the mails that she is receiving, but in the mails that she is sending. It is just as much an interest to her probably that these mails should be quickly distributed in New York as it is to us—not quite perhaps—but her interests are enormous over here, and her people are just as anxious to have this done as we are. They are not ready perhaps to join with us, because at their end of the line it is already practically done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 894) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that the regular order may be temporarily laid aside that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I think that the United States Government can afford to pay the sum which is provided in this bill. In 1864 we passed a law which authorized the Postmaster-General to seize any United States steam-ship he pleased, to compel it to wait for United States mails, take the mails, carry them to their destination, and receive as pay for it the sea postage. No other government on the face of this earth ever did that. The postage at that time was from 10 cents to 22 cents a half-ounce. In 1874 the great governments of the earth met at Berne, I believe, and in the interests of the people and cheap postage they concluded that they would reduce the postage to 5 cents a half-ounce, 2 cents of it being sea postage and 3 cents of it being inland. There was not a nation on the face of the earth except the United States that charged that decrease to the ship-owners, not one. But the United States of America, as rich as she was, insisted that that law should still be observed and that these mails should be taken and carried for 2 cents a half-ounce, and, except our spasmodic attempt at a subsidy, from that day to this our vessels have been carrying the mails of the United States, so far as they have been permitted to carry mails of ours at all, for 2 cents a half-ounce.

Why, sir, the United States of America from its foreign mails alone in the last twelve years has netted over $9,000,000.

Mr. GORMAN. From sea and inland postage?

Mr. FRYE. No, sir; from the sea postage alone. I have deducted the amount paid for inland postage. Nine million dollars have been netted by the United States in twelve years from carrying the foreign mails; and there is hardly a State in the United States during the same time that has paid by its mails for carrying them. The State of Ohio did not do it two years ago by $600,000. During the same twelve years Great Britain has paid, over and above what she has received from her mail service, $20,000,000 to her steam-ships, and we have made $9,000,000.

The Brazilian line from New York to Rio de Janeiro to-day is carrying United States mails for nothing, and has been for the last five years. Why? Because the Postmaster-General under the law said that he could only pay them 2 cents a half-ounce for carrying the letters of the United States to Brazil, and when the other steam-ship companies refused to carry, the Brazilian line continued to carry and accommodated the United States, and the amount which the United States could pay that company did not pay it within 15 per cent. of the money the company was compelled to pay out for handling the mails alone. Consequently, for five years it has not received a dollar from the United States for carrying the mail and is depending upon Congress to appropriate money to pay it something or other some time or other.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] says that we ought to do on a vessel something as we do on the railroad. I wish he was here. I am delighted to have him discover that there is a duty about that, because my impression is that every time he has voted against every proposition which has been made in that direction. He would have us do the same carrying of our mails on steam-ships as we do on land! Why, we paid $5,000,000 for carrying the mails of the United States in stage-coaches—$5,000,000 for carrying the mails 225,000 miles; and we refuse to pay over $40,000 for carrying the United States mails in United States vessels over 2,000,000 miles! We pay to-day for carrying the mails upon little steamers on the Florida rivers, $24,000, on the rivers of Louisiana, $42,000—more money than we pay for carrying all the United States mails over the Pacific Ocean, millions of miles. We paid $500,000 for carrying United States mails in little coastwise vessels, protected absolutely from competition by the laws of the United States, and they did not carry the mails over 300,000 miles for the $500,000. Yet we refuse to pay more than $40,000 for the carrying of all the United States mails on all the American ships over 2,000,000 miles a year.

I think, sir, it is about time that even so conservative a Senator as the Senator from Kentucky should awaken to the fact that the United States does owe some duty on the ocean as well as on the shore.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not know that I have any opposition to the provisions of this bill. Certainly, everything that promotes the advancement of our commerce and the certainty and expedition of the mails is worthy of reasonable compensation. The question and the only question here, it seems to me, is as to the practicability at any reasonable expenditure of accomplishing this object, and that depends upon the bulk of the foreign mails, the amount of mail matter, and the number of clerks who are required to assort it. I take it that it is a vast bulk of matter, and that there may be some question whether or not the necessary force could be supplied on board the ships at any reasonable amount of money to perform this service. I have no information upon that subject. I have not heard any estimate upon any data whatever of the amount of mail matter and the amount of clerical service that will be necessary to perform this duty. That is a subject, I think, that ought to be presented, and is the important and determining fact in this whole matter. Is it practicable to distribute these mails with any reasonable amount of service in this small space within the time occupied in the transit of the vessel? That depends upon the bulk of the mail matter.

With reference, however, to the suggestion, and it is to that that I rose particularly to speak, of the efficiency of this mail service in the South to the West India Islands and its prospective extension to Central and South America, that service has been a most eminent and distinguished success. The service from Tampa with the fast mail from Boston and New York has perhaps accomplished more than any other mail service that this Government has or has ever had in a short space of time. The vessels that have been constructed by Mr. H. B. Plant and his associates for that service and have been induced by the fast mail appropriation are models of beauty and of modern art in naval architecture. They have succeeded in drawing the great mass of the mails from the West India Islands, as I am informed, over that transit, passing through this country entirely from Tampa to New York and there seeking transit over the ocean to European countries.

Mr. GORMAN. How frequent is the service?

Mr. CALL. It is, I think, a biweekly service, and it has brought in dollars and cents a remunerative compensation to the Government.

Now, I think it would have been very wise, if this system of sea postal service be practicable at all, to have extended it to those ships, as it certainly is wise to encourage the extension of that communication not only to the Island of Cuba, where it now terminates, but to Central and to South America. The port of Tampa presents a most favorable point for communication with the West India Islands and with South and Central America, and this port and its mail service ought to be encouraged and fostered and developed by every means in order that the commercial intercourse between this country and the people of those countries should be extended. It is easy to accomplish. They lie almost within a stone's-throw of the coast of Florida. The magnificent port and harbor of Pensacola, which is destined some day to become beyond all question one of the great cities of the Gulf, presents a harbor unsurpassed in all the world for all the purposes of commercial and naval intercourse either in war or in peace. The great harbors upon that coast present to this country opportunities for the mail transit to the Central and South American and West India countries which would be remunerative in itself, leaving out of view the advantages of the commercial intercourse that could easily be established by a quick transit upon those routes.

Mr. President, I make no objection to this provision, although I agree with the Senator from Maryland that it would have been wiser to have made the provision applicable to the mail transit either now or hereafter to be established to the West Indies and to Central and South America.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I do not care to detain the Senate, although I am very glad that I made the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] who has charge of the bill, and that the valuable statements which have been made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and others will appear in the RECORD and go to the country.

I have never been in the consideration of this or any of the appropriation bills opposed per se to the advance made in the facilities of the mail service, or to the increase of facilities in any other branch of the Government. I recognize, however, that the expenditures of the Post-Office Department exceed the revenues some $7,000,000 per annum. What I feared was that entering upon this new scheme untried, as I understand, by any nation upon the face of the globe, appropriating to begin with forty-eight or fifty thousand dollars per annum, would probably divert and prevent us from extending our system to the countries south of us.

I have advocated a fast-mail service on land and on the ocean. I believe with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] that the great service between New York and Tampa and thence to Havana is the most valuable service to-day of this kind in the country. It is a direct subsidy, as the word "subsidy" is popularly or commonly understood, because it is a special appropriation for a special service, and it is a subsidy in that particular because there is absolutely no competition in the steamship service between Tampa and Havana.

The fact that I have supported such appropriations, the fact that I have presented here, and I am glad to say succeeded for my own community, in addition to this great through service in years past, in securing one from Baltimore to Hagerstown, which extends on to the southwest, and which is of great value to that people, has been misunderstood; and there have been some who supposed that I was outside of the declarations of the party to which I belong. But when the communities and the people who are interested in it look at the matter practically, it is admitted by a great many of those in my own State who at first criticised my action that there is a wide difference between paying fair service for the carriage of the mails upon land and upon our inland waters from that which is understood as a subsidy. We subsidize the railroads when we pay the railroads compensation for speed and the weight of the mails. We apply the same rule to the steamers that ply upon the Chesapeake Bay and upon the rivers of the country and all the inland waters, and we pay them for that service. I voted that that same rule and the same measure of compensation should be applied to the steamers from Tampa to Havana, outside of the jurisdiction of the United States—nothing but a fair and just compensation for the service rendered to the country.

Now, I would apply that same rule to all the vessels which ply between any American port and any port of any country south of us. To that extent, and to that extent alone, do I believe that it is wise and proper to go; and that is very different from the other proposition which is advocated to subsidize the ship-builders and the ship-owners, to which I am utterly opposed, although I recognize that it will be most difficult for us to establish these lines in competition with other countries who do subsidize them. Yet I believe the genius and the enterprise of the American people are such that, with only fair compensation, with such compensation as we pay upon our own great bay, the Chesapeake, we can extend our commerce and have these additional facilities.

I am very glad to know, Mr. President, and to state to the Senate that I believe ten years ago the entire commercial community of the city of Baltimore was unalterably opposed even to the payment of the same compensation that we give per mile to our steamers upon the Chesapeake Bay to any vessels that should ply between our ports and foreign ports. I have received within the past few months resolutions of our boards of trade and Merchants and Manufacturers' Association advocating and urging that such compensation should be paid, drawing the distinction clearly and sharply between such action and what is known as subsidizing these vessels.

I trust the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] who has charge of these bills, who goes away beyond the point where I can follow him, will in the end so modify his proposition that it may be reduced to that point where it will give American vessels trading with South American ports in the matter of compensation the same measure that we give to those upon the Mississippi River, and the Arkansas River, and Chesapeake Bay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The words in italics in the paragraph will be considered as one amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD tabular statements covering the various items of expenditure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the table will be inserted in the RECORD.

The table referred to is as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MARTIN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes; had agreed to the thirty-ninth amendment of the Senate with an amendment; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BUTTERWORTH, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. FORNEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7160) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, numbered 9 and 10.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate requesting the President to return to the Senate the bill (S. 145) for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry S. French.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 344) to grant the right of way to the Pittsburgh, Columbus and Fort Smith Railway Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 1110) granting a pension to William J. Bryan;

A bill (H. R. 1405) granting a pension to Betsy Cole;

A bill (H. R. 1474) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of George W. Madden;

A bill (H. R. 1783) granting a pension to Mrs. Alice A. Cunningham;

A bill (H. R. 3458) granting a pension to Ann Ruffner; and

A bill (H. R. 5974) extending the time of payment to purchasers of land of the Omaha tribe of Indians in Nebraska, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 1) to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside in order to take up the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily in order to take up the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9603) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under Schedule A, in the appropriations for salaries of ministers, on page 2, line 7, after the word "Chili," to strike out "and" and insert "the Argentine Republic, the United States of Colombia, and;" and in line 8, after the word "each," to strike out "twenty" and insert "forty;" so as to make the clause read:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Chili, the Argentine Republic, the United States of Colombia, and Peru, at $10,000 each, $40,000.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to inquire of the Senator who has charge of the bill how much increase is made in the ministers to the Argentine Republic and the United States of Colombia.

Mr. HALE. Two thousand five hundred dollars each. They are South American Republics with which we have a large trade, and it seemed to the State Department that they ought at least be put on the basis of Chili and Peru, where they have less trade and less likelihood of important commercial relations in the future. For that reason the committee put them in the same schedule.

Mr. DOLPH. There must be some mistake about the amount appropriated, then. The original amount appropriated in this clause was $20,000. It is increased to $40,000.

Mr. HALE. The two ministers are put in each at $10,000.

Mr. DOLPH. The two are taken out of the provision in lines 14 to 19, inclusive, and that is only reduced $7,500. That would look as if these had been increased from $3,750 each to $10,000; that is to say, it should not be $60,000, it should be $45,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls attention to the fact that there is one inserted in that paragraph, Denmark, which changes the calculation.

Mr. HALE. Yes, Denmark is inserted there; that is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, after the words "plenipotentiary to," at the end of line 14, to strike out "the Argentine Republic, the United States of Colombia;" in line 17, after the word "Norway," to insert "Denmark;" and in line 18, after the word "each," to strike out "sixty-seven thousand five hundred" and insert "sixty thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Paraguay and Uruguay, Hawaiian Islands, Turkey, Belgium, Netherlands, Sweden and Norway, Denmark, and Venezuela, at $7,500 each, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, to strike out in line 22 the following words:

Minister resident in Denmark, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "miscellaneous expenses foreign intercourse," on page 7, line 19, after the word "necessary," to insert "of which the sum of $3,500 may be expended on the certificate of the Secretary of State;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the diplomatic and consular service, and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States, to be expended pursuant to the requirements of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, $80,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of which the sum of $3,500 may be expended on the certificate of the Secretary of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 23, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

For salary and expenses of a commercial agent at Boma, in the Lower Congo Basin, with authority to visit and report upon the commercial resources of the Upper and Lower Congo Basin, their products, their minerals, their vegetable wealth, the openings for American trade, and to collect such information on the subject of that country as shall be thought of interest to the United States, $5,000.

Mr. MORGAN. If there is any recommendation from the Secretary of State on the subject of this appropriation, I should like to have it read.

Mr. HALE. I will send for that and have it read before we get through.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the chairman of the committee will consent to postpone the part of the bill in italics, on pages 8 to 11, relating to the International American Conference until the end of the bill is reached. There are some Senators who are out who desire to examine into that question, and they ask me to request the Senator in charge of the bill to postpone it until they could be present.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the Secretary may omit the next portion of the bill to page 11, Schedule B; that we go on from that point and take up these amendments afterwards.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read accordingly. The reading of the bill will be resumed at Schedule B on page 11.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at line 11 on page 11.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under "Schedule B," in the appropriations for "Salaries consular service," on page 11, line 21, after "Montreal," to insert "Mexico;" and in line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the clause read:

Consuls-general at Berlin, Honolulu, Kanagawa, Montreal, Mexico, and Panama, at $4,000 each, $24,000.

Mr. HALE. Before the word "Panama," in line 21, I move to strike out the word "and," and after "Panama" to insert "and Vienna," changing the total from $24,000 to $28,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 12, to strike out lines 3 and 4 in the following words:

Consuls-general at Mexico and Nuevo Laredo, at $2,500 each, $5,000.

And in lieu thereof insert:

Consul-general at Nuevo Laredo, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 11, to increase the total amount of appropriations "for salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, and commercial agents" from "$374,000" to "$411,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Class 2," on page 12, after line 19, to insert:

France:
Consul at Havre.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 5, on page 13.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 3, on page 23.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the word "Mexico," in line 1, on page 23.

Mr. HALE. In line 1, on page 23, I move to strike out the word "Mexico."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 25, after line 18, to insert:

AMERICAN CEMETERY AT ACAPULCO, MEXICO.

For improving and putting in proper condition the American cemetery at Acapulco, Mexico, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HALE. On page 3, line 4, I move to insert "and" before "Siam," after "Siam" to strike out "and Switzerland," and after line 7 to insert:

Envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Switzerland, $5,000.

That does not change the salary at all, only the rank, and makes it correspond to the rank of the Swiss minister here.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Maine. While his amendment at the moment does not increase the appropriation for the salary, necessarily if you increase the rank of the minister at Switzerland, must not the appropriation follow?

Mr. HALE. No, it does not in any way change the pay; it only changes the rank and makes it correspond with the rank of the minister Switzerland sends to this country. It is only a question of form.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Those are all the committee amendments, except the amendments from pages 8 to 11, which, by request of the Senator from Alabama, were deferred until other amendments were considered. If there are other smaller amendments than those which Senators have to offer, I give way at present.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report an amendment to be inserted on page 2, at the end of line 6. At the end of that line and before the word "Chili," in line 7, I move to insert "Turkey;" so as to read:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Turkey, Chili, the Argentine Republic, the United States of Colombia, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. This amendment is proposed by the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and is very strongly supported by a letter from the Secretary of State. As I see that the committee have adopted the other amendments recommended at the same time, I am only surprised that this amendment was not inserted here, because the case is stronger for Turkey than for any other country. It has now an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, but at one time it was reduced by the ordinary way to $7,500, and afterwards when Mr. Cox became envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary it was increased to $10,000, and then in the last appropriation act it was reduced again to $7,500.

I think I shall ask to have read the letter of the Secretary of State which explains the whole matter fully. I do not care to have it read, however, unless some Senator desires it. It explains the whole matter, and it may be printed. I should like to have it go into the RECORD so as to show the reasons for the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. It had better be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 19, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th instant, with which you transmit a copy of a resolution of the Senate, of the date of March 3, 1890, in respect to the "advisability of advancing the American legation in the Empire of Turkey to a grade of a second-class mission, with a salary to the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of $12,000 per annum." Your committee accordingly request the views of this Department as to the expediency of recommending such a change in the law.

The mission of the United States to the Ottoman Porte is now, and has been since July 1, 1882, of the plenipotentiary grade, so that the only question to be considered is touching the rate of salary suitable for the office. The relative representative rank of the United States minister at Constantinople depends solely upon his official style and title, not upon his compensation.

Section 1675 of the Revised Statutes, in its first unamended form, classed Turkey among the missions resident at a salary of $7,500. In the amended form (R. S., 2d edition) the specific designation of Turkey is omitted, and it comes as a plenipotentiary mission under the general provision:

"Those to all other countries, unless where a different compensation is prescribed by law, each, $10,000."

A different compensation was, in fact, prescribed by law between 1875 and 1882, annual appropriations having been made for a minister resident to Turkey at $7,500. By the act making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, the grade of the office was raised to envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, but without corresponding increase of salary, and General Lew. Wallace, then minister resident, was commissioned to the higher grade. While the late Hon. S. S. Cox was minister plenipotentiary, the salary appropriated was increased to $10,000, but after his retirement the rate of $7,500 was resumed.

In view alike of the relative importance of the Ottoman mission among those of Europe, and of the high cost of living at Constantinople, owing to the exigencies of a non-Christian oriental society, the salary of $7,500 now allotted is regarded as wholly inadequate. The precedent set in section 1675, Revised Statutes, and followed during Mr. Cox's incumbency of the mission, by which $10,000 was appropriated, should, in my judgment, be followed, and the office be permanently classed in the grade to which it fitly belongs.

I am not, however, in favor of raising the mission to the $12,000 grade, as proposed.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,

Chairman Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, while there were several recommendations from the Secretary of State to increase the salaries of different ministers, the Committee on Appropriations did not see that the condition demanded any increase or raising in importance of the Turkish minister. In reporting as they did for the increases which were recommended for the Argentine Republic and for Colombia, in South America, the committee believed that these nations are ones with which we are increasing our relations and hope to still further increase them in trade and commerce, and could see no reason why the Argentine Republic and the United States of Colombia should not be on the same basis with Chili and Peru, with whom we have no such relations. Therefore, it being in the line to which the American mind is directed now, we reported that increase.

The only other increase that was reported was in the case of Denmark, which was not put up to $10,000, but only to $7,500 to make it commensurate with the mission they send here now, and it being a country where we have large interests by way of immigration of her population that is constantly increasing.

The committee did not see, and I do not see, that there is anything in the importance of the mission to Turkey that demands the increase of its salary. Whether the Secretary of State recommends it or otherwise, we have very little to do with Turkey. We have no immigrants from Turkey of any account; we have no relation such as European powers with any of the delicate questions that require the highest rank of a minister to be maintained there; and for that reason the committee voted down the proposition to increase the importance and pay of this mission.

In saying this I represent the committee. The matter, of course, must be left to the Senate. I do not see any good reason why, if this is done, it shall not be done in other cases.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, although Turkey may be said in some sense to be not an increasing, but rather a decreasing power, yet it is very certain that all European nations regard diplomatic relations that are conducted with Turkey as equal to any with the most powerful nations of the world. Therefore it is that all European countries without exception send to Turkey officers of the very highest grade, because the questions constantly arising in diplomatic intercourse with Turkey are of the greatest importance, involving the peace of nations.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator if those questions are not purely European and nothing else. Do they not arise from the fact that Turkey is considered the "sick man" of Europe; that each great power has its eye upon him; and that it is necessary as a great many complications center there that they have high ministers, none of which reasons apply to the United States?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think all of them apply to the United States, because the questions that may be involved in Turkey not only affect the peace of Europe, but may affect our relations with other countries, and the Government of the United States has always so considered it. The mission to Turkey is filled by an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary by the general statutes of the United States. In the statutes as they now stand to-day the mission to Turkey is classed as an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary. The variation in pay has only been made by the appropriations in the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. The mission is down in the bill as an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary. It is only a question of raising the salary.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well. Our officer there comes into contact with all the leading diplomats of the world, and we have all along felt that it was necessary to give him a rank commensurate with the other diplomatic officers with whom he is associated. The only question was whether he should have $7,500 or $10,000 a year. A general law, which came from the Committee on Foreign Relations in 1863, fixed the grade of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, and so it has always stood, and the pay was awarded to him at $10,000 a year, because he must live there at a very expensive place, costing at least 25 or 30 per cent. more than at any other capital in Europe. The foreign ministers there have to live in a colony by themselves, and our representative is associated with persons of very high pay and high salary. Therefore it is that the law, not the wish of the Committee on Appropriations, but the law, fixes the rank and pay at $10,000 a year. He has only been reduced in the ad captandum way in which many of the salaries of our diplomatic officers have been disturbed.

This has been recommended. When Mr. Cox was sent there by common consent he was given $10,000 a year. Now there is a very worthy and excellent gentleman, a man of ability and character, sent there to represent this Government and he ought to be put in the same position as his predecessor. To go there with a less salary would be a discrimination against him and against his office. Therefore the Committee on Foreign Relations, I believe, were unanimously of the opinion that the mission to Turkey should be placed where it is by law among the $10,000 envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary. It seems to me that the law itself is the governing rule here, and not the mere idea which the Committee on Appropriations might form; not that they are not entitled, if they can justify it and see a good occasion to make a change, but this is not an occasion of the kind. The difference between the salary may disable the officer from holding his relative social position in that very peculiar country.

Mr. HALE. The sum fixed by the bill is the same that it was last year. The committee have not reduced it. It is the same that it has been for years, with the exception in the case of Mr. Cox, because it was made exceptional then.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the law itself fixes the salary at $10,000.

Mr. HALE. There is no law.

Mr. SHERMAN. The general statutes, in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HALE. But that has been changed since by appropriation acts which have fixed the salaries. You will find all those things determined by the appropriation acts.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is changed in a very irregular way, not in the way it should be done, because the law itself, which is the permanent law of the day, fixes the salary. It has been changed for the time, from year to year, because the changes in the appropriation bills were only changes for a year, by limiting the amount of appropriation, saying that the amount appropriated shall be all that the person shall receive. But that does not change the law. It still stands and entitles the officer to receive $10,000 a year unless it is excepted in the way that has been done by the appropriation bills. It seems to me that the recommendation of the Secretary of State is a wise one.

Mr. GIBSON. I did not hear the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio. Was it to increase the grade or rank?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, the grade is now fixed by law as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary.

Mr. GIBSON. It was to change the salary?

Mr. SHERMAN. The salary is fixed by law, by the Revised Statutes, at $10,000—

Mr. HALE. I do not admit that, by any means.

Mr. SHERMAN. But, as was said, at different times the Committee on Appropriations have reduced the amount appropriated, and in some cases have inserted a clause providing that no greater sum should be paid than the amount appropriated. But when Mr. Cox was sent there it was increased to $10,000, and now when the present incumbent comes in it is reduced to $7,500.

Mr. HALE. I want to say right here on this point that the remark is continually made that the Committee on Appropriations has cut down the salary for different places from what the regular law establishes it at. Sir, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate has done that in no case. It has never pretended or asked the authority to do that. Certain salaries were fixed by the old Revised Statutes years ago, but subsequent to that the House of Representatives in raising and cutting down the expenses of the Government reduced salaries by the hundreds. But they put provisions into some bills that the amount they appropriated should be in full satisfaction for the year, and in other bills declared in terms, making it the law, that thereafter the salaries should be as fixed in that bill. The committee since then has followed those provisions, and it is not now fitting and proper that anybody should receive the impression that the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate has sought to interfere with the law. It takes the salaries as they come from the House of Representatives, as it is found they have existed for years, as in the case of the mission to Turkey at $7,500. It is not attempted to raise either the importance or the rank or the titular name by which the minister is known. It leaves all that, and leaves the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, and as the minister has been paid there for ten or twelve years, with the exception of the case of Mr. Cox; and it does not believe, for the reason I have stated, that this is a case where the needs of commerce and trade and close relations require any raising of the salary. But I leave it to the Senate.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Maine that the relations between the people of the United States and the people of Turkey are perhaps most remote, but Constantinople is the most important diplomatic point in the world. The only question that agitates Europe is what they call the Eastern question, and that question has been discussed and determined pretty much at Constantinople. For this reason every one of the European Governments, the Government of Great Britain, of Russia, of France, of Germany, and of Austria, each sends its ablest diplomatists to Constantinople, because, as I have already stated, it is there that the Eastern question assumes its most acute and interesting form. I think for that reason we should send to Constantinople one of our most accomplished publicists and diplomatists, and should give him a salary that would enable him to mingle with the diplomatists and ambassadors there from every European country. They hold the highest rank at Constantinople; they receive the largest pay. I think, therefore, it would be wise policy to vote to our minister at Constantinople a salary that would enable him without embarrassment to meet on equal terms with the ambassadors from the great European powers.

Our ministers have always labored under the embarrassment of not knowing personally the public men of Europe, nor have they been able to form accurate opinions of the sentiments and designs of the different cabinets of the European states. This was our difficulty in making the treaty of Ghent. We know very well that in making that treaty, for six months our ministers were dancing in attendance in the ante-chamber of the British commissioners who assembled there, and that it was owing to the personal relations between John Quincy Adams and the court of the Czar of Russia that we were enabled to ascertain that it was the purpose of the allies to insist that Great Britain should make peace with us in the war of 1812. That strengthened the hand of our commissioners. It enabled them to assume a dignified attitude, and to insist upon a recognition of the rights of the American people.

So to-day if any question were to arise between the United States and any European Government, between the United States and Great Britain, or Germany, or Spain, or France, we should gain a great advantage by having ministers who were personally acquainted with the strength, the designs, the motives of the different European courts. I know, sir, no place in Europe where they would be so likely to acquire this information in authentic form as at Constantinople, where are assembled the ablest diplomatists of Europe, because there is to be settled and determined the burning question that concerns every European Government to-day. On that issue depends the relation of every European state with its neighbor, and on that issue hangs the question of war and peace to-day in Europe.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, presumably the Secretary of State knows as much about the importance of the mission at Constantinople and the cost of living there as any of us, and he says:

In view alike of the relative importance of the Ottoman mission among those of Europe, and of the high cost of living at Constantinople, owing to the exigencies of a non-Christian oriental society, the salary of $7,500 now allotted is regarded as wholly inadequate.

This matter was before the Committee on Foreign Relations. As was stated by the chairman of the committee, the committee were united in believing that this increase ought to be made, and the amendment was reported from the committee by the chairman by the direction of the committee, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The committee have increased the salary of our ministers to the Argentine Republic and the United States of Colombia largely in view of what we hope to accomplish in the future, the growing or future importance of our relations with those countries. They have discounted the future to increase those salaries, and I can not understand why they should have left Turkey out.

I disagree entirely with the Senator who has this bill in charge. There are very important questions arising constantly in Turkey affecting American citizens; questions arising there between the missionaries and the Government, between American citizens and the Government. The Government of Turkey, as every one knows, is a despotic Government, in which without constant attention to the rights of American citizens they are liable to be infringed.

I know personally that we now have a very excellent and competent man there, and I can not see why having during the incumbency of Mr. Cox paid a salary of $10,000 it should not be continued or why it should be cut down as soon as there is a change. The salary ought to be paid without reference particularly to the man who occupies the position, but to the importance of the position and the duties to be discharged.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, if there should arise any differences between the House of Representatives and the Senate on a question of this kind, it seems to me that the other House, in a spirit of proper comity, ought to yield its opinion to that of the Senate in regard to the compensation of our foreign ministers. We have to deal with them more particularly and more directly than the other House has to do. We have to examine into their character and capacity when they are nominated and confirmed for these high positions. The bills relating to the regulation of foreign relations ought to be considered here, and it is expected that this body should be able to furnish such information as is necessary to proper legislation upon any question involving our foreign relations.

I think when in the Revised Statutes this mission was raised to that of our highest rank and a salary of $10,000 was affixed to it, the Senate ought never to have permitted a lapse from that salary to $7,500, which it appears now the other House has established as a rule for the regulation of the compensation of the minister plenipotentiary to the Government or Dominion of Turkey. We ought either to abolish that office entirely, or we ought to so compensate whoever holds it as that he can at least maintain a decent and respectable appearance among the different great ministers who assemble at that very important point, without drawing upon his private resources. It looks like a pity that an American citizen can not be supported by his Government in a sufficient style and a sufficient allowance of money to maintain himself in respectability among the society of other foreign ministers and diplomats at Constantinople, unless he happens to have a large private fortune to draw upon for that purpose. I think, sir, that the foreign missions of this country ought to be open to its talent, to its ability, to its enterprise, and that men who are not possessed of large fortunes ought to have sufficient compensation to enable them to live in decency at least at the places to which they are assigned.

Constantinople is upon the sea, the inlet that leads from the Black Sea into the Mediterranean. The Dardanelles, the Bosphorus, the Sea of Azov, form a channel of commercial intercommunication which is of very considerable advantage to the people of the United States, and I trust will be very greatly increased. In the midst of the very sensitive and delicate situations that are constantly occurring at Constantinople, it is to be expected that American commerce may suddenly receive a check and that we may find it necessary to have a man on the ground of sufficient ability to handle any question concerning the commercial rights of the American people that may arise, and so of the personal rights of American citizens.

We have just made an appropriation in this bill for paying the expenses of feeding American citizens who are imprisoned in the Turkish Dominions. We do this because we have found it necessary in that non-Christian state, in Egypt at least if not elsewhere in the Turkish dominions, to establish a court in which the officers of the United States Government have jurisdiction to try and punish American citizens for crime, and it is within my recollection that a citizen of the United States was condemned and sentenced to death by the minister at Constantinople, subject, however, to an appeal to the President of the United States.

Having found it necessary to confer upon our ministers supervisory jurisdiction in respect to matters of life and death, matters of criminal punishment and the like, I think that no sane man can point out any particular diplomatic residence in the world, unless it may be in China or Japan, where the minister would have more important or more delicate duties to perform than interchange in respect of the rights of American citizens, their liberties and their lives. Your British minister or French minister has not anything to do with matters of this kind, nor the minister to any other country except a non-Christian country.

We need in Turkey, if we need him anywhere in the world, a man of high capacity, broad information, sound judgment, perfect patriotism, and real statesmanship, to conduct the affairs of that mission. Here is this dominion of Turkey sweeping out all over Arabia, over Syria, a suzerainty over Egypt, all along the coast of the Mediterranean Sea, down the Red Sea and the canal that leads from the Red Sea to the Mediterranean. There is Turkish power found everywhere, and there is American commerce found everywhere at all the ports of that country. We have consuls-general and consuls at different places who ought to be under the supervision and correction, to some extent at least, of the minister at Constantinople, and I have no doubt they are.

Mr. HALE. The consuls have nothing whatever to do with the minister.

Mr. MORGAN. I have read of many cases I think in history where the consuls were held bound to strict accountability to the ministers, who had a right to overrule them and to declare their judgments void, and to correct them in matters of commerce, particularly when there was a threat of war between two countries, a quarrel of a diplomatic kind.

Mr. HALE. The Senator, who is as well informed upon foreign relations as any member of this body, knows that it is the unwritten law of the diplomatic service that a sharp line is drawn between the diplomatic and the consular service, not only socially but in business. A minister will not give advice. As is suggested by the Senator at my right, Mr. Adams in a very critical time declined to even give counsel or suggestion to Americans in the consular service. The two are entirely distinct. In the Turkish dominions the American consulates are thick and frequent, and they attend to all this matter of business. The minister has as little to do as a man possibly could have to do anywhere.

Mr. MORGAN. At the same time if the Secretary of State orders the consuls to make their reports to the minister and to abide by his regulations and directions, they are obliged to do it.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator would produce an instance where a Secretary of State has ordered a consul in the consular service to report to the minister, instead of directly to the State Department.

Mr. MORGAN. It occurs sometimes, and has occurred frequently in South America.

Mr. HALE. I have never known of such a case.

Mr. MORGAN. I have not the citations at hand at this moment, but I will gratify the Senator from Maine by producing them if he desires. But it is part of the diplomatic and consular system, the foreign relation system of this country, that the Secretary of State has the right to put the consuls in any country under the direction of the minister resident there and to compel them to obey his directions in all matters concerning their office where they are not regulated by positive law. We should have a very tangled and a very loose system indeed if that were not so, if a consul could set himself up in doing or refusing to do what he might choose when the Secretary of State had put him under the orders of the minister resident at a particular court or at a particular place.

Now, we have another field of disputation, and one that is of very considerable importance, and a good deal of friction about it, too, in the Turkish dominions. American missionaries are there. I hope they will continue there until they have wrought very great good among those people. Our Government has treaty relations with Turkey under which these American missionaries have certain rights and privileges, and a certain protection is due to them according to our treaty arrangements with the Turkish Porte. Difficulties are continually arising; they come to the attention of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and they always involve very delicate questions indeed—questions of conscience. We have schools over there, and those schools are continually producing questions between the people of the different provinces of Turkey and the persons who are engaged in teaching these Christian or religious schools, as you please to call them. These questions must come, of course, through the minister at Constantinople. Mr. Cox, in his correspondence with the United States Government, laid bare a number of these questions and made very important recommendations in respect of them. To deal with questions of this kind, which are questions of conscience, between permanently established systems of religion that are in direct hostility to each other, as we may say, and as has been the fact in ages past as well as more modernly, requires a man in Constantinople to have a head on his shoulders and some courage in his heart to act on these questions and to prevent collision between the two Governments.

We have interests in Turkey that if they were denied to us by the practical administration of Turkish laws would require us to send our Navy to the coasts of Turkey for the purpose of seeking redress and indemnity. I do not know any country with which our relations are more delicate and more involved really than with Turkey, unless it may be one of the great nations with which we have constant, frequent, very large commercial intercourse.

The nature of the duties to be performed by the minister at Constantinople requires a man of ability and character there. I feel, Mr. President, a little bit ashamed of the idea of sending a man to Constantinople with $7,500 a year as support derived from this Government, when perhaps it will not pay one-half of his expense, not more than one-half, anyway, in the community where he is bound to reside, in that colony of diplomatists who reside, I believe, on the Bosphorus.

So I am in favor and have always been in favor and the Committee on Foreign Relations is unanimously in favor of increasing this salary to at least $10,000. It ought to be more. Of course we have got to try to get back to the standard of the law as it was at the time the Revised Statutes were adopted and at the time the other House commenced clipping off these salaries, a fragment at a time, until they got them down to zero. Let us abolish that mission entirely and recall our minister unless we can sustain him there in something like decency and respectability.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Secretary to turn to page 8 and read the amendments that were passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first reserved amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 23, before the word "thousand," strike out "four" and insert "six;" so as to read:

For salary and expenses of commercial agent at Boma, in the Lower Congo basin, $6,000.

Mr. HALE. No; I meant for the Secretary to read the amendment following that one.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the first reserved amendment.

Mr. HALE. I shall call that up by and by. Read the conference amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment will be stated.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to reading the entire matter proposed to be inserted as one amendment.

Mr. HALE. Let the Secretary read through all the paragraphs.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 23, on page 8, the Committee on Appropriations report to insert:

INTERNATIONAL AMERICAN CONFERENCE.

To enable the President to complete the work and carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference, including the compensation of translators, copyists, clerks, and other employees, $15,500; for office rent, stationery, postage, fuel, lights, and other miscellaneous expenses, $9,250; for the printing and distribution to the public of the proceedings and reports of the International American Conference, $25,000; in all, $49,750; and such appropriations, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended under the direction and subject to the approval of the Secretary of State.

For compensation of three commissioners, not more than two of whom shall belong to one political party, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to consider the establishment of an international coin or coins, as recommended by the International American Conference, who shall receive, in lieu of expenses, an allowance of $10 per diem during the time they shall be engaged in the actual performance of their duties; and for other expenses attending the meeting of such commissioners, $15,000, to be expended under the direction and subject to the approval of the Secretary of State; and the President of the United States is authorized to invite the Governments of the several other American Republics and the Hawaiian Kingdom to appoint commissioners for a like purpose to meet in the city of Washington on the first Wednesday of January, 1891.

For payment of the share of the United States of a preliminary survey for an intercontinental railway as recommended by the International American Conference, $65,000; and in furtherance of said preliminary survey the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, three members of the Intercontinental Railway Commission, not more than two of whom shall belong to one political party, whose compensation shall be paid from the common intercontinental railway fund, as recommended by the International American Conference; and the President may, in addition to civil engineers employed by said commission, and at the request of the commission, detail from the Army and Navy of the United States such officers as, in his discretion, may be spared without detriment to the service, to serve as engineers under such commission in making a survey for an intercontinental railway; and officers so detailed may receive, in addition to their lawful pay and allowances, from the common intercontinental railway fund, such compensation in lieu of expenses as may be allowed them by said commission.

For the organization and establishment, under the direction of the Secretary of State, of "The International Union of American Republics for the prompt collection and distribution of commercial information," $36,000, and the sums contributed by other American Republics for this purpose, when collected, shall be covered into the Treasury.

For the compilation and publication, under the direction of the Secretary of State, of a uniform nomenclature of articles of merchandise exported and imported in the English, Spanish, and Portuguese languages, and provided by the International American Conference, $10,000.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the language of the first few lines of this amendment is very general, and it seems to me it ought to be made more definite:

To enable the President to complete the work and carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference, including the compensation of translators, copyists, clerks, and other employes, etc.—so many thousand dollars.

Now, the question would naturally arise in my mind, What are the recommendations of the International American Conference? To what recommendations of that conference does this particular part of this act apply if we "enable the President to complete the work and carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference?" I find in a message of the President, Executive Document No. 135, a communication from the President to the Senate and House of Representatives, in which he says:

The International American Conference, recently in session at this Capital, recommended for adoption by the several American Republics:

1. A uniform system of customs regulations for the classification and valuation of imported merchandise;
2. A uniform nomenclature for the description of articles of merchandise imported and exported; and
3. The establishment at Washington of an International Bureau of Information.

The conference also, at its final session, decided to establish in the city of Washington, as a fitting memorial of its meeting, a Latin-American Library, to be formed by contributions from the several nations of historical, geographical, and literary works, maps, manuscripts, and official documents relating to the history and civilization of America, and expressed a desire that the Government of the United States should provide a suitable building for the shelter of such a library, to be solemnly dedicated upon the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America.

The President proceeds:

The importance of these suggestions is fully set forth in the letter of the Secretary of State, and the accompanying documents herewith transmitted, to which I invite your attention.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 2, 1890.

I suppose that that message summarizes and expresses, perhaps in as clear language as could be stated, what are the recommendations of the Pan-American Congress, and this amendment is to enable the President to carry into effect those recommendations and to complete the work.

If that be a full statement of what the recommendations are that this amendment applies to, it occurs to me that we are getting along a little too fast perhaps in this matter, because we have not as yet, so far as I am informed, the commitment of either of the Governments represented in the Pan-American Congress, by treaty or by convention, to any of the propositions contained in the President's message, and the support and payment for which are provided for in this amendment to this bill.

Take the first of these recommendations, if these be all, to establish "a uniform system of customs regulations for the classification and valuation of imported merchandise." The House and the Senate have been at the pains during the present session of Congress to pass a law, the wisdom and value of which has not yet been ascertained by experience, but is very much doubted indeed by many persons who have undertaken to criticize it, for the purpose of regulating our own customs, operations, and business, and that law has a peculiar relation to our own Government, to the nature and characteristics of our own country, and to the tariff system, and also somewhat to the internal-revenue system, under which we raise money for the support of the Government of the United States.

We have had no intimation, so far as I am informed, that any South American state in respect to valuations and undervaluations of merchandise, for instance, is ready or is likely to become ready at an early day to adopt the bill or the principles of the bill which we have enacted at this session of Congress on this matter. Until there is concert between the Governments who were represented in the Pan-American Congress and our Government upon this proposition, which concert must be obtained either by strict parallelism in legislation or by treaty negotiation—until there is such concert and co-operation of action between these Governments that I refer to and ours, it would seem to me to be impossible that the President of the United States could complete that work or carry into effect the recommendations of that conference.

It seems to me, sir, that it is impossible to avoid the position that this merely nebulous recommendation on the part of the representatives of the Pan-American Congress, including our own, to their respective Governments, is not, by any means, so substantial and so settled and so fixed a matter as to entitle us to begin to legislate about it before we have secured the co-operation of those different Governments and bound them to an engagement of this kind.

Now, I will suppose that every republic represented in that congress should pass a law corresponding word for word in reference to its own Government with the law in regard to the regulation of customs business, I will call it, that we have passed during the present session of Congress; yet even that general and uniform legislation amongst all of these different states would not justify us in proceeding to try to execute that law, to carry it into effect, and to complete the system until we had entered into actual treaty engagements with these different countries binding them to comply with the regulations of those statutes. Merely parallel or identical legislation in matters of this kind will not do for the regulation of affairs between different states, for the reason that there is nothing binding them not to repeal at their pleasure their own system and change it to our disadvantage. To do anything at all in the direction of bringing the states into conformity of action and harmony of action in respect of any matter relating to the customs dues, duties, or business of the several states, it is necessary to resort to the treaty-making power, and until we bind them in the obligations of a treaty to do what is agreed between the countries, nothing has really been accomplished. You merely expose yourself to loss and damage by having fixed your laws in such a shape as you think will be beneficial or agreeable to these other people, without having bound them at all to abide by those laws after they have been enacted, or to do anything for the promotion of the general good understanding, commercially speaking, between these different states.

It seems to me that this part of the legislation, undertaking, as I suppose it does, to carry into effect that first recommendation of "a uniform system of customs regulations for the classification and valuation of imported merchandise" is premature.

In this matter, as well as in respect of a uniform coinage of silver to be agreed upon as a custom-house legal tender between all the different nations represented in the Pan-American Congress, I think it is necessary that the diplomatic power of this Government should be brought into requisition in due and constitutional form, and that the agreements which may be formed between our country and other countries should be formulated in treaties and ratified by the Senate, and that then we should legislate to carry those treaties into effect as far as legislation might be necessary.

In the first paragraph of this amendment $49,750 are appropriated, and of that sum translators, copyists, clerks, and other employes are to be paid $15,500; office rent, stationery, etc., $9,250; for printing and distributing to the public the proceedings and reports of the conference, $25,000; in all, $49,750. I do not find in that any proposition or any appropriation for the purpose of establishing either the "International Bureau of Information" or this monumental building to the memory of Columbus on the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America; and I suppose that that is entirely omitted. But the language of the preceding part of the amendment is "to enable the President to complete the work and carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference." That is one of the recommendations.

I do not know as yet, not having thought of the subject in a very accurate way, for the matter has just come to my attention, what language it would be necessary to introduce here to modify the effect of this general and sweeping provision, committing us to carrying into effect the work and recommendations of the International American Conference and enabling the President at his own discretion to determine the time, place, and manner of carrying out these recommendations.

I do not know the meaning either of "An international bureau of information." We have no bureau of information in the United States, unless it is the Bureau of Statistics, that I know anything about, and yet all of them profess more or less to give information upon the subjects that belong to their jurisdiction and come within the scope of their authority; but we have no separate bureau of information. We have never had such a thing in the Government of the United States that I am aware of, and I should like to have a more perfect definition of what a "bureau of information" is, and what it has a right to do and what it has not a right to do, and who is to control it, and to what Department of the Government, if any, it is responsible, or whether responsible directly to Congress, or to the President.

I do not know that it is intended to establish a bureau of information under this sweeping language in the first part of this amendment; but, if it is, it seems to me that the committee ought to favor us with a more definite statement of what are the functions and powers of this bureau of information and what particular purposes it is to be devoted to, what kind of information it is that we are going to get, whether it relates to geology or mineralogy or commerce in all of its broad sweep, navigation, politics, or what not. I am unable to determine anything about it so far as this amendment is concerned. There is not enough said in the amendment to enable me to determine anything about it.

Now I am in favor of all this plan. I am in favor of all that the Pan-American Congress attempted to do, so far as I understand it, and so far as I am informed of what they really did attempt to do. To express it in my own way, as I endeavored to do at the time we had the bill on passage during the recent Administration for the organization and calling together of this congress, I am in favor of closer relations of every kind with the sister Republics of the southern part of this hemisphere, commencing with Mexico and going through Central America on down to the Argentine Republic. I believe with Mr. Blaine, as he has expressed himself very recently—not quoting his language, however, but the idea he put forward—that there is no one interest that is open to the enterprise of the American people which is so inviting and likely to be so rich in its rewards as to cultivate commercial relations and close fraternity with the South American states.

Those states are in the attitude of nascent development. Although some of their Governments are nearly as old as our own, they have not had the Anglo-American impulse among them, the genius and the enterprise to push their projects of government and civilization and improvement to the front as we have had. Perhaps they have not had as much of attrition with and as much of support from the great Anglo-American family across the ocean as we have had; their rivalry and competition have not been so stimulated as ours have by the example of the mother government from which we came, but the progress they have made since 1819 down to the present day, in the presence of difficulties that we never had to encounter, is certainly very great.

The South American states under the Spanish régime had one difficulty to encounter that we never really were confronted with, which has been more potent, more influential, upon the destinies of those states than the negro question has been in the United States, or any other question which we have had to contend with, not excepting our war with Great Britain; and that is the influence of an established religion in a country. Every one of those Republics, commencing with Mexico and going on down to Patagonia, which is now incorporated in the Argentine states, was dominated by an ecclesiastical power that it could not break away from, and it has taken the better part of the lives of their respective Governments and an enormous outlay of money and the shedding of vast quantities of human blood to free them from the mistake which we escaped through our good sense in discarding the domination of any religious sect or power or church in our Government and in adopting that wonderful scheme, promoted by Mr. Jefferson, of the divorce of the church and the state. These people, one by one, nation by nation, have struggled out of the embrace of "this body of death," for that is what it was to them, politically considered, and as fast as they have broken away from it (and most conspicuously in the case of Mexico) they have risen at once to order and progress and deliverance from embarrassment, and they have established themselves with wonderful rapidity in power and in dignity and in influence amongst the nations of the earth.

Now that the ban is removed, now that those cords which fettered them down to a low, creeping condition, have been snapped asunder, they need and will appreciate the assistance of this free American Republic in the promotion of their progress in every way. Look at the Argentine Republic. It seems to be almost absolutely reckless in its progress. It is very true they have got into an embarrassing condition there in respect of their finances, but it is merely because the temptations of that country to enterprise through the investment of money and to speculation have been so great that the Government itself did not have power to control it, and the reaction has set in there, but not in a disastrous way. The Government of the Argentine Republic is a sound and safe and good Government to-day, and whatever losses there may be in the cases of individuals from overspeculation in that Argentine Republic, there has been an enormous accumulation of wealth there in the last ten or fifteen years.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that this great Republic of ours in any era of ten years has relatively exhibited a more decided and wonderful progress than the Argentine Republic. That Republic is free from this embarrassment of which I have been speaking.

Then there is the Brazilian Government that six or eight months ago looked as if it was quivering in the balance, and Senators on this floor were afraid to reach out and take it by the hand lest Dom Pedro might return, or lest some foreign power might threaten us and disturb our relations, commercial and otherwise, or lest the imperial party in Brazil might spring up and, as I said then, from the long deference from a resort into a permanent form of government and the establishment of a constitution the spirit of Brazilian independence might perish, might die out like a burnt ember. But we find that Government has gone along peacefully and quietly and progressively. It has established banks upon certain foundations of absolutely permanent credit which have capital that measures by the hundred millions of dollars. They now, according to the latest accounts of the newspapers of the country, have put forth the programme of their constitution, which in all respects compares favorably with ours, and in some respects, I must say, I think is better for those people; and Brazil, that was said to have a sort of mongrel population, part negro, part Portuguese, and part Indian, upon whose shoulders the rights and responsibilities and duties of republican institutions could not be safely rested—those people have proceeded quietly, peacefully, without revolution, without a proclamation of hostility towards the central authority, the temporary provisional authority there—they have proceeded quietly in their way and are laying down the deep foundations of a great republic that will follow our example and honor the principles upon which this wonderful Government of ours is constructed and is administered.

South America from Chili up on the other coast to Colombia; yes, to the Central American States; yes, up to Mexico and as well on the Atlantic side—South America, through all of her borders and through her interior country, is developing a capacity for wealth and power and the genius of liberty that seems to be at this moment of time the most interesting invitation to American fraternity that ever has been extended to us during our history.

Mr. President, I have not been conscious during my employment in this very great body of men of a moment when I was not heartily in favor of all near approaches that could be made legitimately to the most intimate relations, commercial and political, with the people of the South American and Central American states and with Mexico. When I first had the honor of a seat in this body it was quite a fashionable thing, and I thought a pretty cruel one, too, to point to the Government of Mexico as one of exceeding uncertainty; a government afflicted with pronunciamientos, with an upstart soldiery, who would put themselves at the head of their battalions and keep strife and friction and bloodshed rife and riotous throughout the whole of almost every state in that Republic. Our people did not then seem to understand or to appreciate what Mexico had passed through. They did not seem to understand that, while we were here engaged in a bloody fraternal struggle, millions of men employed in fighting each other over a question that unfortunately found a lodgment in our national Constitution, when it should have been left in the beginning to the local authorities of every State and nowhere else—while that great struggle was raging here, whose animosities have not yet died out of our minds entirely, I fear, the foreign powers, in violation of what we call so proudly and so affectionately "the Monroe doctrine," had determined, upon a pretense of an indebtedness of Mexico to some of them, to come over here while we were clutched in deadly embrace with each other, and to conquer Mexico and transplant the imperial eagles to the soil of that great Republic, conquer her, and tread her beneath the feet of Europe at that moment of intense anxiety.

Then it was fashionable to point to the Mexican people as being incapable of self-government, not crediting that great Indian, Juarez, who did not have a drop of Spanish blood in his veins, with the magnificent ability that he displayed in rescuing his country from the grasp of Austrian and French tyranny and usurpation, not thinking about the struggles that that man had to endure when at one time he was driven as far north as Piedras Negras, if not to El Paso del Norte, with not more than 300 men in his army, and, returning, inch by inch fought his way back to the capital of Mexico, captured Maximilian, and slew him, and restored Mexican authority absolutely based upon the power of the Mexican people, and reversed a decree which they said had been voted by a plebiscite which established the empire as the government in Mexico. We have seen that after the death of Juarez, Diaz came forward, a conservative, splendid man, a man who has so far commanded the confidence of his people that for the second time and now about the third time they even changed their constitution to keep him, with his wisdom and his conservatism, at the head of that splendid Republic.

Behold how Mexico has risen up, how she has mastered her enormous public debt which passed almost beyond the reach of computation at the time she regained her liberties and re-established the true authority of republican government in that great country, free from the palsy restraints of an established church! See what she has accomplished. And, sir, my heart has grown and swelled in my bosom with pride with every step of progress that that splendid Republic has made. She is our true sister, if not our daughter, and our relations with Mexico ought to be the most fraternal that it is possible to conceive of, more fraternal than with Canada, who refused to come into our Revolutionary struggle, although Canada is bone of our bone, blood of our blood, and flesh of our flesh, as to the composition of her population.

So the Central American States, after having been long dissevered by the private ambitions of men who were not large enough to grasp the magnificent destiny and splendor of that country, are beginning to see and feel the important part that they are playing or are about to play amongst the nations of the earth. Sitting at the very gates of commerce which connect the Mississippi and the Atlantic with the Pacific, and about to become the recipients of more of the blessings and benefits of commercial intercourse than any other people in the world, they are reconsidering their shattered and scattered and disintegrated condition, and they are drawing together now, if not with bonds of cordial relationship and fraternity, at least with the stronger bonds of mutual interest.

Go southward and you will find that Peru, Bolivia, and Chili have sunk their wars out of sight and peace reigns along the Pacific there. Ecuador has a man of very decided intelligence and very high character to preside as the president of that Republic, a man engaged always patriotically and industriously in the development of the real resources and wealth and power of his country. I happen to have the pleasure of knowing him well.

Go to the Argentine Republic, of which I have just spoken; Brazil, of which I have just spoken; go along up the coast there and you find some French and some Dutch and some English possessions, and there you find strife and cupidity and zeal for acquiring more domain and more land.

Mr. EDMUNDS. More than zeal.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know what word exactly would be polite to apply to it. In the South in the Indian times we used to call people who practiced those things "land pirates." I do not know whether that would be an apt phrase to apply to those Governments in their desire to rob weaker powers of their land and of their commercial power and influence.

But now the whole of South America, Central America, and Mexico present to the intelligent and enlightened American mind, it seems to me, the finest field that was ever opened to human imagination, to human experience, to say the least of it, for splendid commercial intercourse and mutual development and advantage.

Mr. President, I never in my life gave a vote with more pleasure than I did during the last Administration for the bill which authorized and organized this Pan-American Congress, and every member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I think, felt in a certain degree electrified at the opportunity that seemed to present itself to do those things which are now progressing, and which I hope will progress with so much steadiness and so much clearness and so much decision of purpose that there will be nothing left to regret and certainly nothing left to explain about hereafter.

I should like to say right here as a fact that I comprehend within my views of true American policy, and have done so since it was first suggested, I believe, by Mr. Frelinghuysen, the control by the Government of the United States of the transit across the Isthmus of Panama—whether at Nicaragua or at Panama or wherever. I always include that; for, however there may be an obstruction apparent at this moment of time against the present accomplishment of such a grand design as this, whoever has a forecast of the future of this great country must include within the horoscope the domination of the American people over that transit between these great oceans. Our interest in the Gulf of Mexico forbids us to deny to ourselves this power and influence. Corresponding interests of the people of the Pacific coast demand at our hands earnest, manly, unyielding action for the shortening of the communications between the Atlantic ports and the ports of the Pacific.

In what I have had to say about this amendment I have merely desired to draw the attention of the honorable Senator who has the bill in charge to the explanations which seem to be necessary in order to give point and definiteness to what the committee are trying to do, and I assure him that in the direction I think he is traveling I will go hand in hand with him as far as he chooses to go in the line of securing all the benefits to this country and to South America, Mexico, and Central America which have resulted from the Pan-American Congress.

I was unfortunately not in a condition of health to keep up with the proceedings of that body and I am unread in their actual debates and discussions, except in a general way, but I think I comprehend the general scope of what they were trying to do and what they accomplished, and I believe it is the general judgment of the American people, and will be the judgment of the Senate and of both Houses of Congress indeed, that they have made a tremendous march in the direction of accomplishing this close fraternity for which I plead here between the Central and South American States and Mexico and the United States.

I will wait, Mr. President, until I have heard from the Senator from Maine before I venture to say anything more about this question.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am not surprised to find that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who has given long and faithful attention to our foreign relations, is in full sympathy with the purposes of these amendments which have been read at the desk by the Secretary. They cover, in short, the recommendations of what is known popularly as the Pan-American Conference, which adjourned a few months since.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What are those recommendations?

Mr. HALE. Those recommendations are all found in Senate Executive Document No. 135, submitted by the President of the United States in a message from him, naming the subjects embraced by the recommendations.

With this was transmitted a letter from the Secretary of State recommending the propositions which are found in amendments to this bill, and accompanying that, what is most interesting and what I think Senators may find, unless the edition has been exhausted, if they will send to the document-room, the proceedings of the international conference adopting the reports to that conference of those several committees. For instance, the committee on arranging and fixing upon the nomenclature of articles found and used in trade between the countries is signed by foreign delegates, Alfonso, Romero, Mendonça, and Calderón, and by the American delegates, our own national delegates, Flint and Davis.

I will not take the time of the Senate by reading this in full, but every Senator can find in detail what is covered by looking at this report.

The report on the classification and arranging rules and regulations as to customs, entries, and ports, is signed by the foreign representatives, Alfonso, Romero, Calderón, Mendonça, Aragon, Peraza, and by our own delegates, and so with the others. The report is a most interesting one which covers the proposition for a survey of a great communication by railroad between North and South America and it was sent to both Houses of Congress some three or four weeks since and is now in the hands of the Public Printer.

The Committee on Appropriations in making these recommendations conferred fully with the State Department, and in fact requested the presence of the Secretary, whom they had before them, and so framed these amendments as to carry out the recommendations of the conference.

I will say in response to a suggestion that none of the other powers are committed to this. These proceedings resulted most harmoniously, and any one who will read the different reports of the various committees of the conference will become convinced of what was the fact, that our sister republics in Central and South America were represented by men as keen and bright and well-informed upon all the subjects-matter coming before the conference as could be found in any of the Governments of the old countries who have had years of diplomacy and of foreign intercourse. The reading of these reports will show how harmoniously and cordially they all acted together, and so far from their being committed, for instance, upon the commission to a survey and report as to the site of the great railway, which was in the mind of the conference, commissioners have already been appointed by several of the South American Governments and it is expected that they will meet here in October.

There is not a dollar provided here that the committee did not carefully scrutinize and believe that the objects of the different recommendations which are mentioned by the President need and require, and the money is divided as applying to the different branches of work laid out by the Pan-American Conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which message of the President does the Senator refer to?

Mr. HALE. Executive Document No. 135, "June 2, 1890, read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations."

One recommendation is not embodied in this bill by the Committee on Appropriations, and that is the recommendation as a fitting memorial of the meeting of this great conference and as a medium for cementing intercourse between their representatives and ours in the future, the building of a Latin-American memorial library. All such things as involve the erection of buildings or the purchasing of lands have always been, under the rules of the Senate, placed upon the sundry civil appropriation bill. I may say, for one, that I am in favor, when that bill comes up, of the additional recommendation of this convention or conference, or whatever you call it, being put upon that bill, because I think—and I need not spend much time upon that because it is not here—that nothing would be more fitting than that there should be in the future such a building, a suitable and not an extravagant one here; but that will be considered when the sundry civil bill is reached.

Mr. INGALLS. A structure to be erected in this city?

Mr. HALE. A structure to be erected in this city entitled the "Latin-American Library." The recommendation of the conference upon that is very earnest and very fervent, and is to me convincing.

So I may say with regard to these other things, they were all embraced in the work, and it was a great work; and it appeals not only to the Senator from Alabama, but to all of us, I think, and not only does it appeal, as it has, to his imagination and to our imaginations, but to the practical side. It is not a dream alone that hereafter all of these great peoples, these sister Republics of ours upon the American continent, shut out by this great vale of waters from the Old World, shall be brought together nearer and closer by ties that spring from common interest, by the intercourse of trade and commerce, by the removal of all the obstacles that now lie in the way of the increase of trade and commerce, by cultivating a spirit of friendship, and by dealing with them in a spirit of comity; and when all those things are considered, the little appropriation that is found upon this bill is a bagatelle. It is a thing that the American people would raise no murmur against if the amount were ten times as much. It is only blazing out a way in which we ought to be glad and proud to tread in the future, and I am glad that in this matter we have the co-operation of the distinguished Senator from Alabama, who has given such long and faithful attention to all of these subjects. He is a mine of information upon all such matters, and his aid in any project of this kind, broad, vast, and enlightened as it is, is a thing that I welcome most gladly.

I have endeavored, without taking up the time of the Senate by going into the details which are found in these reports, but by referring to the reports, to show to the Senate where it is that these specific recommendations are found upon which the action of the Committee on Appropriations is based. But I do not wish to take any more time of the Senate. I might have the document read at the desk, but it would take a couple of hours to do so, and at this time I fancy no Senator would call for it.

Mr. MORGAN. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HALE. I do not know that any better disposition of the space could be made. I accept that suggestion of the Senator, that the document be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MORGAN. It is necessary for the purpose of explaining exactly what we are doing.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that Executive Document No. 135, submitted by the President of the United States, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations June 2, 1890, be printed in the RECORD as part of the proceedings, and when the other document relating to the intercontinental railway survey comes in, if necessary, I shall ask the same course as to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine that the document referred to by him may be printed in the RECORD? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The document referred to is as follows:

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting a letter of the Secretary of State relative to certain recommendations of the International American Conference.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The International American Conference, recently in session at this Capital, recommended for adoption by the several American Republics—

1. A uniform system of customs regulations for the classification and valuation of imported merchandise;
2. A uniform nomenclature for the description of articles of merchandise imported and exported; and
3. The establishment at Washington of an International Bureau of Information.

The conference also, at its final session, decided to establish in the city of Washington, as a fitting memorial of its meeting, a Latin-American Library, to be formed by contributions from the several nations of historical, geographical, and literary works, maps, manuscripts, and official documents relating to the history and civilization of America, and expressed a desire that the Government of the United States should provide a suitable building for the shelter of such a library, to be solemnly dedicated upon the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America.

The importance of these suggestions is fully set forth in the letter of the Secretary of State, and the accompanying documents herewith transmitted, to which I invite your attention.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 2, 1890.

CUSTOMS REGULATIONS AND BUREAU OF INFORMATION.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 14, 1890.

The PRESIDENT:

The act of Congress authorizing the International American Conference, recently in session at this Capital, provided that, among other subjects, it should "consider the establishment of a uniform system of customs regulations in each of the independent American states, to govern the mode of importation and exportation of merchandise, and port dues and charges, a uniform method of determining the classification and valuation of such merchandise in the ports of each country, and a uniform system of invoices."

The conference received from the committee intrusted with this branch of its investigation three reports, all of which were unanimously adopted, and copies are hereto attached. The action of the conference in this respect is of great importance to all merchants and manufacturers of the United States who have commercial relations with Latin America and are endeavoring to extend their trade, as its recommendations, if adopted by the several Governments, will so simplify the formalities to be observed in the importation and exportation of merchandise that the obstacles heretofore existing will be removed.

This report, which was prepared after repeated consultation with the custom-house officials in New York and representatives of the Treasury Department, will be found in detail and ready for the consideration of Congress.

Another serious difficulty met with in our inter-American commerce has been the lack of uniformity in the nomenclature of articles of merchandise in common use, each country having its local terms and idioms that are obsolete or at least unfamiliar to its neighbors. For example, a calico print is known by a different name in nearly every one of the Latin-American States, and the same term used in one market may describe an entirely different article in another. This has been the source of great confusion and annoyance to those engaged in the export trade, and the conference has proposed as a remedy the compilation and publication of a code of common nomenclature, which shall designate in alphabetical order and equivalent terms, in English, Spanish, and Portuguese, the commodities upon which import duties are levied, to be adopted by all the American nations, and to be used in shipping manifests, consular invoices, entries, clearance petitions, and other official documents.

It is suggested that the preparation of this code be done under the direction of the proposed commercial bureau of the American Republics referred to below, that the work be commenced at the earliest date practicable, for which an appropriation by Congress will be necessary.

The third report of the committee on customs regulations, which was prepared by the direction of the conference and unanimously adopted, recommends the organization of an association under the title of "The International Union of American Republics, for the prompt collection and distribution of commercial information."

This union is to be represented at Washington, under the supervision of the Secretary of State, by a bureau called "The Commercial Bureau of the American Republics," and its organ is to be a publication entitled "The Bulletin of the Commercial Bureau of the American Republics," to be printed in the English,

Spanish, and Portuguese languages, and to contain, in addition to important information concerning the American Republics, the following:

(a) The existing customs tariffs of the several countries belonging to the union and all changes of the same as they occur, with such explanations as may be deemed useful.

(b) All official regulations which affect the entrance and clearance of vessels and the importation and exportation of merchandise in the ports of the represented countries; also all circulars of instruction to customs officials which relate to customs procedure or to the classification of merchandise for duty.

(c) Ample quotations from commercial and parcel-post treaties between any of the American republics.

(d) Important statistics of external commerce and domestic products and other information of special interest to merchants and shippers of the represented countries.

This bureau is at all times to be available as a medium of communication and correspondence for persons applying for information in regard to matters pertaining to the commerce of the American republics, and the bulletin is to be supplied to the public.

The expense of sustaining the proposed bureau and its publications is to be divided among the several American republics in shares proportionate to their respective populations.

No one familiar with the conditions of our commerce with Latin America will fail to recognize the advantages of such an organization, and, if it shall please Congress to approve the project, I suggest the importance of prompt action in making the appropriations required to carry the recommendation of the conference into effect.

It seems fitting in this connection to refer to the action of the conference at its final session concerning the establishment at Washington of a memorial library of American literature.

The foreign delegates, appreciating the importance of the conference and the significance of the assemblage of representatives of eighteen nations for the purpose of promoting the peace and prosperity of each other, frequently expressed a desire to erect some monument or memorial to permanently commemorate such an unprecedented event. Various propositions were suggested, but this desire finally found formal expression in the following resolution, offered by the Hon. Carlos Martinez Silva, a delegate from the Republic of Colombia:

"Resolved, That there be established at such location in the city of Washington as the Government of the United States may designate, to commemorate the meeting of the International American Conference, a Latin-American Memorial Library, to be formed by contributions from all the Governments represented in this conference, wherein shall be collected all the historical, geographical, and literary works, maps, manuscripts, and official documents relating to the history and civilization of America, such library to be solemnly dedicated on the day on which the United States celebrates the fourth centennial of the discovery of America."

The Hon. Bolet Peraza, a delegate from Venezuela, after applauding and supporting Mr. Martinez Silva's resolution, suggested that the library should be named in honor of Columbus, which amendment Mr. Silva accepted.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Mr. Martinez Silva, in presenting his resolution, said:

"Mr. President, ever since my distinguished colleague, Mr. Mendonça, spoke, at a private gathering, of the appropriateness and expediency of erecting a monument to commemorate the assembling of the International American Conference, the honorable delegates seem to have been unanimously of the opinion that something of the sort ought to be done. But it has since occurred to me that, among the various embarrassments which would be encountered in the attempt to carry out the suggestion, it would be very difficult to select a model which all would accept and that discussions and delays would arise, discussions and delays which might at last lead to that worst result, that nothing should be done."

"With this fear in my mind and thinking, furthermore, that the memorial to be erected ought to be something at once useful and made up of various elements, to which each Government might contribute independently, it occurred to me that the only plan which would satisfy all these requirements was the establishment in Washington of a memorial library, to which each Government could send on its own account the most complete collection possible of historical, literary, and geographical works, laws, official reports, maps, etc., so that the results of the intellectual and scientific labor in all America might be collected together under a single roof."

"That would be a monument more lasting and more noble than any in bronze or marble, because, in the first place, such a memorial would redound to our honor and help to make the Spanish-American nations known; while at the same time it would be very agreeable to the United States to have erected in Washington the library which I propose. It will gradually be enriched and enlarged, day by day, because the several Governments will take care to transmit every new work which may be published in their respective countries, until at last it will become so complete a collection that whoever shall desire to pursue any study concerning America will come to Washington to do it; even from Europe itself students would have to come for any special study concerning these countries."

"We are so disconnected in America, there are so many difficulties in the way of communication, that it may be said that we do not know each other. It is, for instance, almost impossible in Bogota to procure a book published in the Argentine Republic, and I believe that the same is the case in the Argentine Republic respecting the publications of Bogota. Let us suppose that a person is desirous of writing on America; how could he collect data as correct and complete as the case demands? He would have to go from country to country, spending much money and time to attain his object; but, if there be a library such as I propose, then all those dedicating themselves to such research or in need of data can come here and find what they want."

"Catalogues of this library would be distributed in all the countries of America and Europe, so that the people of all parts of the world would know what could here be obtained. It would be, moreover, of great usefulness for the permanent Spanish-American legations in Washington. All of the honorable delegates may have had occasion to note that great difficulties have presented themselves each time that information or a book respecting our countries is needed here."

"It would also be of great value to the Government of the United States, for it would stimulate the study of those nations in this country. So that my idea reduces itself to the establishment, in Washington, in some building or apartment which could be provided by the Government of the United States, of a Portuguese-Spanish-American library, each Government sending a collection, as complete as possible, of geographical charts, historical, statistical, and literary works, etc., enriching this library from year to year with the new publications which may be issued by the American nations. At the outset we might collect here fifteen or twenty thousand volumes, but in the course of twenty years this library will have an importance unrivaled in the world."

"I would desire to propose, also, that each Government should send its share of books in time for the library to be publicly dedicated on the anniversary of the discovery of America."

I most cordially endorse all that was said by the honorable delegate from Colombia with reference to the importance and appropriateness of the proposed memorial, and have full confidence that the sentiments which he uttered, and which were shared by all his colleagues, are heartily reciprocated by the people of the United States.

To receive and protect the proposed collection it will be necessary to provide a safe and suitable building, in a convenient locality, which may also be used for the offices of the proposed bureau of information, and should contain a hall or assembly room for the accommodation of such international bodies as the two conferences that have just adjourned. I respectfully suggest that the authority of Congress be asked to purchase, or erect, a structure of appropriate design and dimensions at a cost not exceeding $250,000.

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

[International American Conference.]

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON CUSTOMS REGULATIONS.

(As adopted by the Conference.)

I.—CLASSIFICATION AND VALUATION OF MERCHANDISE.

The committee on customs regulations, appointed by resolution passed at the sitting of the twelfth day, has the honor to submit the following report. The subjects designated for consideration by this committee, as appears in the printed minutes of the conference, are the following:

- A.—Formalities to be observed in the importation and exportation of merchandise.
- B.—The classification, examination, and valuation of merchandise.
- C.—Methods of imposing fines and penalties for the violation of customs and harbor regulations.

The committee has already made a preliminary report to the conference, recommending the adoption of a plan for the assistance of importers and exporters by means of an official and uniform nomenclature and classification of merchandise, in alphabetical order, which is intended to furnish equivalents in the English, Spanish, and Portuguese languages.

In continuation of its labors, the committee now presents the following suggestions:

A.—Importation and exportation of merchandise.

1. The committee has not been authorized to take into consideration the varying rates of duties imposed upon exports and imports by the countries represented in the conference, and such recommendations as are made in this report are intended to be applicable alike to the present and the future rates of duty.

2. The committee has given due weight to the fact that each of the countries represented depends upon customs duties as the chief source of national revenue, and that the productiveness and security of this revenue must not be threatened nor impaired under the guise of simplification or improvement of regulations for its collection.

3. It is recognized that each country should regulate and administer its own system of customs revenue, and that differences of race, habit, condition, and environment prevail among the conferring nations. The committee, therefore, proposes nothing that does not take cognizance of these important considerations.

4. The committee realizes that an active and desirable international commerce can be established only by the energy and skill of private enterprise, and can not be created and maintained by the cultivation of mutual sentiments of amity and good will. The true bases of such intercourse can be found only in parallelism of interests and in satisfactory profits derived from the supply of material wants.

5. Convinced that an increased commerce amongst the American Republics would be mutually beneficial to the citizens of those republics, the committee has considered the customs regulations of the several countries for the purpose of devising means of reducing some of the existing burdens of labor, time, expense, and risk.

6. The committee is gratified to find that, in a general sense, the revenue laws and regulations of the several republics are reasonable and moderate in their provisions; that their administration is, upon the whole, considerate of the rights and interests of the citizen, and that as a rule those who conduct the international navigation and commerce of the American continent are candid and honest in their relations with the revenue laws.

7. Nevertheless it is apparent that the laws and regulations as well as the administration thereof are, in some respects, susceptible of important improvements, and it is proposed in part to effect these improvements by establishing certain uniform rules and practices, without attempting to regulate minor local details.

8. Commerce is now carried on mainly by the instrumentality of the steamship, the railway, and the telegraph. These agencies have created necessities and conditions which often conflict with administrative arrangements which are preserved only because they are traditional and which do not accord with modern methods.

9. Excessive formality in administration is a serious evil, for the reason that it introduces expense, risk, and uncertainty in commercial transactions in such degree as to discourage commercial enterprise. It leads to the multiplication of agents in the business of importation, exportation, and transportation, and thereby reduces the legitimate profits and reasonable expectations of merchants and carriers and increases the expenses of government.

10. A ship's manifest is a marine document universally required of vessels arriving from foreign ports, as a basis for determining their cargoes, and in time of war to furnish the evidence of non-contraband goods. No vessel should be allowed to clear from any customs port before the master has lodged in the custom-house a manifest of his cargo, but consular certification of such manifests should not be required. Vessels belonging to regular lines of steamers, which are advertised to sail on schedule time, are usually compelled to take in cargo up to the last moment of their departure, and it is therefore impracticable before the hour of sailing to complete the manifest for clearance at the custom-house. The resident agents of such vessels should therefore be allowed to lodge in the custom-house, within twenty-four hours after the sailing of the vessel, such supplementary manifests as may be required to account for the whole cargo.

Before entering a foreign port the master of every vessel should prepare, for surrender to the customs authorities, an inward manifest containing all the facts shown by the outward manifests, together with a list of the passengers and crew and an account of surplus ship stores remaining on board. This manifest should be lodged at the custom-house together with the register and any other documents required by the local regulations, and should be verified by the master's personal declaration before the proper customs officer. The inward manifest may be used in verifying the cargo, but should not be accepted in lieu of an invoice.

The committee will present for the consideration of the conference a proposed international form of manifest and supplementary manifest. On the exportation of merchandise every shipper should be required, under penalty for failure, to lodge at the custom-house a special manifest of the goods sent by him out of the country, containing full particulars respecting the character, quality, value, and destination of the goods, so that the Governments may have authentic data for statistical records and reports. (See Recommendation I.)

11. Invoices for customs purposes should be made out in the language of either the country of import or of export, and should declare the wholesale market value of the goods at the date of exportation in the market whence imported, and all amounts or quantities should be expressed in figures only. The value so declared should be accepted, prima facie, as a basis for estimating ad valorem duties. It is recommended that the fee for consular certification throughout republican America be established at the uniform rate of $2.50 for each invoice, but that no fee be required for duplicates of an original invoice, nor in any case where the value does not exceed $100. (Rec. 2.)

12. Entries of imported merchandise should be made out in the language of the country of importation and should name the vessel and the importer; entries should agree with bills of lading and with invoices in all material particulars, and the bill of lading and invoice should be lodged with the customs authorities at the time of entry. In case any of the packages covered by an invoice should fail to arrive by reason of short shipment, entry should be allowed of the missing packages by means of a properly verified extract or copy of the original invoice. Wherever oaths are now required in customs procedure they should be abolished, because they entail needless hardship and loss of time upon the importer in requiring his personal attendance at the custom-house. The signature of the importer to his declaration for entry should be invested with all the penal responsibilities now attached to his affidavit. (Rec. 3.)

13. Special facilities without the imposition of unnecessary charges should be accorded to goods in transit by railroad or water transportation through one country to another, provided they be kept in bond during such transit and that the transit be made under the supervision of the customs authorities, but without any verification of contents of packages. (Rec. 4.)

14. The hours and regulations for the lading and unlading of vessels should be made as liberal as local circumstances will permit, and special means should be provided for their entrance and clearance before and after the regular hours for business at the custom-house, and on all days when general business is suspended. (Rec. 5.)

15. The abolition of all fees and charges in the customs service is desirable and none should be exacted except such as are fixed and published by due authority; whenever they do exist, they should be limited to the actual cost of the service rendered, and never be imposed for the purpose of raising public revenue. (Rec. 7.)

16. In cases where the rate or amount of duty is doubtful or disputed the importer should be permitted to deposit, under protest, the amount claimed by the customs authorities and to take possession of his goods; his duties should be liquidated, as promptly as practicable, in accordance with the final decision on his protest, and any excess of deposit refunded without abatement. (Rec. 8.)

17. The committee earnestly recommends the adoption, in the principal ports of the countries here represented, of a system of bonded warehouses similar to that which wherever it has been tried has demonstrated its convenience to importers and its advantage to the national revenue. By availing himself of this system the importer can delay the payment of duties until he has effected the sale of the articles imported, or if he prefers to export them he can do so without payment of duty. To secure this privilege he must store the imported merchandise at his own risk and expense in some designated warehouse which is kept under the special supervision of the collector of customs, and must furnish satisfactory bonds for the payment of the duty or the exportation of the merchandise within a prescribed period. The importer, under this system, may withdraw his goods in lots of one or more packages, or, if the merchandise be in bulk, in stated quantities according to the demands of his business upon paying all duties and costs of labor and storage which have accrued upon the portion withdrawn for consumption.

The Government is thus absolutely protected against loss while the importer is relieved from the necessity of forcing his goods upon an unsatisfactory market. (Rec. 9.)

18. Peculiar hardship is suffered by importers in some of the countries from the revision of invoices by the supreme authority at the capital. In case of doubt or controversy, where a deposit of the maximum duty is exacted and the amount is paid under protest, this revision by the central authorities is necessary in the interest of justice, but in all other cases, except where fraud or culpable negligence appears, the merchant, upon paying the assessed duty at the custom-house, should receive his goods exempted from further liability for reclamations which may absorb his apparent profits. (Rec. 15.)

19. Internal duties upon imported commodities which have paid duty at the frontier are intolerable burdens upon and obstructions to international commerce. As soon as the legally assessed import duties are paid, on arrival, the goods become a part of the general stock of commodities and should thereafter be treated in the same manner as domestic products. An increase of import duties at the frontier is preferable to the vexatious system of internal duties. There should be no interior control nor supervision of duty-paid imported goods. A custom-house delivery of goods should entitle them to all the privileges and exemptions accorded to domestic merchandise. (Rec. 13.)

20. In the general interest of the American people, it is urged that prompt information be circulated by the Governments of the outbreak or prevalence of contagious diseases among cattle or other live-stock, in order that such importations may be subjected to a proper quarantine.

B.—The classification, examination, and valuation of merchandise.

21. With regard to the customs examination of merchandise, it need only be said that it should be conducted with as little delay, expense, and damage as possible, and should be limited to a reasonable verification of the statements of the entry and invoice. This suggestion applies as well to examinations conducted for the purpose of verifying the dutiable value of ad valorem merchandise as to examinations for ascertaining weights and quantities for the assessment of specific duty. The committee has interpreted the phrase "valuation of merchandise" as meaning its invoice valuation, and where duties are specific this valuation should be received without question or the necessity of verification, except in cases of suspected fraud. (Rec. 10.)

22. Merchandise contained in the baggage of tourists and immigrants, not exceeding a limited amount, should be admitted to entry and payment of duties without bill of lading or invoice, and tools of trade or occupation and other articles brought by passengers in reasonable quantities, for their own personal use and not for sale, should be exempted from duty. (Rec. 11.)

23. Actual samples of merchandise consigned, in reasonable quantities, solely for inspection or contained in the baggage of bona fide commercial travelers and intended to be used in the prosecution of their business, should, in the interest of commerce, be admitted duty free, under such restrictions as may be deemed necessary. (Rec. 11.)

24. The system of appraisement for ad valorem duties is so intricate and voluminous in its details, and is so little likely to be practiced in extenso by many of the countries represented in the conference, that the committee has decided not to recommend the consideration of that system.

25. The assessment of duty upon the gross weight of dutiable products seems onerous, but where the rate has been adjusted with due regard to the insignificant value of the taxed materials used for packing any particular class of goods, the duty upon the "gross weight" has the great advantage of certainty and simplicity and avoids troublesome questions about tare and weight. Through carelessness in packing and the use of light, strong coverings, importers can minimize the tax. Whenever "net weight" is required the tares should be regulated as far as practicable by schedules officially prepared and published. (Rec. 16.)

26. Merchandise which has been recovered from a wrecked or stranded vessel should be allowed to be entered without invoice at the custom-house by either the salvors or importers for appraisement by the proper authorities, duties to be paid on the appraised value. The importers should also be accorded the privilege of abandoning to the Government merchandise included in any invoice and seriously damaged by sea transportation, free of liability for duty, provided such merchandise represents 10 per cent. of the total value of the invoice, and whenever goods have been surrendered to the insurance companies the latter should be recognized as rightful owners of the same for all customs purposes. (Rec. 13.)

C.—Methods of imposing fines and penalties.

27. Against the imposition of fines and excessive duties there should be granted the right of appeal to some tribunal which would promptly investigate all the facts and take into account the good or bad faith of the importer, as may appear in evidence. The importer should be allowed to appear personally or by representative before such tribunal and the decision should in such cases be made without delay. Clerical errors, minor inaccuracies, and informalities in the entry or invoice, or in any customs proceedings which do not affect the amount of collectible duty, should not, in themselves, be deemed sufficient ground for imposing fines and penalties. (Rec. 17.)

28. The committee is deeply impressed with the belief that equity and regularity of administration are in constant danger of infraction whenever officers of customs are allowed to participate in any share of penalties or forfeitures. A pecuniary interest in fines and penalties has a tendency to bias the judgment of the officer and incline him toward undue exactions for his own benefit. The committee therefore recommends to all the countries represented the adoption of laws (where they do not already exist) providing for the deposit in the Government Treasury of all the moneys received by customs officers and the substitution of a system of rewards for specially meritorious service. (Rec. 17.)

D.—Additional suggestions.

29. The committee has been convinced of the advantages to be derived from a periodical compilation, publication, and distribution of official statistics of the navigation and foreign commerce of the countries represented in the conference. These statistics are often the indispensable bases for legislative enactments affecting international interests. (Rec. 18.)

30. In addition to the adoption of common statistical forms, the committee recommends the establishment of an international bureau for the systematic collection and distribution of useful information relating to the exterior navigation and commerce of the conferring powers, and to the changes in their customs, laws and regulations.

The expense of maintaining such a bureau would be inconsiderable and its benefits inestimable. As one example of the practicability and economy of such a bureau, the bureau of universal postal union, conducted by the Government of Switzerland, may be cited. A more cogent instance is to be found in the plan for an international union for the publication of customs tariffs, etc., formulated by the conference held at Brussels in May, 1888, in which most of the commercial nations of the globe were represented, and it is urged that a union be effected between the republics represented in this conference, which would insure a prompt and accurate publication, at the common expense, for the common benefit of important commercial information. To accomplish this purpose the proposed international bureau might with advantage be maintained under the supervision of one of the represented countries and charged with the translation into English, Spanish, and Portuguese, and the publication and distribution of all the American tariffs, and such modifications of the same as may occur in due course. The countries comprised in this conference should each engage to send to the bureau without delay copies of—

1. Their representative customs laws, including tariffs corrected to date.
2. Explanations of the effect of modifications which are made in the original laws.
3. All circulars of instruction which have been addressed to their respective customs officers concerning the exaction of duties on, and the classification of, merchandise under the tariff laws.
4. All commercial and parcel-post treaties in force or subsequently adopted.
5. All available statistics relating to external commerce and domestic productions.

The annual expense of maintenance would properly be assessed in due proportion to the amount of the foreign commerce of the countries interested.

A common form adapted to the uniform exhibition of the desired facts will, if desired by the conference, be prepared and submitted hereafter. (Rec. 18.)

MEASURES RECOMMENDED.

In accordance with the conclusions thus carefully set forth, your committee asks the conference to recommend to all the countries here represented the adoption of the following measures:

1. That forms be adopted for outward manifests of vessels, which shall be lodged at the custom-house by masters of vessels at the time of clearance, and for supplementary manifests of steamers belonging to established lines to be made by the resident agents thereof and lodged by them in the custom-house within twenty-four hours after the sailing of the vessels, which manifests shall be used only for the determination of the cargo, etc., and shall not require consular certification.

That every such manifest shall show the name of the vessel and of her master, the ports of departure and destination, a description of her cargo by marks, numbers, and supposed contents of packages, with names of consignees and consignors, but no statement of values.

On the exportation of merchandise each individual shipper shall make and lodge at the custom-house for statistical purposes a special manifest, stating quantities, character, and values of the goods exported by him; and for a failure so to do he shall be subjected to a penalty.

The master of any vessel may, within forty-eight hours after the entrance at the custom-house and before any of the cargo shall have been landed, change her destination and proceed on his voyage. On entering a foreign port the master of every vessel belonging to one of the represented countries shall lodge with the custom authorities an inward manifest, containing all the facts shown by the outward manifest, including a list of the passengers and crew and an account of surplus ship stores remaining on board. This manifest must be verified by the master's personal declaration at the custom-house. It shall not be accepted in lieu of an invoice and no consular certification shall be required. Forms for outward, inward, and shipper's manifests are herewith submitted.

With a view that each government shall have official record of its export trade by rail with adjoining countries, any persons delivering to a railway or other transportation company commodities for export to an adjoining country shall also deliver a manifest thereof, showing the kind, quantity, and value of such commodities; and this manifest shall be delivered to the customs officer of the exporting country nearest to the borders thereof.

2. For the entry of imported merchandise, invoices shall be made out in the language and currency of either the country of import or of export or in any currency actually paid for the merchandise. They must declare the contents and value of each package, and state the quantities and the values of the goods in figures, and not in words, and the amounts so expressed, with any additions which the importer may make in his entry, shall be accepted at the custom-house as the basis for preliminary estimates of duty.

Wherever consular certification of manifests has heretofore been required the certification of invoices shall be accepted in lieu of the same. The consul's fee for legalization and certification shall be fixed at the uniform rate of $2.50 for each invoice, but no fee shall be required for duplicates of an original invoice, nor for any invoice the value of which does not exceed $100, provided that such invoice shall not have been subdivided for the purpose of reducing its total value.

If, by the reason of delay in the mails or other satisfactory cause, a certified invoice can not be produced, entry shall be allowed on a statement in the form of an invoice, and when the amount exceeds $100 the execution of a bond shall be required for the subsequent production of an invoice duly certified.

In case any of the packages covered by an invoice shall, by reason of short shipment, fail to arrive, entry may subsequently be made of the missing packages by means of a properly verified extract or copy of the original invoice. (Par. 11.)

3. That all imported merchandise shall be entered at the port of arrival on a prescribed form, which shall be a declaration or petition signed by the importer and giving the ship's name, port of departure and date of arrival, the particulars of the packages, including the weight or quantity, and the supposed dutiable or free class of contents; also their values expressed in the currency of the invoice and reduced to the currency of the country of importation. The entry must agree in all essentials with the invoice and the bill of lading. That in all proceedings relating to the importation and entry of merchandise the declaration of the importer over his signature shall be received in lieu of his oath, and that any false declaration so signed shall subject him to such penalties as may be provided by the respective countries. (Par. 12.)

4. That every reasonable facility shall be afforded for the unobstructed transit of merchandise through one country to an adjacent country, especially where transportation can be directly affected by railway or water routes and where bonds can be furnished for the delivery of such merchandise, intact, within the jurisdiction of the adjoining country. That in no case shall the contents of such packages be made subject to duty or to examination by custom officers while in transit, or to any onerous requirements and exactions, but they shall be held amenable to such supervision only as shall be incidental to proper safeguards against their unlawful introduction into the markets of the country through which they may be transported. (Par. 13.)

5. That technical defects in the form of any document which has been duly authenticated before the consul of any one of the countries shall not, in that country, be deemed sufficient cause for the imposition of fines or penalties, and that all other manifest clerical errors may be corrected, after entry at the custom-house, without prejudice to the consignee or the owner. (Par. 9.)

6. That every facility shall be granted in the various ports of entry for the entrance and clearance of vessels and the discharge and lading of cargoes; and, on all days when other official business may be suspended, that the custom-house shall be open during some part of each day for the prompt entrance and clearance of vessels. (Par. 14.)

7. That the scale of duties shall be so arranged as to avoid the necessity of additional fees and charges, and that every country in which they continue to be exacted shall establish and publish a list of all fees and charges which are statutory in its ports, and that such exactions shall be respectively adjusted, so far as it is practicable, to cover the actual cost of the service rendered therefor. (Par. 15.)

8. That in all cases of dispute as to the legal rate or amount of duty, the importer shall be allowed to deposit under protest the maximum duty demanded by the customs authorities and to take possession of his goods; the entry in such cases to be liquidated as promptly as practicable after the final decision is reached, and the excess (if any) refunded to the importer. (Par. 16.)

9. That in the principal ports of the countries here represented a system shall be adopted as soon as practicable whereby an importer who desires to place his importation temporarily in the custody of the Government before payment of duty shall be enabled to store it at his own expense and risk, under the supervision of the customs authorities. For this purpose, warehouses shall be provided in which such goods may remain on storage under bond during one or more years, and from which they may be withdrawn at any time by the importer, in quantities of not less than one package, or, if in bulk, not less than 1 ton in weight, upon payment of the duty and charges upon the portion withdrawn for consumption, or, if withdrawn for export, upon payment of the expenses of storage and labor. (Par. 17.)

10. That customs examinations shall be made solely for the verification of the declarations of the invoice and entry, and be conducted with the least possible delay and expense to the importer. Where the duties are specific, the invoice valuation shall be accepted for statistical purposes without verification. (Par. 21.)

11. That actual samples of merchandise of no commercial value sent by foreign dealers or brought by bona fide commercial travelers solely for inspection, and personal effects and tools of trade or occupation, brought by passengers for their own use, and not for sale, shall be admitted without payment of duty, under such restrictions as may be provided. (Par. 22.)

12. That the countries here represented shall agree to circulate prompt information of the existence, within their respective borders, of contagious disease among cattle and other live-stock, and to establish proper precautions where importations of this character are threatened. (Par. 20.)

13. Merchandise which has been recovered from a wrecked or stranded vessel may be entered without invoice at the custom-house by either the salvors or the importers for appraisement by the proper authorities, and duties shall be paid in accordance with such appraisement. Importers shall also be accorded the privilege of abandoning to the Government, without liability for duty, any damaged merchandise included in any invoice, provided that the portion so abandoned shall amount in value or quantity to 10 per cent. of the entire invoice, and whenever recovered goods have been surrendered to an insurance company, the latter shall be recognized as the rightful owner of the same for all customs purposes. (Par. 23.)

14. That when importers have paid at the frontier the full amount of import duties assessed they shall be exempted from all further liability for duties within the limits of the country of importation. (Par. 18, 19.)

15. That where the rate or amount of duties is dependent upon the weight gross weight shall generally be used, and that in case net weight is required allowances for tare shall be made according to schedules officially published. (Par. 25.)

16. Against the imposition of fines or excessive duties importers shall be granted the right of appeal to a tribunal by which their good or bad faith, as it may appear from the evidence, will be taken into account; and the decision of said tribunal upon the facts shall be final and shall be made as promptly as practicable, and whenever the good faith of the importer is satisfactorily shown no penalty shall be incurred. Customs officers shall have no participation in any of the customs receipts, but shall deposit them intact, including moneys derived from fines and forfeitures, into the treasuries of their respective Governments. (Par. 27, 28.)

17. That the Governments here represented shall unite for the establishment of an American international bureau for the collection, tabulation, and publication, in the English, Spanish, and Portuguese languages, of information as to the productions and commerce and as to the customs laws and regulations of their respective countries; such bureau to be maintained in one of the countries for the common benefit and at the common expense, and to furnish all the other countries represented such commercial statistics and other useful information as may be contributed to it by any of the American republics.

That the committee on customs be authorized and instructed to furnish to the conference a plan of organization and a scheme for the practical work of the proposed bureau. (Par. 29, 30.)

18. The acceptance of the foregoing recommendations shall not require any change in the present legislation of the American Republics, in case it should contain more liberal provisions than here proposed, as the purpose of the conference is not only to adopt uniform rules, but to establish more liberal provisions than are now in force.

II.—BUREAU OF INFORMATION.

At the meeting of the conference, held March 23, 1890, the following resolution was adopted:

"That the Governments here represented shall unite for the establishment of an American International Bureau for the collection, tabulation, and publication, in the English, Spanish, and Portuguese languages, of information as to the productions and commerce and as to the customs laws and regulations of their respective countries, such bureau to be maintained in one of the countries for the common benefit and at the common expense, and to furnish to all the other countries such commercial statistics and other useful information as may be contributed to it by any of the American Republics. That the committee on customs regulations be authorized and instructed to furnish to the conference a plan of organization and a scheme for the practical work of the proposed bureau."

In accordance with said resolution the committee submits the following recommendations:

1. There shall be formed by the countries represented in this conference an association under the title of "The International Union of American Republics for the prompt collection and distribution of commercial information."

2. The International Union shall be represented by a bureau to be established in the city of Washington, D. C., under the supervision of the Secretary of State of the United States and to be charged with the care of all transactions and publications and with all correspondence pertaining to the International Union.

3. This bureau shall be called "The Commercial Bureau of the American Republics," and its organ shall be a publication to be entitled "Bulletin of the Commercial Bureau of the American Republics."

4. The bulletin shall be printed in the English, Spanish, and Portuguese languages.

5. The contents of the bulletin shall consist of—

(a) The existing customs tariffs of the several countries belonging to the union and all changes of the same as they occur, with such explanations as may be deemed useful.

(b) All official regulations which affect the entrance and clearance of vessels and the importation and exportation of merchandise in the ports of the represented countries; also all circulars of instruction to customs officials which relate to customs procedure or to the classification of merchandise for duty.

(c) Ample quotations from commercial and parcel-post treaties between any of the American Republics.

(d) Important statistics of external commerce and domestic products and other information of special interest to merchants and shippers of the represented countries.

6. In order to enable the commercial bureau to secure the utmost accuracy in the publication of the bulletin, each country belonging to this union shall send directly to the bureau, without delay, two copies each of all official documents which may pertain to matters having relation to the objects of the union, including customs tariffs, official circulars, international treaties or agreements, local regulations, and, so far as practical, complete statistics regarding commerce and domestic products and resources.

7. This bureau shall at all times be available as a medium of communication and correspondence for persons applying for reasonable information in regard to matters pertaining to the customs tariffs and regulations and to the commerce and navigation of the American Republics.

8. The form and style of the bulletin shall be determined by the commercial bureau and each edition shall consist of at least 1,000 copies. In order that diplomatic representatives, consular agents, boards of trade, and other preferred persons shall be promptly supplied with the bulletin, each member of the union may furnish the bureau with addresses to which copies shall be mailed at its expense.

9. Every country belonging to the International Union shall receive its quota of each issue of the bulletin and the quota of each country shall be in proportion to its population.

Copies of the bulletin may be sold (if there be a surplus) at a price to be fixed by the bureau.

10. While it shall be required that the utmost possible care be taken to insure absolute accuracy in the publications of the bureau, the International Union will assume no pecuniary responsibility on account of errors or inaccuracies which may occur therein. A notice to this effect shall be conspicuously printed upon the first page of every successive issue of the bulletin.

11. The maximum expense to be incurred for establishing the bureau and for its annual maintenance shall be $36,000, and the following is a detailed estimate of its organization, subject to such changes as prove desirable:

One director in charge of bureau, compensation	$5,000
One secretary	3,000
One accountant	2,200
One clerk	1,800
One clerk and type-writer	1,800
One translator (Spanish and English)	2,500
One translator (Spanish and English)	2,000
One translator (Portuguese and English)	2,500
One messenger	800
One porter	600

Office expenses.

Rent of apartments, to contain one room for director, one room for secretary, one room for translators, one room for clerks, etc., and one room for library and archives	$3,000
Lights, heat, cleaning, etc	500
	$3,500

Publication of bulletin.

Printing, paper, and other expenses	$10,000
Postage, express, and miscellaneous expenses	600
	10,500

12. The Government of the United States, through the Secretary of State, to advance to the International Union a fund of $36,000, or so much of that amount as may be required, for the expenses of the commercial bureau during its first year, and a like sum for each subsequent year of the existence of this union.

13. On the 1st day of July of the year 1891 and of each subsequent year during the continuance of this union, the director of the commercial bureau shall transmit to every Government belonging to the union a statement in detail of the expenses incurred for the purposes of the union, not to exceed $36,000, and shall assess upon each of said Governments the same proportion of the total outlay as the populations of the respective countries bear to the total populations of all the countries represented in the union, and all the Governments so assessed shall promptly remit to the Secretary of State of the United States, in coin or its equivalent, the amounts respectively assessed upon them by the director of the bureau. In computing the population of any of the countries of this union, the director of the bureau shall be authorized to use the latest official statistics in his possession, the first assessment to be made according to the following table:

Table of assessments for commercial bureau.

Countries.	Population.	Tax.
Hayti	500,000	$157.50
Nicaragua	200,000	75.00
Peru	2,000,000	975.00
Guatemala	1,400,000	825.00
Uruguay	600,000	225.00
Colombia	2,900,000	1,462.50
Argentina	3,900,000	1,462.50
Costa Rica	200,000	75.00
Paraguay	250,000	93.75
Brazil	1,400,000	5,250.00
Honduras	350,000	131.25
Mexico	10,400,000	3,900.00
Bolivia	1,200,000	450.00
United States	50,150,000	18,806.00
Venezuela	2,200,000	825.00
Chili	2,500,000	937.50
Salvador	650,000	243.75
Ecuador	1,000,000	375.00
Total	96,000,000	36,000.00

14. In order to avoid delay in the establishment of the union herein described, the delegates assembled in this conference will promptly communicate to their respective Governments the plan of organization and of practical work adopted by the conference, and will ask the said Governments to notify the Secretary of State of the United States, through their accredited representatives at this capital or otherwise, of their adhesion or non-adhesion, as the case may be, to the terms proposed.

15. The Secretary of State of the United States is requested to organize and establish the commercial bureau as soon as practicable after a majority of the countries here represented have officially signified their consent to join the International Union.

16. Amendments and modifications of the plans of this union may be made at any time during its continuance by the vote, officially communicated to the Secretary of State of the United States, of a majority of the members of the union.

17. This union shall continue in force during a term of ten years from the date of its organization, and no country becoming a member of the union shall cease to be a member until the end of said period of ten years. Unless twelve months before the expiration of said period a majority of the members of the union shall have given to the Secretary of State of the United States official notice of their wish to terminate the union at the end of its first period, the union shall continue to be maintained for another period of ten years, and thereafter, under the same conditions, for successive periods of ten years each.

III.—NOMENCLATURE.

NOTES.

Resolved, That the proper committee of this conference be requested to examine and report about the convenience and practicability of adopting a common schedule of foreign goods, to be used by the several nations represented in this conference for the purpose of collecting import duties, making invoices, bills of lading, etc., each country having the exclusive right to fix the amount of duties to be levied on each article, but the schedule of the articles to be common to all.

M. ROMERO, Delegate from Mexico.

WASHINGTON, January 2, 1890.

REPORT.

The committee on customs regulations has considered the resolution presented by Mr. Romero, delegate from Mexico, with a view to the adoption by the nations represented at this conference of a common nomenclature which shall designate in equivalent terms, in English, Spanish, and Portuguese, the commodities on which import duties are levied, and also to be used in shipping manifests, consular invoices, entries, clearance petitions, and other customs documents, without restricting thereby the right of each nation to maintain the duties levied at present or to change them in any way which may be most convenient to their respective interests.

The committee favors this resolution in the belief that one of the objects for which this conference has been convened is the assimilation of the customs laws and regulations of the American nations, in order that simplification may facilitate the mercantile operations between them and promote the development of their reciprocal trade. The committee will formulate the nomenclature contemplated in said resolution, if the occupations of the members thereof allow it, if they are able to obtain the necessary data and expert help therefor, and, if unable to do this, will report to the conference the manner in which, in its opinion, this labor can best be performed.

This is not the only subject with which the committee has had to deal. The committee is carefully considering all the other important and complex matters which the conference has intrusted to it, and as soon as its labors are finished it will submit them to the enlightened decision of the conference.

While such results will be presented later, the committee now submits to the conference the following resolution:

Resolved, That the International American Conference recommends to the Governments represented therein the adoption of a common nomenclature which shall designate in alphabetical order, in equivalent terms, in English, Portuguese, and Spanish, the commodities on which import duties are levied, to be used respectively by all the American nations for the purpose of levying customs imposts which are or may hereafter be established, and also to be used in shipping manifests, consular invoices, entries, clearance petitions, and other customs documents, but not to affect in any manner the right of each nation to levy the import duties now in force or which may hereafter be established."

Mr. HALE. Now I ask that we take a vote on these amendments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend, on page 9, line 2, in the amendment of the committee, by inserting, after the word "conference," the words "as stated in his message of June 2, 1890, and so far as he shall deem it expedient, as follows." And then follow the appropriations. I do not wish to commit myself, without having an opportunity to run through all these documents, to a positive implied direction to the President to go forward with every one of these propositions, and I wish to leave it to his expedient discretion as to whether some one or the other of them may not be omitted for the time being or modified in some way, and particularly in regard to the preliminary survey, as it is called, of an intercontinental railway as recommended, although that is not mentioned in the message of the President, so far as I can see, sent to us on the 2d of June, 1890.

Mr. HALE. That is in another document.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not find it in that message of the President nor in the preceding one of the 27th of May, 1890, which earlier one was on the subject of an international bank. Now, if an international bank is one of the things recommended by the international conference, I should think it would require considerable consideration with respect to the establishment of such a bank, if it were wise to establish it at all, and so on.

Mr. HALE. That is not in this appropriation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, it is not in this appropriation, unless it is in the first clause of the appropriation, which is general for employes and stationery, and so forth and so on.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator have the language he proposes to insert read?

Mr. EDMUNDS. After the word "Conference," in line 2, on page 9, in the committee's amendment, I move to insert the words:

As stated in his message of June 2, 1890, and so far as he shall deem it expedient, as follows.

Then follows the appropriation; so that it would read:

To enable the President to complete the work and carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference, as stated in his message of June 2, 1890, and so far as he shall deem it expedient, as follows.

Then comes the appropriation.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, the items in the bill making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service, which are under consideration, bring before the Senate a subject of more general interest to this hemisphere probably than any other that could come before it. The want of a proper understanding between the governments on this hemisphere, the want of proper commercial relations between them, has deprived our country as well other American countries of many of the advantages which they ought to have enjoyed.

The language employed in the paragraphs under consideration seems to be very general in its terms, and it would be desirable to have it, if possible, more specific; but I take it the committee have considered and understand the recommendations which are made in the bill, and I should be disposed to go a great way in accepting their views upon the propriety of the appropriations to be made.

If we can, by carrying out the purposes of this conference, secure a uniform system of customs regulations for the classification and valuation of imported merchandise and a uniform nomenclature for the description of articles of merchandise imported and exported, we shall have done much to benefit the commercial intercourse and to promote the prosperity of the American Governments.

If, by the co-operation of the United States and the other American Governments, we can secure the construction of an international railroad extending from North to South America, and producing more frequent intercommunication between the peoples of these countries, and a better understanding of their mutual wants and necessities, we shall have accomplished another great purpose.

If we can secure a common coin of like value in all these countries, we shall have accomplished another great purpose.

To accomplish these great objects is simply to push forward our country on a grander scale than was done by the unification of the German states. They for a long period of time were embarrassed by commercial regulations in each of the petty communities of that country, absorbing the fruits of their labor and giving rise to questions which caused strife and contention, which were overcome finally by what we denominate the German Zollverein. It would be difficult to estimate in that small country and territory the value to those people of that Zollverein in the simplifying of their relations and reducing of expenses in intercommunication and commercial transactions; and when we come to apply the same principles to the immense countries here, to the whole American hemisphere, like advantages must result to all the countries concerned here.

Perhaps we may never reach the time when we shall have political unity, as they have in Germany now. That may not be desirable, but if we can get commercial unity, if we can get uniform customs regulations and classifications and valuations, and a uniform nomenclature and description of articles of merchandise, and a uniform coin which will circulate at par in all these countries, with free communication between our people, we can hardly estimate the value of this achievement to the American Governments.

The United States, from one cause or another, have failed to secure that control of American commerce to which our position and enterprise and capital and manufactures entitle this country. Here we are, Mr. President, with an amount of capital invested in manufactures and an amount of machinery engaged in the manufactories that could supply two or three countries like our own, but for the want of a market outside of our own country we find that frequently the mills here have to be shut down, the laborers thrown out of employment, the pecuniary interests of the men in the manufacturing companies suffer, and the people who depend upon their labor in carrying on the business of these establishments meet with disaster and suffering; while if we had free commercial intercourse with the countries to the south of us and open markets there our manufacturing establishments could have constant employment, and the labor employed in them need not be interrupted by the closing of the mills. Whatever we can do to get freer commercial intercourse must benefit every possible class of American interests.

I regret, Mr. President, that I did not anticipate that this question would come up, so that I might have looked more carefully into the proceedings of the Pan-American Congress. Other duties prevented me from keeping up with their proceedings as I desired to do, and subsequently to the adjournment of that congress I have not been able to give their proceedings the attention which I desired to give them. But it is hardly necessary that we should follow closely their proceedings to understand the great importance of carrying out the purposes of that conference.

That conference recommend a banking establishment with branches in the various countries for the purpose of accommodating the commercial interests of these different countries. While, as I said at the outset, I am sorry that these provisions are not more specific, particularly the first one, because it seems, especially with reference to other documents, to be too general and too broad, still my anxiety to see the purposes of that conference carried out induces me to accept the recommendations of the committee as to the necessary appropriations for that purpose, and whatever will promote the purposes of that conference shall have my earnest support.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In the amendment of the committee, on page 10, line 6, after the word "for," I move to amend by inserting the words "information in respect of," and after the word "railway," in the same line, I move to strike out the word "as;" so that the paragraph will read:

For payment of the share of the United States of a preliminary survey for information in respect of an intercontinental railway, recommended by the International American Conference, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, in line 6, on page 10, after the word "for," it is proposed to insert the words "information in respect of," and in the same line, after the word "railway," to strike out "as;" so as to make the clause read:

For payment of the share of the United States of a preliminary survey for information in respect of an intercontinental railway, recommended by the International American Conference, $65,000.

Mr. HALE. I do not object to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the same page, in line 8, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "furtherance of said preliminary" and insert "aid of such;" so as to read:

And in aid of such survey the President is authorized to appoint, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, in line 8, on page 10, it is proposed to amend by striking out the words "furtherance of said preliminary" and inserting "aid of such;" so as to read:

And in aid of such survey the President is authorized to appoint, etc.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it proper to state that I have moved those amendments with the view of having this appropriation not to commit the United States to any moral or implied engagement to go on with an intercontinental railway as recommended by this conference, if it was, but only to furnish this money in order that we may get information upon the subject, and my motive was the same in the former amendment which I had the honor to offer and which was agreed to, that all these appropriations, following the first statement and referring to this message of the President, are only tentative, to go on under these recommendations until we get further information about it.

Mr. HALE. I would not so readily have accepted the amendments if I had thought that they interfered with the next stage of this work that has been initiated by this conference. I do not believe that they will so interfere. I do not think that without these amendments the United States would in any way have been committed to the final project, but I do not object to the insertion of the words suggested by the Senator from Vermont, because they are in the line of caution, which is eminently proper.

Nothing will finally be done after this survey has been made until it shall have been fully reported, discussed, debated, amended, and put into such condition that it will be satisfactory and be deemed safe by both Houses of Congress and the President; but we must, if the whole thing does not end now, go on and step from one point to another, and the step we are now taking, guarded as it is, is neither an unsafe nor expensive one, in my judgment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does not imply the taking of any further step.

Mr. HALE. No, it does not imply the taking of any further step.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply desire to say that, for one, I am very anxious to see this railroad built, if it turns out, upon information, that it is a practical enterprise—

Mr. EDMUNDS. And useful.

Mr. CULLOM. And useful to the countries through which it will run.

Mr. VEST. I want to suggest to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who spoke as long as his strength permitted him in this atmosphere, desires to offer some amendments to this portion of the bill, and that he is desirous that the consideration of the matter should go over until to-morrow. It is not possible that we can complete the bill this afternoon, and I make that suggestion to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. REAGAN. Before the Senator from Maine responds to that I wish to call his attention to the paragraph in the latter part of page 10, where the President is empowered to appoint officers of the Army and Navy to aid in this survey "in addition to civil engineers employed by said commission." It is provided that—

Officers so detailed may receive, in addition to their lawful pay and allowances, from the common intercontinental railway fund, such compensation in lieu of expenses as may be allowed them by said commission.

To avoid embarrassment to the commission in determining the amount of allowances, I inquire of the Senator from Maine if it would not be better to say that these allowances shall be limited to the actual expenses, because otherwise the question will arise, and the commission will be involved in the consideration and discussion of the subject, of how much should be allowed these officers for their services.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the officers of the Army and Navy will ever figure much in this matter, because the Senator may have noticed that the committee has confined it very closely:

And the President may, in addition to civil engineers employed by said commission, and at the request of the commission, detail from the Army and Navy of the United States such officers as, in his discretion, may be spared without detriment to the service.

I doubt whether under that it will be deemed advisable or that any of these officers will be called upon. It is only a question whether in the surveys, which will be not only novel, but dangerous, the commission should not have the power to increase the pay as well as pay the expenses of such officers.

I am not very strenuous about it. If the Senator wants to add the words "may be allowed by said commission to cover actual expenses," I shall make no objection.

Mr. REAGAN. Something to that effect would relieve the commission from embarrassment and the pay of the officers would go on and all their expenses would be met, and I suppose that would be sufficient to avoid any embarrassment to the commission.

Mr. HALE. After all I think this language covers it:

And officers so detailed may receive in addition to their lawful pay and allowances, from the common intercontinental railway fund, such compensation in lieu of expenses.

It is to be in lieu of expenses. It is not any additional compensation, but only in lieu of expenses. I think that is all right.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well; that will cover it, I think.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Maine, if there be any doubt about it, will make the language such as to make it an inducement to an officer. The mere question of paying his expenses in a dangerous undertaking, requiring great scientific ability, is, in my judgment, entirely too illiberal.

Mr. HALE. We think the language is good as it is. We framed it very carefully, as the Senator knows.

Mr. GORMAN. I think the language of the amendment is all right. It is but just to those officers if they are so employed; but I object very strongly to the provision beginning on line 15 of page 10:

And the President may, in addition to civil engineers employed by said commission, and at the request of the commission, detail from the Army and Navy of the United States such officers.

I thought in committee, and I think now, that it would be very much better to permit the commission to select any engineers they saw proper, without any reference to army and navy officers. It is a great international question, and it occurred to me that possibly there might be found an objection in the Republics south of us to the employment of our naval and military officers. It might be objected to by their people.

Mr. HALE. If that is so the commission will not call upon them. The Senator will remember that on his suggestion we modified the amendment so that no army or navy officer can be detailed unless the President is requested by the commission to do it. The language is "in addition to civil engineers employed by said commission." That raises and establishes the presumption that they will employ their own engineers, and now, if, in addition, the commission itself should desire that the President should detail one or two or more army or navy engineers to aid, not to control, the work, he may do so. I do not think there ought to be any objection to that.

I would not myself think it would be wise that this should be left to be carried on by army engineers. I doubt whether this kind of work would be such as would be best carried on by them, accomplished men as they are; but if the commission wants, in addition to its own officers, its own civil engineers, one or two army officers detailed by the President, I think it ought to have that right. That is all there is in this.

Mr. GORMAN rose.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am very desirous—I do not want to interfere with the Senator from Maryland—

Mr. GORMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. HALE. I am very desirous of getting this bill through, and would be willing to stay an hour or two hours to finish it and have it out of the way. Other matters are pushing and pressing upon us. I appreciate the appeal that is made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] on account of the condition of health of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that this is the second great appropriation bill we have considered to-day. We have been here since 12 o'clock in the Senate and two or three hours prior to that in committees, and I think if the bill goes over until to-morrow it will not take more than an hour or an hour and a half in the morning to complete it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that, in view of the amendment increasing the salary of the minister to Turkey, in line 7, on page 2, there is also an appropriation still pending, practically providing for two payments. That should be stricken out.

Mr. HALE. The other may be struck out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 18, on page 2, it is proposed to strike out the word "Turkey."

Mr. HALE. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, there is only one thing. Let us finish up the whole bill, excepting these amendments. Let the amendment on page 8, line 23, be adopted, and have inserted in the RECORD the communication from the Secretary of State called for by the Senator from Alabama.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 23, it is proposed to strike out "four" and insert "six," as so to read:

For salary and expenses of a commercial agent at Boma, in the Lower Congo Basin, with authority to visit and report upon the commercial resources of the Upper and Lower Congo Basin, their products, their minerals, their vegetable wealth, the openings for American trade, and to collect such information on the subject of that country as shall be thought of interest to the United States, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The letter from the Secretary of State is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 27, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your special attention to that clause of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill which, as it now stands, provides $4,000 for "salary and expenses of a commercial agent at Boma, in the Lower Congo Basin, with authority to visit and report upon the commercial resources of the Upper and Lower Congo Basin, their products, their minerals, the vegetable wealth, the openings for American trade, and to collect such information on the subject of that country as shall be thought of interest to the United States," and in connection therewith to state that, from the information in the possession of the Department, it is clearly apparent that the sum named is inadequate to the requirements of the case.

I therefore most earnestly recommend that your committee will be pleased to increase the appropriation to at least $6,000, believing that the money so appropriated and expended for the purpose indicated in the law above quoted will result in very material advantage to the country.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

HOB. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,

Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the amendment recommended by the committee on page 7, which I presume has been adopted, and I call my friend's attention to it, which provides for enabling the President "to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the diplomatic service," and so on, "to be expended pursuant to the requirements of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, §80,000," which is, I believe, what is called the "secret-service fund." A certificate of the President is a sufficient voucher. The committee have added "of which the sum of $3,500 may be expended on the certificate of the Secretary of State."

I think that is an entirely new and unusual provision that has never been suggested before in respect of the expenditure of confidential moneys. It appears to me that the President of the United States ought to be in charge of the whole of that fund; and, therefore, when the proper time comes, if my friend will not permit it now—

Mr. HALE. If the Senator moves to strike that out, I shall not resist it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose it has been adopted in committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to reconsider the vote by which that was adopted. It is wrong in principle. I have no ground to complain of the practical propriety of it, whatever it may be, but in point of principle it is wrong.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HALE. Now let the bill be reported to the Senate with permission to the clerks to correct the footings.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to offer an amendment. I thought this bill would go over until to-morrow probably.

Mr. GORMAN. I understood the Senator from Maine to consent that it should go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. I have conferred with the Senator from Alabama since then.

Mr. MORGAN. I move an amendment, on page 9, line 2, after the word "conference," to insert:

When the same are agreed to by the governments represented in such conference or a majority of them;

So as to read:

To enable the President to complete the work and carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference, when the same are agreed to by the Governments represented in such conference, or a majority of them, etc.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would properly come in after the amendment already agreed to on my motion.

Mr. MORGAN. I was not in the Chamber when the amendment of the Senator from Vermont was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That clause now reads:

To enable the President to complete the work and carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference as stated in his message of June 2, 1890, and so far as he shall deem it expedient, as follows.

Then follows this appropriating clause; so that, if the Senator wishes to add anything, I suggest that it would more properly come in after the amendment already agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I know of no difficulty about where it will come in. I merely want to get that point in the enactment.

Mr. HALE. Let us have it read and see if there is any objection to it.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the amendment already agreed to in line 2, on page 9, following the word "conference," it is proposed to insert:

When the same are agreed to by the governments represented in such conference, or a majority of them;

So as to read:

To enable the President to complete the work and carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference as stated in his message of June 2, 1890, and so far as he shall deem it expedient, when the same are agreed to by the governments represented in such conference, or a majority of them, as follows, including the compensation of translators, etc.

Mr. HALE. I do not know that that would in any way impede the work. These governments, through their representatives here, have agreed to it, and I should not want to agree to anything, neither would the Senator want to put in anything, that would obstruct the continuance of this work and prevent anything more from being done for the next year to come.

Mr. MORGAN. What I mean by "an agreement," of course, is an agreement notified to the Government of the United States through its diplomatic channels, which is submitted to the Senate for its ratification; because, after all, this is in the nature of a convention. It is a convention. I do not know that it can be anything else. It is not mere parallel legislation, and it would not be obligatory until we had agreed to it all around. So I think there ought to be an agreement between these Governments before we commence to appropriate money. We have got one end of the subject in the air if we do. I suggest to the Senator that it will take but a very few moments in the morning to close this. There will be probably no debate about it then, but I should like to look over the text, and particularly the allocation of the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, to see where my view ought to come, in what language.

Mr. HALE. I am very desirous of finishing the bill to-night, and I would rather accept the amendment. I do not think it will do any harm.

Mr. MORGAN. I am a little afraid to undertake to amend the bill myself, unless I know exactly the bearing of the whole of it, because I want to promote this and I am a friend of the proposition.

Mr. HALE. I will accept the amendment. The whole thing is left in the discretion of the President by the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, and so I do not feel that there is any risk or danger either the one way or the other.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not understand that the matter of applying this money to one of these routes agreed upon between the members of the Pan-American Congress is obligatory. I do not understand that the President can act upon that until he is notified in the proper way that these Governments have agreed to it.

Mr. HALE. He will not act, of course, until he believes the Governments will agree to it. I have no fear of his doing that. I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont will cover it.

Mr. MORGAN. I understood the Senator from Maine to imply that we were empowering him to act notwithstanding we had not agreed to it.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that from the reading of the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama, if it is adopted, it would prevent the Secretary of State or the President from the employment of these clerks in distributing the reports of the American conference, and everything else connected with it, until a majority of the Governments adopt it.

Mr. REAGAN. I think it would be better to leave the question open until to-morrow morning.

Mr. HALE. I want to finish the bill to-night.
